Some of the gentlemen upon the Republican side have taken the position that the tariff upon farm products helps the farmer. Gentlemen, my word for it—and I can sustain this by the record—there can be no price for the American farmer for his home product better than that which he gets for the surplus in the foreign markets. When the American farmer is forced to send abroad 100,000,000 bushels of wheat or corn he does it because he can not sell it here, and he can not sell it here because our people can not consume it. Then the price of the surplus product is fixed in the foreign market, and no man will send a bushel of wheat or a bushel of corn or a single ounce of produce from this country and sell it to the foreigner for less than he can sell it for to the American consumer. Why does he ship it abroad? Because of the fact that he gets a better price for it abroad, or because he gets as good a price for it abroad after deducting the freight from the shipment? Let us see if that statement can be sustained. The price of wheat in England every year absolutely squares with the price of wheat in this country when you deduct from the English price the cost of shipment. The very fact that we ship more than 100,000,000 bushels of wheat to England every year is conclusive proof of the fact that it brings a better price there or it would not be shipped. What farmer would ship hogs to the city market when he could sell them upon his own farm at a better price? What farmer would ship his wheat to the city market if he could sell it in his home county for a better price? I know the Republican Party has tried to fool the farmer for years upon this question of a protective tariff upon his wheat and corn. The record shows completely that that is a fraud and a delusion upon the American farmer. Under this system of deception you have undertaken to keep the American farmer quiet while his pockets were picked by the manufacturers, to whom you guarantee a profit. You have kept this fraudulent policy up for the benefit of those giant monopolies that have grown so great they send their products into the foreign markets of the world and sell in competition with all the world there, and then organize trusts and monopolies and annihilate absolutely every semblance of competition here. As a further proof of the fact that the farmer receives no benefit from a protective tariff upon his grain and other products, I give here the domestic and foreign prices of wheat, oats, cattle, and horses for the years 1905 to 1909, inclusive.

Domestic and foreign prices.

[Foreign prices are taken from Report of Agriculture and Fisheries, London. Vol. XLIV, Pt. III, 1909. Domestic prices from Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., 1909.]

WHEAT.

[Per bushel.]

	Average price in London.	Average farm price in the United States.
		Cents.
1905	$0.92	74.8
1906	.87	66.7
1907	.94	87.4
1908	1.00	92.8
1909	1.14	99.0

Domestic and foreign prices—Continued.

OATS.

[Per bushel.]

	Average price in London.	Average farm price in the United States.
	Cents.	Cents.
1905	54	34.3
1906	57	29.1
1907	59	44.3
1908	55	47.2
1909	57	40.5

FAT CATTLE (WHOLESALE).

[Per pound.]

	London.	Chicago.
	Cents.	Cents.
1905	7¾	5½–7
1906	7¾	5½–7
1907	8	5½–7½
1908	8	5½–8½
1909	8½	5¾–10½

HORSES.

[Per head.]

	London.	New York.	Farm value.
1905	$129	$91	$87
1906	150	108	98
1907	135	131	112
1908	166	138	107
1909	173	156	107

I desire to call a witness out of President Taft's Cabinet, Secretary Wilson himself, who, in a letter to the National Grange of February 9, 1911, relative to the prices the farmer receives, uses this language:

The United States produces surplus wheat above domestic requirements. This surplus production is sold in foreign countries. The price of our exported surplus is governed by the world's requirements, being regulated by the law of supply and demand, and the price of wheat in the United States, while we are exporting, is governed by the price at which the surplus is sold, as a general proposition. Occasionally wheat corners may interfere with the law of supply and demand and temporarily affect the price.

Wheat is never cornered until it is out of the farmer's hands and in the hands of some Chicago trust king. The price he forces up on wheat does not aid the farmer—his wheat is all sold—but the effect is that the laborer who buys his bread is held up and robbed by the millionaire who corners wheat. So this tariff on wheat of 25 cents per bushel never benefits any one except the grain gambler, who with his corner upon wheat drives up the price of the poor man's bread.

But it is unnecessary to pursue this question as to whether a protective tariff benefits the farmer.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has been a great advocate of free lumber. This bill does give us free lumber, and I will tell you why I am for free lumber, notwithstanding our friends on that side have told us so often of the glory of Republican prosperity. I am not of that class of Americans that would seek to dispute the prosperity of my people if I could do otherwise. I am only too glad when our people prosper and to cheer them on in their prosperity. But when you tell me the people of this country are prospering under Republican control I want to call your attention to the fact that, according to the census of 1900, the total dwellings in this country were 14,474,771. The total number of tenants, those who had to rent their homes, were 8,246,747. That shows that practically 42,000,000 American people occupy this very day and will sleep this very night in homes they can not call their own, in homes upon which they have to pay a rent.

I want to make men patriotic, and I want to give to the laboring man an opportunity to build his home. Whenever you give an opportunity to 42,000,000 Americans who do not own their homes—notwithstanding your boasted Republican prosperity—whenever you give them a chance to build their home, which we are offering them by giving them free lumber, you make a patriot out of each one and give to each man a home, and then he has got something he can call his own and something he is willing to defend. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Free lumber! I would call attention of the Republican side to the fact that free lumber is a Democratic doctrine. Free lumber was placed in the Democratic platform of 1908, and it is there to-day, and the Republican side is again following the teaching of the forerunning footsteps of aggressive Democracy demanding for the people of this country free lumber out of which they can build their homes. [Applause.]

How the Republican side can fail to advocate free lumber is a mystery to me. James G. Blaine said that he was a friend of free lumber. He said that the hand of taxation should never rest on that article out of which people build the homes in which they live, out of which they build the churches in which they worship, out of which they make the cradles in which they rock their first born, and out of which they make the coffins in which they bury their dead.

But Blaine is gone, and Republicanism for which he stood has decayed, and the party now is clothing themselves in his habiliments and going forth with his distinguished name and claiming that they represent the Republicanism of Blaine when they advocate the levy of a tax on all of the people for the benefit of the Lumber Trust. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And why is it that our Republican friends will not give our old friends, the farmers, the benefit of these articles upon the free list? The farmer has borne your burden for a long time; he has paid the tariff tax a long time, and he has heard the arguments you have made; and as you argued that the tariff on wheat raised the price of wheat the good old Republican farmer applauded; as you argued that the tariff on flour lessened the price of flour he applauded. And so now he only comes and asks for these things with which he works to be untaxed. Of course the gentleman from Illinois, from the great city of Chicago, which has no waving fields of wheat or corn, which has no products of the farm, can well ask, "What are farming implements?" But you gentlemen on the other side who climb over the fence and go into the furrow with the good old farmer and beg him for his vote as you follow along behind him in the furrow, he may turn long enough to ask you why you did not take off the tariff on this plow that he was using, off of the harrow and his farming machinery. What will your answer be? That is likely to cause you a heap of trouble. I like my friends on the Republican side, and I would rather see them back here than any other Republicans I know, but the only chance you have of coming back is to vote for this free-list bill that we have written and propose here for the benefit of the American farmer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins; farm wagons and farm carts.

All in our free-list bill.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks what is a farm wagon. Why, of course I did not expect him to know what a farm wagon was. My friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], delightful as he always is in debate, suggested that maybe it included automobiles. That is just in keeping with the Republican construction. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I have no doubt that if this passes and a trust Republican comes to construe it, of course it is a farm wagon for the benefit of the old farmer, but that some shrewd Republican, who has been growing fat on the profits that your platform "guaranteed them," will point out with the adroitness of my friend LONGWORTH that it means automobiles. [Laughter and applause.] I have no doubt of that, but no one on our side is now riding in automobiles. CHAMP CLARK even does not ride in an automobile. [Laughter and applause.] He has refused to take advantage of Uncle Joe's machine, because that thing operated so swiftly and so recklessly that even a man of CHAMP CLARK's daring was afraid to take the automobile that had been used by Uncle JOE CANNON. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Could my friend tell us what has become of those mules that we heard so much about last winter? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. JAMES. Oh, the mule is always a friend of the Democratic Party and the people. The mule is never like the emblem that belongs to your party, the elephant, which is always on dress parade. The mule is always plowing and doing work, trying to feed somebody, aiding some one. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The elephant that speaks for your party is like your party, always parading and never doing anything, always claiming and never performing. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I was amused at one of the most distinguished Republicans in the House, and I believe he knows as much about the tariff as anybody else, but his mind has been in a groove along a certain channel of taxing somebody else and getting profits for somebody else, always for his own folks, of course—I was amused at his saying that this bill in using the words—

And all other agricultural implements of any kind and description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts—would be so construed that the monopolies would mold iron ore and pig iron into parts like repair parts for plows and machines and bring them in here free of duty. Mr. Chairman, that is another strained construction of our Republican friends. Why do you not meet this bill on its merits? Why try to pick flaws in it? It is because you can not attack it on its merits that you are drifting to that argument.

Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, punched or not punched, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity; and wire for baling hay, straw, and other agricultural products.

I do not see anything sectional about that. The farmer of the North grows hay. He grows other agricultural products. Mr. Chairman, these articles on which wire is used in baling can be produced in the North as well as in the South.

When it comes to the question of leather some one told me—I did not have the pleasure of hearing all of the speech—that our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] argued that this did not let in all sorts of shoes. Well, that is true, I expect. The finer class of shoes and that character of shoe that the farmer's family never see and are not able to buy. I do not suppose this bill does include them. This is a farmer's free-list bill. We are going to get to these other schedules as we go along. You gentleman will have enough of free-list articles, and they will all be those articles that are needed by the families of the United States. This is the character of articles that we are going to put on the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We are not going to put on the free list your dried blood and your leeches and junk. We are going to put on something that a man can use and that a family can use. That is the Democratic policy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask, for information, whether the Democratic Party proposes to do all this revising this summer?

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can possess his soul in patience. We will do it in our own time and in our own way if it takes all summer. We are not afraid of the heat, because the people have been suffering long under the burdens that your party has placed upon them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I want to appeal to the Republican side and ask them to aid us to pass this bill. I heard a peculiar argument made here the other day by one class of Republicans. I regret to see you divided into warring sides. It makes my heart bleed [laughter] to see a once militant Republican Party, so aggressive, so united, always the party of constructive legislation, always the bearer of prosperity, now divided and at each other's throats, taking separate roads and announcing differing doctrines.

I tell you it makes me grieve overmuch. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I want to say to the gentlemen upon the other side who argued, when the reciprocity bill was under consideration, and said, "Oh, we must attach this free-list schedule to the reciprocity bill," my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the second in command of the insurgent forces, because I believe the first in command is in another body, introduced here the free-list schedule to go on the reciprocity bill. And what was their argument? My friend NORRIS indulged in that argument, too. They argued that if we put both of these bills together, the reciprocity bill being a bad bill and the free-list bill being a good bill, that the Senate would pass both of them together, which the Senate would refuse to pass separately, and they maintained the man you elected would, if we passed them separately, veto the good bill and sign the bad one; but if we passed them both together he would affix his signature to both, the good and the bad. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am unwilling to indulge in that argument against even a Republican President. I fought him in many of the States of this Union; I did not believe he ought to have been elected; but I am not willing to stand upon the floor of this House and say that our President—for he is our President now—if we passed these two measures separately, would sign the bad one and veto the good one. Aye, as strong a Democrat as I am, I am willing to concede to a Republican President too much patriotism to sign one bill because it is bad and veto another one because it is good. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And if your President has an opportunity at this free-list schedule, as I believe he will have, because in another end of this Capitol your party has but 9 majority, if you count both contending factions in it, and I believe enough on your side will come to us to pass this bill, never on earth will enough courage be mustered in the big frame of your big President to veto this bill which takes the hand of taxation off the implements with which the American farmer tills the American soil. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to appeal to my Republican friends upon that side of the House to help.

I believe that Thomas Jefferson uttered the truth when he spoke of the farmer better than anyone ever has, or, perhaps, than anyone ever will, when he said of these millions of American farmers:

The cultivators of the earth are the most valuable citizens; they are the most vigorous, the most independent, the most virtuous; they are tied to their country and wedded to its liberty and interests by the most lasting bonds.

I want to appeal to both sides of this House for the passage of this bill. I appeal irrespective of politics in behalf of the American farmer, and I beg this House to pass this bill giving to the farmers of our Republic free farming implements—tools of trade, implements to till the earth free from any tariff taxation. In the name of millions of honest hearts which beat in the bosoms of these Americans behind the plow, upon the harrow, at the drill, those who make the harvesters sing in fields of golden grain, I beg you in their name to take the heavy hand of taxation off of the tools with which they woo from the earth the food which feeds the millions of this world. The farmer asks no guaranty of a reasonable profit which the Republican Party gives the manufacturer from the pockets of the farmers themselves. The farmer only asks that you let him have untaxed by tariffs and unmonopolized by trusts the tools of his trade. Give the farmers this relief. They are the future hope of this Republic, as they have been its past reliance. For these men I appeal for the passage of this bill. The farmer stands under your Republican policies bowed by the weight of your oppressive tariff, even upon the implements with which he farms.

He leans upon his hoe and gazes upon the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face and on his back the burden of the world.

Can you, will you, deny him this relief? God grant that you will pass this bill. [Loud and continued applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he desires to yield now?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, for several years there has been a tendency in the business world toward combination. There is no doubt but what economy in production and manufacture can be brought about by the combining of energy and of capital. But history has shown that men do not go into these combinations from any ideas of philanthropy, and that when any combination has succeeded in monopolizing and controlling the production or distribution of any given article the price to the ultimate consumer is increased and the unfair and unreasonable profits are pocketed by the men or corporations in control.

When competition has been throttled monopoly has taken possession, and if unrestrained and uncontrolled the result has always been an unfair and an unequal distribution of the products of labor and of wealth. The favored few have unduly profited at the expense of the unorganized thousands. From the dawn of history there have been laws against monopoly and unreasonable restraint of trade, but great combinations, on account of their wealth and influence, have been able to employ the brightest and keenest minds of the age to invent and put into operation plans and methods whereby these laws can be circumvented and avoided and the combination allowed to continue to levy their unholy and unrighteous tribute.

The combinations that have attracted the most attention and have first drawn the fire of the courts have usually been those which have affected a comparatively few people, but in such a large degree as to make it an object for every individual affected to go into court for redress. But I shall speak of a combination that levies its tribute in pennies, but counts its contributors by the million. Other monopolies levy their tribute but once, but this monster is a daily uninvited guest at every breakfast table in the land. Other combinations confine their energies to the country of their origin, but this one makes its daily visits to every humble home in the civilized world. Most of the trusts and combinations to which our attention has been attracted in the past have been composed of men and subsidiary corporations, but this gigantic institution numbers among its stockholders a sovereign State and one of the independent nations of the world.

In 1906 Sao Paulo, one of the States of the Brazilian Government, undertook to control the world's supply of coffee. About 85 per cent of the world's supply of coffee is raised in Brazil, and of the Brazilian coffee a very large proportion of it is raised in the State of Sao Paulo. The method employed for the purpose of cornering the world's supply of coffee was for this State to buy all the coffee produced within its borders and to issue bonds thereon and hold the coffee until the price went up and then sell at the advanced figure. It was supposed that the proportion of the world's supply of coffee raised in this State would be sufficient, if held out of the market, to control the price all over the civilized world.

The undertaking, however, was too great for the State of Sao Paulo to successfully control the situation, and after two years of trial had shown that the plan would in the end fail, a new and more gigantic scheme was devised. In 1908 this new plan was consummated and put into active operation. The history of the civilized world will not show another as gigantic an undertaking as was this. In order to carry out its purpose, the assistance of the Brazilian Government was procured and some of the largest financial concerns in the civilized world became interested partners in the colossal scheme. This plan to corner the coffee of the world provided that bonds to the amount of $75,000,000 should be issued by the State of Sao Paulo and that the payment of both principal and interest of these bonds should be guaranteed by the Brazilian Government. Out of the proceeds of the sale of these bonds it was agreed that the coffee produced in the State of Sao Paulo and all of the adjoining States should be purchased and held out of the market until the price could be artificially controlled. These bonds were handled by English, German, French, Dutch, and American bankers. Rothschild & Sons and J. Henry Schroder & Co., of London, took $25,000,000 of them. The Societe General and the Banque de Paris, of France, took $25,000,000. S. Bleichschroder, of Berlin, took $10,000,000 of the bonds. The National Bank of Belgium took $5,000,000. The other $10,000,000 were taken by J. P. Morgan & Co., the National City Bank, and the First National Bank, all of New York City.

It was also agreed that a committee of seven men should be selected to supervise and control the sale of the coffee purchased with the proceeds of these bonds. Six members of this committee were to be selected by these financial firms whose names I have given, who furnished the money to finance the scheme, and the other member of the committee was to be selected by the Government of Brazil. The coffee purchased was to be shipped to representatives of these financial concerns and the possession thereof held as a further security for the bonds. Such coffee was to be stored in warehouses in America, England, Germany, Holland, and France and sold in such quantities and at such prices as should be agreed upon by this committee of supervision. As a further guaranty for the payment of the bonds and interest, the Brazilian Government agreed to levy an export or surtax on coffee shipped out of that country and to remit the proceeds of this tax weekly to these financial backers, the same to be applied in payment of the necessary expenses in looking after the details of the agreement and in the interest on the bonds as it should mature. It was likewise agreed that the Brazilian Government should enact a law that would prohibit the planting of any additional coffee trees and to prevent as far as possible an increase in the supply. This agreement has been in successful operation since the latter part of the year 1908. In accordance with its terms, the Brazilian Government enacted a law preventing the planting of additional coffee trees and provided for severe penalties for any offense against this provision of the statute. Inspectors were appointed who went through the country and destroyed any new trees that had been planted and administered severe punishment against those who were guilty of an infraction of the law.

The bonds were duly issued and, in accordance with the provisions of the agreement, Brazilian coffee was purchased and shipped to different parts of the world, where it was held in storage until the price advanced sufficiently to make the scheme profitable, when it was sold, but in such quantities as would not break down this artificial market.

It takes three or four years after a coffee tree is planted before it comes in bearing, and the tree does not reach its full bearing capacity for six or seven years, but after the tree has once reached maturity it does not lose its vitality or decline in its productivity until it is 40 or 50 years old. At the time of this agreement, in 1908, there were a great many thousands of coffee trees planted in Brazil that had not reached the bearing stage, so that it was quite evident to the promoters of this plan that, even though no additional trees be planted, there would be quite a large increase in the production of coffee as fast as the trees then planted should reach the stage of production. The bonds were not to mature until 1919, and ample provision was made for the control of the coffee market up to that time, even though the production should for several years increase beyond consumption. It was no doubt understood by these promoters that their scheme of valorization would have a tendency to increase the planting of coffee trees by other coffee-producing countries of the world, but they knew that by the practical ownership and control of from 80 to 85 per cent of the coffee of the world, even though other coffee-producing countries would increase their supply, they would be able to control the coffee market.

On account of the new trees that came into bearing after the agreement was made, and which trees had been planted prior to the making of the agreement, the production of coffee in Brazil increased for several years at a greater rate than the consumption of coffee, but so firm was the hold of this gigantic combination upon the coffee markets of the world that they have been able to absolutely control the supply and the sale of coffee throughout the civilized world. The coffee as it was purchased was sent to the different ports of Europe and America, where it was held until the price of coffee went up, and was then sold only in such quantities as would not break the market. The price of coffee has steadily advanced from month to month since the time this agreement went into effect, until on the 1st day of January of this year it had more than doubled in price. The wholesale price of No. 7 Rio coffee in New York in December, 1908, was 6½ cents a pound. From that time on the price, with practically no variation whatever, slowly but steadily advanced from month to month, and on the 1st day of January, 1911, the same coffee in the same market was selling at 13¼ cents a pound.

The Government of Brazil did everything in its power to carry out its portion of the agreement. It sometimes increased the export tax, which had a twofold effect—it had a tendency to decrease the exportation of coffee from Brazil, and thus decrease the world's supply, and it increased the money received as an export tax to be applied upon the expenses of the scheme and the payment of interest on the bonds.

In order that there might be no doubt as to the ability of this combination to hold up the price of coffee, it was at one time seriously proposed that the law providing for a surtax on coffee exported from Brazil should be changed, and instead of taking a tax payable in money the Government should take one-tenth of the coffee exported, and that this coffee so taken in tithe should be loaded into barges, carried out into the ocean, and sunk in the sea.

At another time the proposition was seriously considered of taking one-tenth of the coffee produced in Brazil and burning it. This proposition was at one time approved by this committee of seven, who, as I have said, had charge of the disposition of the valorized coffee, and had it not been for a fear that this wanton destruction of coffee would arouse a sentiment of criticism throughout the world and call particular attention to the methods that were being devised to control the market price of coffee there is no doubt but what this particular plan would have been executed.

Of this committee of seven, Baron Schroder, of London, is the chairman and Herman Sielcken, of New York City, is the American member.

On the 27th day of April, 1909, there was a meeting of this committee in London. They had under consideration, among other things, this particular method of curtailing the supply of coffee, and at that time they issued a circular letter to the coffee trade, from which I copy the following:

A meeting of the committee charged with the management of the State of Sao Paulo government coffee was held to-day under the chairmanship of Baron Bruno Schroder, and the following members were present:

1. Dr. Francisco Ferreira Ramos.
2. M. le Vicomte des Touches.
3. The Societe Generale.
4. Mr. Herman Sielcken.
5. The firm of Theodor Wille.
6. Mr. Edouard Bunge.
7. The firm of J. Henry Schroder & Co.

The following statement was approved:

1. With reference to clause 2 of the circular dated 5th January, 1909, the committee states that no sales of coffee have been made, that the contemplated sale of 500,000 bags will not be undertaken until the trade is ready to pay the price stipulated therein, or its equivalent in any of the markets, and that in no case shall the sales during the current year exceed 500,000 bags.

2. The Government has lately had under its consideration the advisability of replacing the existing law limiting the export of coffee by a new law creating an extra duty of 10 per cent on all exports of coffee, payable in kind, such coffee to be destroyed under the control of the committee. This law would, in the opinion of the Government, bring about the same result as the existing law, but in a more satisfactory manner. The change would appear to the Government to be most desirable, as it would obviate the rush to market the crop, which would undoubtedly take place under the existing law; the planter would thereby be given time to properly prepare his coffee; the exports would then, as in former years, be spread over the whole 12 months, and the quality of the coffee exported would be improved by the destruction of the lowest grades. Such alteration of the law would also be desirable in the interests of the coffee trade, of labor, and of the railway and shipping companies, and would at the same time assure the stability of the exchange.

The Government has now approached the committee officially on the subject, having set forth its reasons, as above, for desiring an alteration of the law, and the committee, after careful consideration of all interests, is of opinion that the proposed change of the law is desirable and will consider the feasibility of such an alteration.

The Federal Government of Brazil is ready to sanction the proposed change in the law.

It might be well to note, in passing, that these bonds were taken by the financiers, whose names I have given, at 85 cents on the dollar. They drew 6 per cent interest, a higher rate than the bonds of any nation on the face of the earth.

In order that Members may get a definite idea as to the steady advance in the price of coffee that has taken place since the beginning of this valorization plan, and in order that all may see how steadily the market has advanced and how complete the control thereof has been on the part of this combination, I will incorporate in the RECORD a table showing the wholesale weekly price at New York of Rio Standard No. 7 coffee from December 5, 1908, to the 7th day of January, 1911.

1908.	Cents.
Dec. 5	6¼
Dec. 12	6¼
Dec. 19	6¼
Dec. 26	6¼
1909.
Jan. 2	6⅜
Jan. 9	6⅜
Jan. 16	7
Jan. 23	7⅛
Jan. 30	7⅛
Feb. 6	7⅛
Feb. 13	7⅛
Feb. 20	8
Feb. 27	8
Mar. 6	8⅛
Mar. 13	8
Mar. 20	8⅛
Mar. 27	8⅛
Apr. 3	8⅜
Apr. 10	8⅛
Apr. 17	8⅛
Apr. 24	8¼
May 1	8¼
May 8	8¼
May 15	8⅛
May 22	7⅜
May 29	7⅜
June 5	7⅜
June 12	7⅜
June 19	7⅜
June 26	7⅜
July 3	7⅜
July 10	7⅜
July 17	7⅜
July 24	7⅛
July 31	7⅜
Aug. 7	7¼
Aug. 14	7¼
Aug. 21	7¼
Aug. 28	7¼
Sept. 4	7¼
Sept. 11	7¼
Sept. 18	7¼
Sept. 25	7
Oct. 2	7¼
Oct. 9	7¼
Oct. 16	8
Oct. 23	8
Oct. 30	8
Nov. 6	8⅛
Nov. 13	8⅜
Nov. 20	8¼
Nov. 27	8⅜
Dec. 4	8⅜
Dec. 11	8⅜
Dec. 18	8⅜
Dec. 24	8⅜

1910.	Cents.
Jan. 1	8⅜
Jan. 8	8⅜
Jan. 15	8⅜
Jan. 22	8⅜
Jan. 29	8⅜
Feb. 5	8⅜
Feb. 12	8⅜
Feb. 19	8⅜
Feb. 26	8⅜
Mar. 5	8⅜
Mar. 12	8⅜
Mar. 19	8⅜
Mar. 26	8⅜
Apr. 2	8⅜
Apr. 9	8⅛
Apr. 16	8⅛
Apr. 23	8⅜
Apr. 30	8⅜
May 7	8⅛
May 14	8⅛
May 21	8⅛
May 28	8
June 4	8⅛
June 11	8⅛
June 18	8⅛
June 25	8⅛
July 2	8⅜
July 9	8⅜
July 16	8⅜
July 23	8⅛
July 30	8⅜
Aug. 6	8⅜
Aug. 13	8⅝
Aug. 20	9⅛
Aug. 27	9⅞
Sept. 3	10⅛
Sept. 10	10⅛
Sept. 17	10⅛
Sept. 24	10⅜
Oct. 1	11
Oct. 5	10⅞
Oct. 8	11
Oct. 15	10⅞
Oct. 22	10⅛
Oct. 29	10⅜
Nov. 5	10⅞
Nov. 12	11⅛
Nov. 19	12⅜
Nov. 26	13
Dec. 3	13¼
Dec. 10	13¼
Dec. 17	13⅜
Dec. 24, no quotation; Christmas eve.
Dec. 31	13½
1911.
Jan. 7	13½

These prices are the closing wholesale prices on every Saturday from December 5, 1908, to January 7, 1911.

Mr. Chairman, right here I desire to incorporate in my remarks not only this table but several others, and I would ask permission at this time to incorporate such tables as I have without taking up the time to read them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to incorporate the tables referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORRIS. It must be remembered that the attempt to control the coffee market of the world really began in 1906, although, as I have explained, the first two years of the valorization scheme, the combination did not include all of the American and European financiers I have mentioned and did not have behind it all of the stringent laws in its behalf afterwards passed by the Brazilian Government. The price of coffee at the beginning of the valorization plan in 1906 was considerably lower than at the date of the beginning of the table which I have inserted.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield.

Mr. SHARP. I desire to ask the gentleman in regard to the statements he is to incorporate in the RECORD. May I ask if you have also the prices obtained for coffee in England as well as in the United States during the period mentioned?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have not.

Mr. SHARP. I ask that question because while we were discussing the Payne-Aldrich bill I remember very well Mr. PAYNE arose in his seat and, in answer to a question that was asked him, tried to explain why coffee sold in this country for nearly four times the price at which it was imported, and he frankly stated that the Committee on Ways and Means had been bothered by that fact and they then could not account for it.

I spent some little time in investigating the subject, and I found that at that time, although the same price was paid by the importers in Great Britain for the coffee of similar brands and qualities, yet it sold universally over there for about 60 per cent of the price at which it sold in the United States; and the same was true of tea.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that I will take up that question a little further on. It is probably explained in the fact that the different States in Brazil, as I shall explain in detail, have spent a great deal of money and a great deal of effort in trying to increase the use of coffee in Great Britain. I will take it up later, and if I do not cover the point the gentleman wants, if he will ask me then, and I have the information, I will be glad to give it to him.

There is no doubt but what this attempt I have been speaking about would have failed had it not been for the combination entered into in 1908 by the Brazilian Government and the financiers of Europe and America. That the increase in the price of coffee during the period of this valorization was not due to natural causes, but was purely artificial, is easily demonstrated.

Mr. COOPER. I hope the gentleman will permit one question right there.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman refers to a table which shows the increase in price. Will he state approximately the increase?

Mr. NORRIS. The price doubled from 1908 to the 1st of January of this year.

Mr. COOPER. One hundred per cent in three years?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; a little more than doubled up to the 1st of January.

Mr. CANNON. That is, the coffee as it is imported?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir. That is, the wholesale price at New York City. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, it would not be difficult to demonstrate that this wonderful increase in the price did not come about naturally.

The world's consumption of coffee has averaged for the last four years about 17,900,000 bags. The world's production of coffee for the same period has averaged over 18,600,000 bags. So, in the face of a continual and yearly overproduction of coffee, the price has steadily and regularly advanced. During this time the annual production of coffee by Brazil has exceeded 14,000,000 bags.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. How much in a bag?

Mr. NORRIS. A bag is 133 pounds. During this same period of four years there was imported from Brazil into the United States about 23,000,000 bags of coffee; and from all other countries there were imported into the United States during the same period a little over 5,000,000 bags of coffee. This shows how easy it is to control the market price of coffee if the combination is able to control absolutely the output of Brazil.

As bearing upon this question of the control of price regardless of natural conditions, it is interesting to note a recent report that was made by Dr. Olavo Egeidio, secretary of finance of Sao Paulo, to the president of that State. At the beginning of the present year Dr. Egeidio made a full report of the transactions connected with the valorization of coffee. I quote from this report:

> There is no foundation whatsoever to the suggestion which has sometimes been made that the benefits which followed the Government's action were due simply to natural causes and were not in any way influenced by such action. What happened was just the contrary, and it may be easily verified by examining the figures for the crops of four years preceding and four years succeeding the intervention.

Dr. Egeidio then proceeds to show from statistics that the world's production of coffee for the four years in which the market price has been under control has exceeded by a large amount the world's production of coffee for the four years preceding such intervention. He shows that for the four years preceding the so-called valorization the average yearly production of the world's coffee was 15,574,000 bags, and that for the four years following the commencement of the valorization scheme the average world's production of coffee was 18,418,000 bags. In addition to this, it appears that for one of the years since the valorization plan has been in force the world's production of coffee reached the stupendous amount of over 23,000,000 bags; and yet, notwithstanding this enormous overproduction of coffee, the price steadily advanced. He shows that during all this time there has been an overproduction of coffee and that the combination has had such complete control as to continually increase the price. He concludes his report with the following language:

All honor therefore to Dr. Jorge Tibirica and his able secretaries, your excellency among them, for conceiving the idea of valorization of coffee by direct intervention.

Notwithstanding the immense profits that have already come to the promoters of this scheme, the day of largest reward and financial gain for this gigantic combination is still in the future. If they are able to increase the price of coffee when the production is greater than the consumption, then what will the result be when the law of supply and demand, instead of working against them, will be working in their favor? What will be their harvest during the later years of this combination, when the yearly increase in the consumption of coffee shall have surpassed the yearly production? For the last 15 years the annual increase in the consumption of coffee has averaged 400,000 bags. The annual production, as far as Brazil is concerned, has about reached its maximum. As long as no additional coffee trees are planted in Brazil it will not be long until the world's demand for coffee will exceed the supply. If the yearly consumption of coffee continues to increase at the same rate that it has increased in the past, the world will demand about 22,000,000 bags of coffee yearly by the time that this combination ends according to its own terms. But this is not all. The different States of Brazil as well as the Brazilian Government itself are engaged in a world-wide campaign to increase the per capita consumption of coffee.

And now I am coming to the point where the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] interrupted me in regard to the efforts they are making to increase the consumption of coffee in different countries, and I have no doubt but that it has some effect upon the price in England.

In the development of this scheme the Brazilian Government has appropriated $150,000 gold to be expended in the propaganda for the increased use of coffee abroad. The condition of the appropriation, however, being that the coffee-producing States of Brazil should each appropriate a similar amount for the same purpose.

In the recent budget of the State of Sao Paulo there was included an appropriation of $300,000 for this purpose, and I understand that the State of Minas Geraes and the State of Rio de Janeiro have made appropriations of $150,000 each, to be added to this fund. Altogether there is, in round numbers, an appropriation of about $750,000, which is to be expended in one year in behalf of a more extended use of coffee.

And I want to say right here that I am not making these observations about the attempt of the Brazilian States and Brazil to increase the consumption of coffee in a spirit of criticism.

It is, perhaps, commendable. I mention it only to show, and I think it has the tendency to show, that the yearly increase in the consumption of coffee will not decrease, but in all probability increase at a greater rate than it has in the past on account of this effort being made. It is perhaps not intended that this campaign is to include the United States, because the consumption of coffee per capita in the United States is now greater than in most any other country of the civilized world. The per capita consumption of coffee in Great Britain is less than 1 pound, in France it is 5 pounds, in Germany it is 7 pounds, and in the United States 12 pounds, and the per capita consumption in Russia is very small. This money will undoubtedly be used to increase the consumption of coffee in those countries where the per capita consumption is the lowest.

A year or so ago, in carrying out this plan for the increased use of coffee, arrangements were made with a firm in London by which it was agreed that this firm should be paid $243,325 to superintend and manage the campaign in England for five years for that purpose. The arrangement made with this firm provided for the preparation of coffee under the supervision of a representative of the State of Sao Paulo, and all the details of the plan have been agreed upon. Advertising matter has been furnished and the finest grades of coffee have been supplied in order to create an appetite for coffee among the people of England. The coffee is specially selected and prepared under Government inspection, and, in addition to the money paid to the firm for superintending the management of the business, large allowances are made for expenses and commissions on the part of the jobber, and a commission of 23 per cent on the product is allowed to the retailer. Similar methods are contemplated for other Governments, so that if the plan is successfully carried out the per capita consumption of coffee in all these countries will be greatly increased and the profits of this enormous combination be increased manyfold.

The question might naturally arise in the mind of any thinking person that since the world's production of coffee has been exceeding the world's consumption, this combination would be accumulating an enormous supply of coffee, and that unless conditions change they would eventually be compelled to dispose of this surplus in the markets of the world. As I have already pointed out, the production of coffee has by this combination been limited and the maximum production must soon be reached. While the consumption of coffee is naturally increasing at the rate of 400,000 bags per year, it is safe also to estimate that the efforts which I have mentioned toward the increased use of coffee will have its effect and, therefore, that the world's demand will increase at a much greater annual rate than it has in the past. When the demand for coffee exceeds the supply, then it will be easy to put upon the market this stored coffee in such quantities and in such places as not to break the market. It is estimated that by the year 1915, at least, the world's demand for coffee will equal the world's production, and from that time on the demand will exceed the production, and long before 1919 the visible supply of coffee will have entirely disappeared and the coffee drinkers of the world will be completely at the mercy of this gigantic combination. This was taken into consideration at the time this scheme was devised, and was carefully investigated and thought out. In a report which appeared in a Rio de Janeiro publication about the time this combination was formed, there was a very careful review of the entire situation. In that report it was estimated that by 1915, four years before the expiration of this trust, the world's consumption of coffee would be 20,000,000 bags, and that the world's production of coffee would be considerably less. So that the promoters of this trust would have more than five years to dispose of the surplus at the enormous artificial prices which their combination has brought about.

As I have said, the steady advance of the price of coffee would have a tendency to increase the planting of coffee trees in the countries not controlled by this combination. There has been and will continue to be some increase in the production of coffee in these other countries, but yet there is no doubt but what this increase will be much smaller than might appear to be warranted at first blush. We must remember that this gigantic combination expires by its own terms at the close of the year 1919. It is apparent, therefore, that any man who is thinking of adding to his coffee plantation, or any Government that desires to increase its coffee production, will take into consideration the fact that this artificial method of counteracting the law of supply and demand and holding up the price of coffee will cease in 1919, which would be just about the time that the new trees planted on account of the high price of coffee would come into bearing. Men would therefore hesitate to put their money into coffee plantations with the uncertainty of the future staring them in the face. Unless some new scheme is invented or some new and different combination entered into, the year 1920 will find these bonds paid off and the millions of profit divided up among the members of this international combination, and the law of supply and demand will again be permitted to hold sway.

In the face of these conditions it is doubtful whether there will be any abnormal increase in the production of coffee on the part of the other coffee-producing countries of the world. I presume when 1919 is reached the members of this great international Coffee Trust will look over the situation and will decide, according to the conditions that exist then, whether it will be profitable to continue the combination and renew the agreement by which they are now exacting, and will until that time continue to exact, contributions from the coffee-consuming world.

As interesting and as instructive as all these facts are, the question naturally recurs, "What are we going to do about it?" There is no doubt but what the laws of the United States can not be directly applied either to a foreign State or a foreign nation. Neither can we bring into the courts of the United States the citizens and corporations of Europe. The members of this combination who are residents and citizens of our own country are subject to our laws, and if they have violated them can be punished, even though their coconspirators can not be directly reached. There is no doubt in my mind but what we can, indirectly at least, reach the Government of Brazil and its States by the proper change in our tariff laws. It is to the question of reaching Brazil and her States and the American members of this combination that I now desire to address myself.

First, let us take the several American corporations that are parties to this international agreement. If the facts as I have narrated them are true, there can be no possible doubt but what these institutions have violated the Sherman Antitrust Act, and are therefore subject to its penalties. Section 1 of that act is as follows:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

This law has been in force over 20 years and has been construed on numerous occasions by the Supreme Court. I shall not take the time to follow these decisions, but will content myself with the statement that any student who will follow the construction that has at various times been given to this section must be led to the inevitable conclusion that conduct such as I have narrated, when once established, has always and without exception been held by this court to be a violation of this section. The court has often held that the "restraint" mentioned in this section applies not only to a restraint among the members of a combination, but it applies likewise to any restraint that the combination imposes upon outside parties who are not members of the combination.

There can be no doubt but what one of the very objects of this combination is a monopoly in the trade of coffee. Section 2 of the Sherman Act applies particularly to monopolies and to attempts to monopolize or to combinations and conspiracies to monopolize. This section reads as follows:

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Assuming that I have correctly stated the facts in regard to this combination, the inevitable result must follow that every person or corporation connected with this combination has violated this section; and if they are within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, they can be convicted and punished for violation of section 2 of this act. This section, like section 1, has been often construed by the Supreme Court, and its meaning in no respect is left in doubt. Any person who shall "monopolize" or "attempt to monopolize" or "combine or conspire" to monopolize "any part" of trade or commerce is guilty of a violation of the act. In addition to these two sections, section 4 of the same act gives the courts of the United States power to restrain and to prohibit such violations by the writ of injunction. It would seem, therefore, as far as individuals or corporations in our own country are concerned, that the laws are sufficient, and that these persons, parties, or corporations can be proceeded against in a civil action by injunction that would break up the combination, and can likewise be prosecuted in a criminal suit for a violation of both sections 1 and 2.

In connection with the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law as against this combination, and also, in general, as against all violators of the law, I desire to call attention to section 6 of that famous statute. It reads as follows:

Any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy (and being the subject thereof) mentioned in section 1 of this act, and being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to a foreign country, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law.

It has no doubt often occurred that great combinations have been able out of the profits of their unlawful business to pay for the fines and penalties charged against them for the violation of the statute and still have a snug surplus on the right side of the ledger as a result of their unlawful operations. A few applications of the remedy provided in section 6 would make the violation of this statute unprofitable as well as illegal. In the famous Addyston Pipe case (85 Fed. Rep., 271), the United States circuit court of appeals for the sixth district held that an action under this particular section could not be joined in an equity suit under section 4, to enjoin the defendants from continuing their unlawful conduct. It was held there, however, and it seems to be a plain provision of the section, that the property of such a combination being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to a foreign country, may be seized and condemned in the method provided by law for the condemnation of property that is imported into the United States contrary to our tariff laws. These custom laws have been enacted and changed from time to time, but there have always been and still are in force provisions of law for the seizure and condemnation of such property which are both summary and severe. Such proceedings are prosecuted according to the custom laws of our country, and the same district attorneys who are charged by section 4 with the enforcement of this antitrust statute are likewise charged with the duty of instituting proceedings under section 6.

It is an open secret that it has cost and is still costing a large amount of money to enforce the different provisions of this antitrust statute against combinations and monopolies. If section 6 were enforced in all cases of the violation of section 1 of the act and the property that is the subject of the illegal combination was seized and forfeited to the United States, these great combinations, to a great extent at least, would be compelled to pay the governmental costs of the prosecution for their violation of the law.

In this connection I desire to call attention to section 73 of the act of August 27, 1894, the same being Twenty-eighth Statutes at Large, 570. This section reads as follows:

SEC. 73. That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations either of whom is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter. Every person who is or shall hereafter be engaged in the importation of goods or any commodity from any foreign country in violation of this section of this act, or who shall combine or conspire with another to violate the same, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in any court of the United States, such person shall be fined in a sum not less than $100 and not exceeding $5,000, and shall be further punished by imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, for a term not less than 3 months nor exceeding 12 months.

The provisions of this section apply only where there is a conspiracy between two or more persons or corporations in which any one of them is engaged in importing any article from a foreign country into the United States. It seems that there can be no doubt but what some of the persons or corporations interested in this valorization scheme are so engaged and that their contract without doubt operates in restraint of trade and free competition, and that they are amenable to the punishments provided in this section. The very object and foundation of the entire scheme was to increase the price of coffee. Whether the financiers who furnished the money for this plan were themselves personally and directly engaged in the importation of coffee would not, in my judgment, be material. In order to carry out their plan the coffee had to be imported. Somebody must import it, and therefore some one who is a party to the contract must, either through himself or some other person or corporation, be engaged in the importation of the coffee.

I come now to the question as to whether there is any practical way for the United States Government to legally deal with a foreign nation or State where such nation or State has entered into a combination the effect of which is to monopolize trade and artificially increase the cost of any article of commerce to the American consumer.

In the discussion of this question, I believe it must be admitted, to begin with, that there is no direct way by which the United States can interfere with any sovereign nation or State in the enactment of its laws or in the adoption of such rules and regulations as it may deem advisable, regardless of how severe such laws, rules, or regulations may be against the commerce of the United States, and regardless of what effect the same may have upon the price that our people must pay for the commodities imported from such country. All the laws which we may pass and the rules and regulations which may be adopted in pursuance of such laws can have no direct application or effect upon any other nation. It is no doubt true that if any particular product or article of commerce, on account of geographical condition or conditions of climate, can be raised and produced only in one particular country, then such country has the right to make any law it sees fit in regard to the exportation of such product and can, if it so desires, prohibit entirely the exportation of such product, or can provide by law for any conditions or regulations it may deem best under which such articles can be exported. However, the condition of trade and commerce among the civilized nations of the modern world is such that no nation can live unto itself alone. If a country produces of any particular article more than it can consume, it must find a market for the surplus among the other countries of the world. In addition to this, there is not a nation to-day but what desires, to a greater or lesser extent, some of the products of other countries which it is unable to produce. In this respect there is perhaps no country in the world so well situated as our own, and if international trade and commerce among the nations of the world were entirely suspended and prohibited, we would perhaps be able to meet the then existing conditions with less damage to ourselves and with less interference with the comfort and happiness of our people than any other nation on the globe.

Trade and commerce between the different civilized nations of the world are practically necessary and imperative, and it therefore becomes a matter of no extreme difficulty for the Congress of the United States to pass such laws as will make it to the advantage of any foreign nation to deal with us and with our produce in a fair and honest manner. It would be easy for us to pass the necessary laws under which Brazil would find it very unprofitable for her to continue her attempt at monopolizing and thereby increasing the price that American consumers must pay for her products which we use.

Section 2 of the present tariff act has for its object the prevention by any foreign power of any discrimination against the products of the United States. This section, however, did not contemplate the prevention of the conditions which have been brought about on the part of the Brazilian Government in her attempt to valorize coffee, and it is undoubtedly true that this section as it now stands would not enable us to meet the emergency. This is the section that provides for the maximum and minimum tariff. In substance it provides that where any foreign country makes any discrimination against the United States or the products thereof imported into such country, then and in such case all articles imported from such foreign country shall, in addition to the duty provided for in section 1 of the act, pay an additional duty of 25 per centum ad valorem.

This section, among other things, provides that all foreign nations shall be exempt from the payment of this additional or maximum rate if such foreign country "imposes no terms or restrictions, either in the way of tariff rates or provisions, trade or other regulations, charges, exactions, or in any other manner, directly or indirectly, upon the importation into or the sale in such foreign country of any agricultural, manufactured, or other product of the United States which unduly discriminate against the United States or the products thereof." It will be noted that this statute in effect provides that the maximum rate of duty can not be imposed unless the laws, rules, or regulations of the foreign country "unduly discriminate" against the products of the United States. In the case of Brazil it would undoubtedly be held that her action that I have described was not a "discrimination" against the United States, because all of these laws, rules, and regulations apply to the balance of the world as well as to our own country, and there would therefore be no discrimination. In other words, all the nations of the earth are treated the same. If this great combination to which she is a party applied only to us, the penalty provided in section 2 of our tariff act could be applied to her, but since she not only conspires against America but does the same with everybody else she is able to avoid the penalties of the act.

By a slight amendment to this section we could possibly meet the contingency. If we provided by an amendment to this act that to entitle any foreign country to our minimum tariff rates it would not only be necessary that such country should not discriminate against our products, but that such country should not by law, rule, or regulation, or otherwise, become a party to any combination or conspiracy the effect of which was to monopolize trade between the United States and foreign nations, and by virtue of such monopoly to increase the price of commodities to our consumers, then she would be compelled to cease such unfair treatment and withdraw from such conspiracy or subject all of her products imported into the United States to the penalties provided in this section. Brazil can not afford to engage in a tariff controversy with the United States. We are one of her best customers. We have provided by law for the admission of a large proportion of her exports into our country free of duty. I will insert in the RECORD a table showing the amount and value of her exports for the year 1909.

Articles.	Quantity.	Value.
Coffee	16,880,696 bags	$161,922,682
Rubber	39,027 metric tons	91,578,388
Hides	35,784 metric tons	8,812,660
Yerba-maté	68,017 metric tons	8,025,333
Cacao	33,818 metric tons	7,739,870
Tobacco	29,782 metric tons	6,443,681
Skins	3,897 metric tons	4,709,492
Sugar	68,483 metric tons	3,247,504
Cotton	9,969 metric tons	2,861,662
Bar gold	4,323 kilos	2,252,898
Manganese	241,000 metric tons	1,730,311
Chestnuts		1,493,712
Carnaba wax	3,042 metric tons	1,230,638
Bran	38,158 metric tons	1,210,572
Cotton seed	33,615 metric tons	711,401
Monasite sand	6,462 metric tons	708,092
Precious stones		288,212
Total of 17 articles		304,967,108
Miscellaneous articles		3,364,721
Total exports		308,331,829

It will be seen from this that the total value of the exports from Brazil for the year 1909 was $308,331,829. Of this amount the United States took by far the major portion. There is no other country that took more than one-third of the amount of exports that were taken by the United States. We took of these exports $123,817,298. The nearest other competitor was the United Kingdom, which took a little over $49,000,000.

It is conceded that if we amend section 2 of the tariff law so as to deprive Brazil of our minimum tariff rates that such amendment would not affect the importations from Brazil which are on the free list, and since coffee is on the free list it could still be imported free from Brazil, even though our maximum rates applied, because such maximum rates would only apply to such articles as are on the dutiable list. In order that we may understand just exactly what articles from Brazil will be affected by such action, I append a table showing importations from Brazil during the fiscal year 1910 which were on the dutiable list, giving the quantities imported, the rate of duty, and the duty collected.

Dutiable imports from Brazil to the United States, fiscal year 1910.

[General imports with estimated duties collected thereon.]

	Quantities.	Amount.	Rate of duty.	Estimated duty.
			Per cent.
Feathers and downs, crude		$21,178	20	$4,235.60
Hides of cattle.....pounds	[1] 211,098	[1] 35,704	15	5,355.60
Plants, orchids, palms, bulbs, etc		3,293	[2] 18	592.74
Other plants, not specified		4,787	30	1,436.10
Seeds, castor beans.....bushels	158,351	192,397	[3] 25	39,587.75
Other seeds not specified		21,836	[2] 34	7,424.24
Sugar: Cane not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color.....pounds	6,860,735	151,637	[2] 53	80,367.61
Wool: Class 3.....do	84,898	7,460	[3] 4	3,295.92
Monozite sand.....do	1,322,760	113,293	[3] 4	52,910.40
All other articles dutiable		3,751		1,355.53
Total dutiable imports		555,336		196,661.49

[1] Hides of cattle free on and after Aug. 6, 1909; figures cover period July 1 to Aug. 5, 1909, inclusive.
[2] Estimated.
[3] Cents.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Do I understand the gentleman's idea to be that we should put coffee on the protected list?

Mr. NORRIS. No. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed just a little further, I will reach that question and take it up, and show just exactly what we might do and could do in regard to it.

Mr. STERLING. If we should put a tariff on coffee, all that the importers would have to do would be to add that duty to the cost of the coffee, I presume?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I am going to discuss that question, but I am not going to advocate the placing of a tariff on coffee; although if we are going to go into it, it could easily be shown that we are practically the only country in the world that admits coffee free. They have duties in the other countries. I shall say more about it later on. We pay more for coffee than anybody else.

If this amendment suggested would not bring the proper relief, it would be a very easy matter to further amend our tariff law as it applies to Brazil so as to put all, or at least parts, of her importations upon the dutiable list until she should cease giving her support to the valorization scheme. I know it will be said that if we undertook to place a duty on coffee it would injure the American consumer rather than help him; but I do not believe it is necessary for us to put coffee on the dutiable list. If we should pass an amendment to our tariff law that would provide that the coffee produced in all other countries except Brazil should come in free, and then limit the free coffee from Brazil to such an amount which, together with the coffee imported from other countries, should equal and perhaps somewhat exceed the consumption in our country, and then provide for a high duty upon the balance of Brazilian coffee, I think we would meet the situation and compel Brazil to come to terms.

I think that, Mr. Chairman, is an answer to the question suggested by my friend from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Let us see how this kind of a law would work.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Would not the original proposition that was presented by the Ways and Means Committee last Congress, providing that a tariff equal to whatever export tax is put on by any other country—would not that be more effective than the method proposed by the gentleman?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe it would be. Of course it might work absolutely right; I would not say. I have some doubt about it. But I do not see how this plan that I have suggested could be in any way objectionable. Let us see, I say, how this kind of a law would work.

I think it would be conceded, to begin with, that if there was a duty on Brazilian coffee, and coffee from all other countries should be admitted free from duty, it would result in the coffee from all other coffee-producing countries being imported into the United States. It would bring to our ports practically all the coffee produced anywhere outside of Brazil, because practically all the coffee-consuming countries of the world levy a heavy duty upon the importation of coffee into their respective countries. If coffee produced everywhere except in Brazil had free entrance into the United States, while it had to pay a duty in other countries, the result would certainly be that it would practically all come to us. I will print in the RECORD a table showing the rate of duty charged by the principal countries of the world upon importations of coffee.

Statement of duty charged by various countries on coffee.

Austria-Hungary (per 100 kilos):
Raw, 95 crowns (about 8 cents per pound).
Roasted, 120 crowns (about 11 cents per pound).
(Crown=20.3 cents.)
Belgium (per 100 kilos):
Not roasted, free.
Roasted, 10 francs (about 1 cent per pound).
(Franc=19.3 cents.)
France (per 100 kilos):
Raw, maximum, 300 francs (about 27 cents per pound); minimum, 136 francs (about 12 cents per pound).
(Franc=19.3 cents.)
Germany (per 100 kilos):
Raw, 60 marks (about 6 cents per pound).
Roasted, ground or not, 85 marks (about 9 cents per pound).
(Mark=$0.238.)
Netherlands: Free.
Russia (per pood):
Raw, in the bean, 5.85 rubles (about 8¼ cents per pound).
Roasted, in the bean or ground or compressed, 9 rubles (per pood, weight of packing included).
(Ruble=51.5 cents; pood=36 pounds.)
United Kingdom (per pound), 2 pence (about 4 cents per pound).
United States: Free.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman any figures to show what proportion of all our importations of coffee are of Brazilian coffee?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have figures on that. I am going to give them later.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not hear that.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have some tables showing that. I will take that up right now, if the gentleman from Ohio will give me his attention.

It must be noted, of course, that the people of the United States consume more coffee annually than is produced by all the coffee-producing countries of the world outside of Brazil, and if we stopped at this point we would, perhaps, get no relief to the consumers of coffee, because if the free coffee did not equal the consumption then the owner of the free coffee would, of course, raise the price to the level of the tax-paying coffee. In other words, the coffee which paid the duty and which it would be necessary to put with the free coffee in order to equal the amount of coffee we consume would fix the price of coffee to the consumer. To meet this difficulty we could provide by the proper enactment to admit from Brazil up to a certain limit her coffee free of duty, on the same theory that we admit to a certain limit tobacco free of duty from the Philippine Islands. In round numbers, we consume annually between seven and eight million bags of coffee. The coffee-producing countries of the world outside of Brazil produce and export from their respective countries from four to five million bags of coffee. I think it is nearer five millions and sometimes over five rather than under. If we provide by law that from three to three and a half million bags of coffee from Brazil should be annually admitted free, and then charge a high duty on the importations of the balance of Brazilian coffee imported, while admitting all the coffee of the balance of the world free, we would, in my judgment, completely meet the situation. This would, in effect, give the American consumers of coffee the lower prices that would come through the admission of free coffee, while it would practically exclude from our market all Brazilian coffee which we would not need for consumption.

It must be remembered also that Brazil produces a large amount of other products which we admit into our country free of duty. These same products are produced by the other South American and Central American countries, and by Mexico. It would be an easy matter to charge Brazil an import duty on her importations of such products while admitting them free from the other countries named.

The effect of this would be to place Brazil at a great disadvantage in the markets of the United States with all other countries whose products are similar to those produced by Brazil. She would lose a large part of the trade with her most valuable customer. During the year 1910 we purchased from Brazil, outside of coffee, about $70,000,000 of her products, which we admitted free of duty. If we should provide by law for the same discrimination against these products as I have outlined that it would be possible for us to provide as regards her coffee, she would find herself without a market for her surplus products, and as a matter of self-preservation she would be compelled to comply with our law and desist from further participation in any scheme of valorization.

The success that has come to this combination in its attempt to valorize coffee has been so marked that for some time there has been agitated in Brazil the proposition of organizing a similar combination in regard to rubber. The increased demand for several years all over the civilized world for rubber, particularly in the automobile industry, has materially increased the price of the product. From present indications the world's demand for rubber will continue to increase at a wonderful rate. It would therefore be a very desirable commodity in which to organize a gigantic world's trust with a view of controlling the supply and thus increase the price to the consumer.

During the calendar year 1910 there was imported into the United States 90,139,332 pounds of rubber. Of this amount we received from Brazil 36,236,475 pounds, valued at $41,582,766. During the calendar year 1909 there was imported into the United States 93,967,414 pounds of rubber. Of this amount Brazil sent us 44,219,868 pounds, valued at $43,099,654. During the same calendar year (1909) there was imported into the United Kingdom from all other countries 83,471,360 pounds of rubber. Of this amount Brazil furnished her 34,578,880 pounds, valued at $41,982,000. During the same calendar year there was imported into Germany 48,893,618 pounds of rubber. Of this amount Brazil furnished 10,566,647 pounds, valued at $12,550,000. During the calendar year 1909 there was imported into France from all other countries 25,579,973 pounds of rubber. Of this amount Brazil furnished 4,418,018 pounds, valued at $6,962,000; showing that Brazil produces and furnishes a large majority of the rubber that is used in the civilized world, although not nearly as great a per cent as she does of coffee.

It must be remembered in analyzing these figures that all the rubber imported from Brazil into the various countries named was produced in Brazil, while as a matter of fact the importations from other countries often included rubber that had not been produced in the countries from which it was exported, and undoubtedly some of this rubber imported from such other countries was produced in Brazil.

It will be seen from this that Brazil does not produce as large a proportion of the world's rubber as she does of the world's coffee, and it will therefore be a little more difficult for her to carry out a scheme of valorization as applied to rubber with the same success that she has had in the valorization of coffee. There is no doubt but what it is generally understood in rubber circles that an attempt is being made to valorize rubber and that Brazil is lending her influence to this scheme.

In the New York Journal of Commerce of February 24, 1911, it is stated as a matter of news that the recent advance in rubber was undoubtedly caused by the circulation of the report that there was taking place in rubber circles some such scheme like that of the Brazilian Government's valorization of coffee. It is generally believed that the Brazilian Government has taken a hand in this proposition, and that if the necessary arrangements can be brought about the world will soon see the valorization applied to rubber as it has been applied to coffee. In this article it was stated that the indications were that the Bank of Brazil, a Government institution, was undertaking to organize financial interests in Brazil for the purpose of controlling rubber, and that, while official announcement of the connection of the Government with the scheme was not made, it was ascertained on inquiry that the Brazilian Government itself was behind the proposition. It was stated that this bank had already organized branches at the chief Amazon River ports, and the president of the bank had sailed for Europe and the United States with the intention of making the necessary financial arrangements in these countries. From other sources I have learned that it is currently reported in Brazil trade circles that the Brazilian Government itself intends to advance $20,000,000 for the purpose of starting this huge combination and bringing about the control of the rubber market of the world.

We have recently heard a great deal about the control of the potash industry by Germany. It has been claimed that there is an attempt on the part of Germany to monopolize and control the potash industry of the world. Without attempting to express any opinion as to the merits of this controversy, it can at least be said that Germany's step has in its favor the more or less plausible claim that it is simply an effort on her part to conserve her natural resources, while the Brazilian Government has even curtailed the resources at least of some of its people in order for the chosen ones to profit thereby. Is the world soon to see an era of combination greater than the tendency which has existed in that direction in the past? Are we to pass from combinations of men, wealth, and corporations controlling the products in one particular country to another step wherein men, financiers, and corporations of different nations shall combine to control and monopolize articles of commerce over the entire world, and then from that to the still further step that the nations themselves shall become participants in these great combines with the view of monopolizing the products of their own countries at the expense of the consumers of the balance of the world? The success of the valorization of coffee and the apparent tendencies toward a similar attempt in regard to rubber, with perhaps an effort on the part of Germany to do the same as regards potash, would indicate that the tendency of the times is in that direction.

If the conspiracy to monopolize and control the market price of any product is composed of men and corporations, the combination thus formed is an ordinary, common trust, but if the combination has behind it the power and influence of a great nation, it is dignified with the new term "valorization." Reduced to common language, it is simply a hold-up of the people by a combination composed of men, corporations, money, and nations that extends and reaches out over the entire civilized world.

I have no doubt but what such a combination can be and will be nullified and dissolved by the proper amendments to our tariff law, which I have suggested, but if such a change in the law is not sufficient or will not accomplish the ends, then we will ultimately be forced to the necessity, in self-defense and in defense of our people, to go ourselves into the valorization business. In looking over the world of commerce it at once becomes apparent that the United States is, on account of its geographical location and the diversity of its products, industries, and manufactures, in a better condition to thus valorize any of the common necessities of life than any other nation of the world. In the calendar year of 1909 the world produced 854,316 metric tons of copper, of which the United States produced 501,372 metric tons, the product of the United States being 58.69 per cent of the world's production. The average yearly production of copper from 1900 to 1909, both inclusive, has been 663,832 metric tons. The average yearly production of the United States during that period has been 369,418 metric tons, the same being 55.68 per cent of the world's production. Copper is used all over the civilized world in various manufacturing enterprises. The increase of the use of electricity has increased to a great extent the use of copper. Germany, in particular, in her manufacturing enterprises uses and must have a large amount of copper, and during the calendar year of 1909 she consumed in her manufacturing industries 154,673 metric tons of copper. Of this amount she purchased from us 143,718 metric tons. A metric ton is 2,204.6 pounds. Without American copper many of the most important manufacturing industries of Germany, as well as the balance of the civilized world, would be compelled to shut down.

During this same year—1909—England imported from all other countries 2,188,762,240 pounds of cotton. Of this amount 1,640,484,160 pounds were supplied by the United States. During the same year Germany imported and used in her manufacturing industries 1,068,514,505 pounds of cotton. Of this amount she imported from the United States 810,472,688 pounds. During the same calendar year France imported and used in her various manufacturing industries 702,581,760 pounds of cotton. Of this amount she purchased from us 558,539,819 pounds. During the same year Austria-Hungary imported for her manufacturing industries 414,316,298 pounds, of which she purchased from us 233,916,878 pounds. Italy imported 420,730,273 pounds, of which 303,092,817 pounds came from the United States. The same is practically true of all the other civilized nations of the world. Without American cotton the spindles of the civilized world would become idle. The same comparison might be made with many of the other common necessaries of life.

I offer these figures and facts not because I advocate or am in favor of the United States entering into any such unfair and unjust combination to control arbitrarily and unreasonably the price of any of the common necessities of life, but to show that if we were driven to the extremity of meeting international combinations by methods so unjust and so unfair, we are so situated and in possession of so many natural resources and the necessaries of life that we could more than hold our own in such a contest. I do not believe there will be any necessity for resorting to such procedure. As I have said before, I think the proper changes in our tariff laws will bring about the necessary relief, as far as foreign nations and States are concerned, and that the proper enforcement of laws already on our statute books will prevent citizens of our own country from engaging in or becoming parties to any conspiracy or combination having for its object the monopoly of trade and the increase of the price of commodities.

It is gratifying also to note that the participation on the part of Brazil in this world-wide combination to control the price of coffee has received the attention of lawmakers and people generally in countries other than our own. The subject has been discussed, with a view to investigation, in the German Reichstag. On the 15th of December last the Deutsche Kaffee-Zeitung, published at Berlin, went into a full discussion of this Brazilian coffee valorization scheme, and as a result of this exposition and other investigations that have been made in Germany on the subject, the indications are that the German Government will enact the necessary legislation to prevent, in Germany at least, the carrying out of this colossal combination.

I have been moved in the suggestion I have offered not by any spirit of hatred or animosity toward Brazil, but by a firm belief that we should enact the necessary legislation to prevent the further robbing of our people by this gigantic combine, and that we should not hesitate to act simply because a great and friendly nation is one of the guilty parties in the deal. We ought to be just as careful to protect our citizens against monopoly if the promoters of such monopoly are sovereign States as though the affair were accomplished by our citizens alone. I ask nothing for our own people but what is fair and right, and we ought not hesitate to give it to them regardless of who the wrongdoers may be. As a Nation and as a people we are in possession and control of the natural resources and are occupying a situation that, by demanding and asserting only what is right and fair, we will be able to secure justice to our people without doing any injury to the people of any other nation. To this we are entitled, and we should be content with nothing less. With a spirit of entire friendliness toward the balance of the world we should demand and exact common justice to our own people. We should apply the doctrine of the golden rule to all the people of the earth and at the same time should insist that the rule work both ways. We should give justice to all others and should demand that the recipients of our favor repay us in kind. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened with very great interest to the speech of the gentleman, and frankly say that it is a subject that I have had little leisure or, if I have had leisure, have lacked industry to investigate; but I would be glad to have the gentleman tell me if he knows the importing price now of the coffee berry.

Mr. NORRIS. I have it here. I think I can give it to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Eight cents?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. CANNON. Not so much as that?

Mr. NORRIS. It is more than that. I have here a letter, dated March 24, in which it is stated that on Monday, March 20, the commonest kind of Rios—that is, No. 7 Rio—and I will say to the gentleman that that is the grade upon which most of the figures are based unless it is otherwise stated—were firmly held at 12½ cents; Santos, at 12¾ to 13; Santos and Rios No. 4 were offered at 13¼ cents. He goes on to say that good roasting and drinking Santos, 3 and 4, were 13¾ to 14⅝, according to quality.

Mr. CANNON. That was the importing price or the jobbers' price?

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that that was the importers' price. I will say to the gentleman that the table I quoted in my speech, running up to the 1st of January, shows that on January 1 the price of coffee was 13½ cents.

Mr. CANNON. The importing price or the jobbers' price?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I am glad to know the price. Has the gentleman investigated the price that we all pay when we buy coffee for consumption?

Mr. NORRIS. I have made no extended investigation. I have, I presume, the same knowledge that the gentleman has if he buys coffee. I can not say that my information is absolutely reliable, but I understand that the average price of retail coffee, taking all grades and averaging them, is 25 cents, over the country.

Mr. CANNON. Generally roasted and put in packages?

Mr. NORRIS. I think, perhaps, roasted and put in packages it would be a little more, would sell a little higher than that; perhaps from 30 to 40 or 45 cents. I think the cheapest kind is not sold in that way.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is 30 to 40 cents on my grocery bills.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the coffee that is put in packages would probably sell for over 30 or 40 cents; but averaging all the coffees, including the poorer grades, that would bring the price down.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman investigated far enough to know whether the combination made by Brazil and other people in the world, capitalized as it is, has charge of the preparation of the coffee from the time that it is imported and lands free or duty paid in the various countries to the time that it reaches the retailer, and whether prices are dictated by this combination to the retailer, at which he sells?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any information on the subject as to whether they control or attempt to control any further than the sale to the big jobber, although the American member of the committee controlling the valorized coffee is a member of one of the largest coffee-jobbing firms in the United States. I would like to say in connection with this that in this letter of the date of March 24 the writer of the letter, a coffee expert, gives an opinion, together with some information. I will read an extract:

> In talking the situation over with a gentleman who represents a large Brazilian coffee-importing interest, and who has been a bear for the past 10 years, and who remained a bear up to 3 months ago, he told me that if the Brazil coffee remained in the hands of the present owners that there was nothing to prevent them from putting the price of coffee to 20 cents by December 31 of this year, and that he firmly believed that we would see Rio number 7 sell at 20 cents before this year was out.

Mr. CANNON. I do not see why, if the combination is as it seems to be, that is not practicable. But it seems to me, the importing price being 13 cents or 14 cents, and when it is roasted and ground and put in packages and sold to the consumer, oh, say, 28 to 30 cents a pound, that is almost 100 per cent for roasting and grinding and delivering to 92,000,000 people. The gentleman presents a very interesting state of facts, which, it seems to me, if possible, ought to be dealt with, but probably there is a much greater manipulation somewhere after the coffee is imported that smells of monopoly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is true with every product that goes from a big jobber down to the consumer through the retailer—that there is a great deal of increase in the price—and, to look at it abstractly, it looks too great. But, of course, there is a reason why there should be a greater advance in price than where it is handled in quantities of several million bags at a time. As to the combination I have been speaking of, I have not traced it any further, but it is very probable that this combination reaches beyond the valorization plan.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I think the committee would be glad to know how these very large profits made by the combination are divided up. First, whether the bankers who advance the money get any more than 6 per cent on the principal when it is closed out.

Mr. NORRIS. In the first place, the bonds drew 6 per cent interest and, I understand, were underwritten by those who took them at 85 cents on the dollar. In order to pay out there was an enormous profit, and in order to insure their paying out they had to control the price of coffee.

I find in various reports and articles that there is a large expense connected with it that all comes out of the export tax and from other sources. As to all the other sources of income and revenue, I am not able to tell and have not been able to discover.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the agreement provide for a sinking fund to pay these bonds in 1919?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Are they all to be paid off through a sinking fund?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; all to be paid by 1919.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Aside from what the gentleman has just stated, I would like to ask the gentleman if the Brazilian Government gets the balance of the profit?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not tell you what the Brazilian Government gets beyond what I have stated. In the reports I have had access to, made to the Brazilian Government by some of its officers, and a part of which I have read, they mention a profit to the Brazilian Government. I would not say on my own investigation that the Brazilian Government was getting, as a Government, any profit out of it. They may be, but I do not know about it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman know whether or not the price is raised to the producers of coffee in Brazil according as the price is raised in the market?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I could not say. I suppose in Brazil most of the people raise their own coffee and do not have to buy it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I mean the people who raise coffee that is put into this pool for distribution throughout the world.

Mr. NORRIS. Do they get an increase in the price?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think they do.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. And does the gentleman think they get the main part of the profit that comes from this raising of the price of coffee throughout the world?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think they do.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has made any investigation as to the cost of producing coffee in Brazil?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have not.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would say that a year or two ago, when looking up the Porto Rican question in the consideration of the coffee grown there, I investigated it somewhat, and satisfied myself as a result of such investigation that the average grade of coffee costs to produce in Brazil about 3 cents a pound, and could pay an export duty of 3 cents a pound; and coffee could be laid down in New York at 7 cents a pound, and would be unless the price were increased by some artificial means.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the gentleman that at the time of the beginning of this valorization plan No. 7 Rio was selling in New York at about 6 cents a pound.

Mr. OLMSTED. Everything above 6 or 7 cents a pound is the result of artificial enhancement of the price.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, because for several years there was more coffee produced than there was consumed.

Mr. STERLING. One question more. Is it true that the Government of Brazil has limited the production of coffee by legislation?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I could not say it was by legislation, but they have limited it by law. I do not know whether it is necessary to have legislation, or whether an edict or something of that kind was issued.

Mr. SABATH. They have limited the sale of it, have they not?

Mr. NORRIS. They have limited the production, which of course limits the sale.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, it is very fortunate at this juncture, when the control over the fiscal policies of the Nation is changing hands, that the Democratic Party coming into power should immediately submit to the consideration of this House a limited free-list bill. Such a bill is particularly fortunate because it does not involve the discussion of schedules. Our fathers, in considering tariff policies, gave their time and thought chiefly to the discussion of the fundamental principles involved, and upon these principles they founded broad policies. But for the last 20 years the consideration of tariff bills has degenerated into the formulation of a series of complicated mathematical schedules determined chiefly by the interests benefited, each interest bent on getting all it can.

BACK TO PRINCIPLES.

A whole generation has grown up under the influence of such a method of treatment, and local, selfish interests have supplanted broad principles and policies in the framing of tariff bills. It is high time to return to the methods of our fathers, and the country is to be congratulated that now, for the first time in this generation, Congress has before it a bill that involves no adjustment of schedules, a free-list bill that can be and should be disposed of from consideration of broad policies and fundamental principles.

TWOFOLD EFFECT OF BILL.

The purpose and the effect of this bill may be divided into two parts. One is to relieve as far as may be the high cost of living. The other is to readjust our fiscal policies to do justice to the agricultural population. I shall not at this time make an extended discussion of the items in the bill, but pass rather to a discussion of the fundamental principles upon which they are founded, at the outset I wish to call attention to the fact that in this bill the Democratic Party has proceeded wisely in the methods adopted to attain the twofold object, namely, to lower the cost of living to all and to adjust equitably the conditions in the farming industries.

STRIKES AT MONOPOLY.

To lower the cost of living the bill does not aim to interfere with legitimate laws of supply and demand and the natural high prices that bring prosperity to the producers, but it strikes at the interference with natural laws through restraint of trade. It is a matter of general knowledge that monopolies have gained control of many of our necessities of life, and always as a middleman, by which prices are put up to the consumers and put down to the producers. This bill strikes at the middleman monopoly and without lowering prices received by the producers will relieve the burdens now laid on the consumer.

LIGHTENS BURDENS OF FARMERS.

To relieve the discrimination so long practiced against those engaged in agricultural pursuits the bill does not undertake to give the farmer artificial protection, but it does relieve him from unjust burdens of taxation now laid on the articles required on his farm. For more than a generation the whole effect of our fiscal policies has been a discrimination in favor of city pursuits and against agricultural pursuits, so much so that the equilibrium of population has been disturbed by a steady stream flowing from the country to the city. At the outbreak of the Civil War it is estimated that over 80 per cent of our population were engaged in agricultural pursuits; to-day the new census will probably show that only 30 per cent are so engaged.

ABNORMAL GROWTH OF CITY LIFE.

The discrimination in favor of city pursuits began incidentally in the adjustment of fiscal policies to meet the demands of war expenses and of the great public debt incurred by the war. It was simply a repetition of history that the burdens of the war should fall chiefly on the shoulders of the farmers. But when the war debt was practically paid, the burdens on the farmer were not removed. On the contrary, in the three principal tariff bills of the last 30 years—the McKinley bill, the Dingley bill, and the Payne bill—the burdens on those engaged in agricultural pursuits were steadily increased; discrimination in favor of manufacturing pursuits as against agricultural pursuits became a settled policy; the flow of population from the country to the city has never abated; immigrants coming from abroad remain in the cities. Never before in the history of the world has there been such an abnormal growth of city life with so little growth of country life, and it can have no other basic foundation but the artificial discrimination of our fiscal policies in favor of cities and against the farms.

We can not escape the parallelism between the census reports showing the great velocity of the current from the farm to the city and the increase in the duties on manufactured articles from one tariff bill to another. In fact these bills show on their faces that our fiscal policies have been framed primarily at the instance of, if not under the promises of, great manufacturing industries located in the cities and not with regard to the interests of the farmers or of the country as a whole.

THE MENACE OF DEGENERACY.

I will not at this juncture discuss the grave perils that attend an abnormal growth of city life, but can not refrain from pointing out that such a growth preceded the downfall of all the great nations that have perished. It is in city life that national degeneracy does its deadly work. It is in city life that the people come under the dominion of alcoholic poisoning, which not only saps the life force of those who drink, but causes their progeny to be abnormal and degenerate from childhood. The effect of a vast degenerate vote upon the purity of the ballot has already blighted self-government in our great cities. The yearly consumption of alcoholic beverage per capita in the United States has gone up from 4 gallons in 1850 to more than 25 gallons to-day, and is increasing steadily with the preponderance of city life. This bill does not go far, but it is a step toward correcting a vicious policy of discrimination in favor of city life that has come to menace the foundations of the Republic.

I intend, Mr. Chairman, to adhere to my purpose of confining my remarks in the limited time allotted me to discussing the principles involved in this bill and not the individual items, but there is one item that ought to be taken up as affecting a great public policy, our trade relations, and notably our balance of trade with the rest of the world, the item bearing upon the culture of cotton.

In the last few days Members of this House, notably the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], and some of the papers, have alleged that this bill discriminates in favor of the southern farmer because it puts cotton bagging and cotton ties on the free list. The fact is that the discrimination has been against the southern farmer all these years. The last Democratic tariff bill, the Wilson-Gorman bill, put binding twine and yarn on the free list along with cotton bagging and ties, treating the western farmer and the southern farmer alike, but the Republican tariff that followed, while leaving binding twine and yarn on the free list, put a high duty on cotton bagging and ties, and Republican Congresses have turned a deaf ear to the demands of the southern farmer, and have kept the tariff high, while a monopoly absorbed the manufacture of cotton bagging and ties. This bill simply gives a tardy relief from monopoly and removes the discrimination against cotton culture.

COTTON A GREAT NATIONAL QUESTION.

I wish to call the attention of this House to the fact that the question of cotton is not a local but a national question of the first importance. Unfortunately, cotton was formerly associated with slave labor, and this association engendered a prejudice that has steadily persisted in the minds of our National Government and has resulted in great injustice to those engaged in cotton culture and in great financial loss to the Nation. Nearly a half century has elapsed since the proclamation of emancipation and the close of the Civil War, and we should look at the facts dispassionately. After the surrender, and after the full restoration of citizenship, cotton belonging to southern citizens was seized by our Government without compensation, amounting to more than $5,000,000, and not till the Sixty-first Congress has action been taken looking toward indemnifying the citizens so openly and admittedly wronged.

HISTORIC PREJUDICE AGAINST COTTON.

This unlawful seizure of cotton was quickly followed by a direct tax on cotton, a measure that was unconstitutional on its face, but before the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional over $67,000,000 were collected, and to this day the Treasury of the United States carries $67,000,000 taken away unlawfully by the Government from its citizens. When the income tax was declared unconstitutional, the taxes collected were promptly returned, but this vast sum exacted from a people in dire distress has lain in the Treasury and no action has been taken to return it to its lawful owners.

Last year there was a question of a contest between the bears and the bulls on the cotton market. For once since the Civil War the bulls, favored, you might say, by Providence and the weather, were able to hold their own and keep the price of cotton up to the level of supply and demand, whereupon, for the first time in the history of this Government, the Department of Justice proceeded to prosecute the bulls because they formed a pool to control a few hundred thousand bales of cotton out of a crop of over 11,000,000 bales to protect their own interests and keep up the price of cotton, and made no effort to prosecute the bears for combinations openly made to advance their own interests by putting down the price of cotton. The Government found indictments in July when the cotton market was dull, criminal indictments that called for speedy trial, and kept them sealed until last year's crop was marketed and then at a critical time brought them forth and furnished the strongest factor in putting down the price of cotton.

THE GOVERNMENT A BEAR ON THE COTTON MARKET.

It is estimated that more than 1,000,000 bales of cotton futures were speedily sold abroad by spinners and bear speculators—cotton that had never even been planted—sold at a price far below the price at which actual cotton could be bought, all for the purpose and with the effect of breaking the market. It is estimated that the Government appearing constantly as a powerful bear factor on the cotton market is costing America over $50,000,000 loss annually in its proceeds of sales of cotton abroad. Before the bull pool had been formed the bear interests had depressed the price of futures to 8½ cents per pound; as a result of bull operations the crop of 1909 was marketed at nearly 15 cents a pound, a price in keeping with the small crop. America's sales abroad actually brought $450,000,000 cash, whereas at the bear prices it would have been $250,000,000, a difference of $200,000,000. It seems incredible that our Government should go out of its way to become and remain a bear on the cotton market and cut down the profits of the sales of our own people to the people abroad. Never has the Government undertaken to prosecute the bears on the cotton market; never has it undertaken to prosecute bulls or bears on the wheat market or any other produce market. On the cotton market, where we sell over half of our total crop abroad, our Government should appear as a bull and not as a bear.

That brings me to the point I wish to make, namely, that the cotton industry is not sectional but is the most national of all our industries.

AMERICA A LEGITIMATE BULL ON THE COTTON MARKET.

Supplying, as we do, about 70 per cent of all the cotton of the world, our Government should give every legitimate assistance to our producers to grow and to market their crops and should adopt the policy in both its branches, legislative and executive, of a bull on the cotton market. Germany produces a large fraction of the actual output of potash, though not as large a portion as we have of cotton, and the German Government, legislative and executive, has put itself upon the market as a powerful bull agent for potash. We have just listened to eloquent remarks about coffee. Brazil produces a large fraction of the coffee of the world, though not as large a portion as we do of cotton, and the Brazilian Government has taken hold of the coffee market as a powerful and dominating bull agent. Think what this cotton crop of ours would add to our national wealth and prosperity if prejudice did not blind us to its claims and its possibilities.

AMERICA HAS A PRACTICAL MONOPOLY OF THE COTTON PRODUCTION OF THE WORLD.

We produce to-day in the neighborhood of 70 per cent, nearly three-fourths, of all the cotton produced in the whole world. Cotton has at times been $1, $1.25, and $1.50 a pound, and yet, while the nations of the world have tried, in all parts of the world, to grow and develop the cotton industry, they have always failed. They have found rich soil; they have found equitable, average temperature, but they have never found the meteorological conditions required for cotton culture. Take the physical geography of the United States you will see that it is like a great funnel, with the Appalachian system running parallel to the coast to the north and east, and then half way across the continent the Rocky Mountain system running north and west.

THE CONTINENTAL FUNNEL.

The vast plain between these systems has the Great Lakes at the northern end, deep and cold, and the Gulf and southern Atlantic at the southern end, with no mountain barriers between. Not far out from the seaboard is the Gulf Stream. That warm current, gathering in the equatorial regions, curves and sweeps up parallel to the coast. At a higher temperature than the surrounding water and atmosphere vast volumes of heavy moist-laden air rise from its surface to the upper region of the air.

In the late winter and spring the draft of that great continental funnel draws from the south and the southeast. The vast volumes of moisture above the Gulf Stream are drawn across the Southern States and up the Mississippi Valley. The effect of the Great Lakes, which are cold the year round, is to cause precipitation. The great waterfall in the Great Lake region and Mississippi Valley does not come from the Great Lakes. They are inland. It could not come from them primarily. The moisture does not cross the mountains and come from the east or the west. It could not. It comes up the Mississippi Valley from the Gulf and the Gulf Stream, and produces the vast corn area of the Middle West and the cotton area of the South.

The draft of the funnel coming from the south and southeast in the late winter and spring and early summer is reversed in the middle and late summer and early fall and discharges the dry air from the continent at the time when this sun crop wants no more moisture, but wants the sun. In all other tropical and subtropical lands the heat and the moisture do not come at the right time for cotton. As a rule the moisture comes when the plant wants dry weather. The meteorological combination we have in the Southern States is not duplicated anywhere else in the whole world and gives us a monopoly of cotton culture. It is time that our American people should realize the fact that nature has put into our hands the power to control the first great necessity of all civilized human life.

COTTON THE FIRST GREAT NECESSITY OF HUMAN LIFE.

Clothing comes first, because food products are very variable. Man's digestion is very adaptable. But for clothing there is but one article that can supply the world. Fig leaves were found inadequate after the fall. Furs and skins are gone. Silk is not practicable and wool is limited. The great masses of all the men who live in the world must wear cotton if they would not go naked. Every time that a population is increased a certain percentage, that many more people must be clothed with cotton. We have to-day in our country over 20,000,000 more people to clothe than we had at the last census. The increase of population in Europe must be clothed with cotton. As the Gospel joined with the steamship and the electric wire adds new peoples to the world's civilization, those peoples, the vast myriads of Asia and Africa, must be clothed with cotton grown largely in America.

What a short-sighted policy it is, what economic suicide, for America herself to join with the spinners, the bears of Europe and Asia, to depress the price of cotton.

For 30 years a small group of men, spinners, and those who make money in the cotton futures, have been able to dominate the cotton market and depress the price. They form combines openly, shut down mills, and offer future cotton that has never been planted, at $10 and $15 a bale less than they would have to pay for cotton actually in the market. When buyers step in to take up these offers, the Government interferes and the price goes down all over the world.

GOVERNMENTAL DISCRIMINATION.

Bear combinations of spinners and "spot houses" go on openly unmolested, but a bull combination to handle less than a fiftieth part of a single crop precipitates prosecutions conducted in just the manner best suited to the operations of the bears.

I would like to turn the vision of Members to the possibilities in our reach if we adopt an intelligent attitude toward cotton, both its culture and its manufacture. As long as we sell great quantities of raw cotton abroad, the Nation, its people and its Government, should keep the price of cotton high. But we should not be content with selling raw cotton for others to get the profits in the manufacture and sale of the finished product. It is not raw cotton but the cloth that constitutes the necessity of life and the major profits always go to those who make and sell the finished product.

AMERICA MUST CONTROL CLOTHING OF THE WORLD.

We can and must make and control the clothing of the world. We should proceed on sound economic lines to increase our mills till we spin and weave here in our own country all the cotton that we produce. America would then hold in its hand a permanent power that would bring all the rest of the world to its feet. They would have to come, or else go naked. This power would enable us ultimately to dominate the commerce, the finance, and at last, the policies of the world.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Does the gentleman intend to discuss any further the effect of gambling in futures of cotton?

Mr. HOBSON. I expect at a little later date to bring it up.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. A later date than to-day?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes. I hope to see it made a subject of exhaustive investigation by this House, and in that connection I expect to bring out all the points bearing upon the subject.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. One more question. Will the gentleman at the same time discuss the question of gambling in grain, concerning which I introduced a bill on the first day of this session—to forbid it—following the lines of the cotton bill?

Mr. HOBSON. I can not speak for the committee of investigation, but all of those subjects can be brought up for investigation by one committee or several committees.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. CANTRILL. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to offer a suggestion, that the Department of Justice prosecuted the tobacco farmers of Kentucky when by their own efforts they had raised the price of tobacco from 5 to 15 cents a pound, and sent its officers to Kentucky and dragged Kentucky farmers into the Federal courts and prosecuted them and fined them. I simply offer that as a suggestion to bear out what the gentleman says as to the prosecution of the cotton farmer and the policy of the Republican Party now in control as against the farmer.

Mr. HOBSON. I am glad that the gentleman brings that point out. No policy of government could be more pernicious than that of persecuting those who produce American staples and allowing to go free those who combine to put down the price of those staples.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will take up the thread of my discourse. In achieving this future of greatness the country should look to the South. The South to-day is the greatest undeveloped asset this nation has. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I do not propose on this occasion to discuss the general question of the resources of the South, but I desire to suggest to you who come from sections further developed, from whose districts farmers are going out in search of cheaper lands, that land values in the South are but from one-sixth to one-seventh of what they are in the Middle West. The Agricultural Department has demonstrated—and I have had it done in my district—that by equal care you can produce more on an acre of land there, where the tax value is $10 an acre, than on an acre of land in Illinois, where the tax value is $72 an acre. I wish to suggest further that the completion of the Panama Canal is going to cause the South to be discovered and peopled and land values will advance faster than they ever did in the Middle West. Why should farmers selling their high-price lands in the Middle West go to the cold Canadian northwest or to the arid southwest and buy lands three times as dear as more fertile lands in the salubrious Southern States.

THE SOUTH THE NATURAL HOME OF MANUFACTURING.

But I wish at this juncture to point out that in the great industrial expansion to produce the clothing of the world, the South is the logical region for the factories. The raw material—cotton—is on the spot. The power, both coal and water power are at hand. It is estimated that the South has 60,000 square miles of coal fields, the greatest undeveloped coal fields in the civilized world, and that it has 5,000,000 horsepower of waterfalls available under usual methods and 10,000,000 horsepower ultimately available, more than half of all the undeveloped water power in America. The white population of the South is demonstrating a high capacity for skilled labor when trained. More than two-thirds of all the inland navigable waterways are in the South, most of them flowing to the Gulf, giving short water transportation to tidewater—straight in line for the future center of distribution of world staples.

Nowhere else in this country or in any country can you find the raw materials and the power together in quantity with advantages for transportation. This wonderful combination applies to industries based on iron and industries based on cotton—the two greatest basic materials. Near my district is found great deposits of iron in one range of hills, great deposits of coking coal in the hills in front and limestone for fluxing in the valley between. If any one of you will come down in my district and erect a cotton mill, I will see to it that you are given a coal mine to erect it on, and you can build it in a cotton field that will supply the raw material. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that I regret very much that I did not have an opportunity to hear all of his remarks. What I have heard of them was very interesting and instructive. I want to make this inquiry of the gentleman. Suppose Canada grew cotton, and American cotton were protected by a tariff, would the gentleman be in favor of removing the protection from the cotton grower?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly. You do not have to protect yourself against yourself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Do you regard Canada as yourself?

Mr. HOBSON. Canada does not grow cotton.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I said, suppose Canada grew cotton.

Mr. HOBSON. Precisely.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Evidently the gentleman did not understand me.

Mr. HOBSON. I see. Mr. Chairman, I have just demonstrated that in all the realm of physical science such a supposition is impossible.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Certainly; it is an insupposable case.

Mr. HOBSON. I can not bring myself to leap over impossibilities, any more than nature can over a vacuum.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I wanted to ask the gentleman to draw the long bow of his imagination. He has a very active imagination.

Mr. HOBSON. And I am going to draw it in a few minutes, and I hope to the entire satisfaction of the gentleman, on that same line.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Could not the gentleman draw it now?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes; I could. It would be very simple and easy. If we have natural conditions here that warrant cotton as a great permanent industry, and if our people are the equal of others, particularly if we can demonstrate that they are the superiors of any of their competitors, and especially if we can demonstrate that their natural resources in this supply are superior to those of their competitors, then I would say that they need no protection in the world; and furthermore, that to give them any protection would be tending to build up a wall around them, like trying to keep children inside of a yard instead of letting them go out into the open fields.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me? The gentleman has demonstrated that the cotton grower of the United States has practically a monopoly of cotton production for the world. He has demonstrated that climatic conditions in the South are extremely favorable to cotton growing. Now, I am asking the gentleman to suppose conditions in Canada to be as favorable to the production of cotton as conditions in the Southern States. The gentleman may say that is an insupposable case, but I am asking him to assume that. Then I am asking him to assume protection against Canadian cotton. Then I am asking the gentleman if he would be willing to remove the protection to the cotton grower of the United States?

Mr. HOBSON. I will say to the gentleman that the proposition is very plain in my mind, as a matter of principle. Assuming that this industry could be a permanent one and had passed its infancy I would certainly be willing to see all protection removed. If it could not be a permanently profitable industry we would have to protect it if we wanted it at all. But there are very few industries that as a people we ought to maintain permanently at a loss.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Precisely.

Mr. HOBSON. I will say to the gentleman, as I intended to say a little later, that I am both a protectionist and a free trader.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I understood the gentleman to say he could not suppose an insupposable case, but he seems to be able to do it. The gentleman has evidently drawn his long bow.

Mr. HOBSON. I am sure the gentleman can make his speech later.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. HOBSON. But not for a general discussion of abstractions. Of course it can be applied to other articles, but as applied to cotton——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. One moment. Just a word. It applies to reciprocity, and it applies to the general proposition of fair dealing with the various industrial divisions in this country, and I submit it to the gentleman because he is a fair thinker. I pay him that tribute.

Mr. HOBSON. I appreciate the gentleman's compliment.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman is a man of intellectual integrity, and I have a high regard for the gentleman.

Mr. HOBSON. I think I can return the compliment, which I appreciate.

YOUNG MAN, GO SOUTH.

Coming back to my subject, in the next 20 or 30 years our young men do not have to go to Canada, to the Northwest, to buy $30 land, nor to the Southwest, among the deserts, and resort to artificial irrigation; nor do they have to go to the Tropics or the islands of the seas. The greatest opportunity to grow up with the country ever offered is the opportunity now offered by the South. Here is the greatest field of development that the world has ever seen, with ridiculously cheap lands with great and varied fertility located in the choicest part of the Temperate Zone close to the future center of distribution of the great world staples, with unmatched facilities for water transportation, offering the raw materials and the power for manufacturing in close proximity for the greatest world staples, with possibilities for a monopoly of the greatest of all staples, cotton and its manufactures, the prime necessity of all human life. These marvelous combinations make the South the greatest asset the Nation has ever had. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

THE SOUTH A GREAT SOCIAL AND MORAL ASSET.

Further, this asset is not simply material. In the South to-day over 95 per cent of all the people are descendants of a generation of Americans that signed the Declaration of Independence and fought through the Revolutionary War, the purest American blood in America and probably the purest Anglo-Saxon blood in the world. In my own district the people are 99 per cent American and Anglo-Saxon. I do not depreciate any other strain of blood that is going in to make our Nation great, but it is a fact that each type of blood has its own specialty; and that the Anglo-Saxon type has as its specialty the question of evolving and maintaining free institutions.

In the great wave of materialism and commercialism that has swept this country and is sweeping the whole world and is shaking the foundations of liberty, this country needs the asset that would come if it could draw fully upon this great body of old Anglo-Saxon blood that has escaped this wave.

THE RISE OF THE SOUTH THE OFFSET TO COMMERCIALISM.

An unusually large percentage of these Anglo-Saxons are illiterate because the conditions of wealth, consequent upon the Civil War and the period of reconstruction, have not been such as permitted their education. But the material development of the South will bring to them the benefit of education, and in their full development they will come into this Congress, come into the great councils of all the great parties of this country and the councils of the Nation; they will help wonderfully to bring a return to old-fashioned devotion to principle on the part of public officials, and to strengthen the foundations upon which our institutions must rest if the Government is to endure. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

TARIFF PRINCIPLES.

That brings me to the second part of my discussion, namely, what are the underlying principles that should guide us in voting on this tariff measure or other tariff measures. The gentleman from Illinois, the minority leader, yesterday—and I am sorry he is not here—spent two hours in discrediting schedules and he gave one-half minute to stating his philosophy. Here is his philosophy, namely: He is in favor of the home producer and would not allow articles to come in from abroad because he wants them produced at home. The gentleman has not, as far as I know, expounded any system for raising the revenues necessary for the Government. His philosophy of the tariff, namely, a prohibitory tariff, would leave the Government without revenue. I have stated in discussing the reciprocity bill that I am in favor of direct methods of taxation and favor the progressive substitution of income tax, inheritance tax, and other direct tax laws to produce the revenues of the Government, so that consideration of the tariff might be settled on economic grounds.

THEORY OF HOME INDUSTRIES.

But suppose in giving the work at home you maintain industries at a loss and strike at the general prosperity, the additional work you would supply in the industries in question would be small in comparison to the loss of work in general. The true philosophy would be to have the people constantly engaged in the most profitable employment, buying from others what it would be a loss to produce at home.

If the minority leader were here I would ask him, not only what arrangement he would make for revenue if he cut off importation, but how he explains Republican measures that at times have placed an unwieldy surplus in the Treasury and precipitated extravagance, not to say corruption.

A PROTECTIVE TARIFF AN INIQUITOUS REVENUE MEASURE.

The fact is, at one time the Republican tariff measures formed for protection only produced a deficit and shook public confidence, tending to cause panics; at another time they flood the Treasury with surplus, tending to extravagance and corruption.

It is the Democratic side that has always and now is giving real serious consideration to the question of the revenues while framing the tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For twenty-odd years the tariff has been framed practically without regard to its effect upon the revenues, and our Government for 20 years has had no sound fiscal policy. It has had no real budget. It was really refreshing to hear the leader of the majority yesterday give an exposition of the proper adjustment of tariffs with a view to meeting the revenue needs of the Government, economically administered. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the foundation of a true tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, what is the true foundation of protection? What was enunciated by the fathers who inaugurated protection policies in this country? They stated it in simple words as protection to infant industries.

THE PROTECTION OF THE FATHERS.

The avowed object and the real object of the fathers was to promote the development of our industries by protection in the period of their weakness, so that when grown they would make us independent of the world for those products. In the sense of protecting a legitimate industry in the early stages of its life I would give protection, and such protection is warranted by the laws of life. But the time comes in the life of every organism when the protection needed in the early stages is no longer needed, and being then artificial, if continued will produce retrogression and ultimately degeneracy. Follow the development of a child, for example. A father protects his boy in childhood and youth, and during this period protection promotes the boy's development; but the time comes in the life of the boy when he reaches manhood. If the father keeps him under the parental roof and continues his protection the young man's development will be retarded and he will never reach his full growth. For his own highest development he needs the competition of the world. The same is true with an industry.

LEGITIMATE PROTECTION.

Protect a legitimate industry up to a point where that industry fills the home market and protection is beneficial to the industry, but at that point protection should end. There might be an exception in the case of a product necessary to make our country independent of the rest of the world, for which we have not the natural conditions for competition, where protection would have to be permanent, but this would apply to few, if any, of our great industries.

We are starting new industries from time to time. Let us give them protection. But the great industries that come down to this city every time a tariff measure is framed and clamor for higher and higher protection have all grown up to the proportions of the American market and have reached the period where legitimate protection should end.

CONTINUED HIGH PROTECTION THE MOTHER OF TRUSTS AND THE FATHER OF MONOPOLY.

With a high tariff wall, if the various common producers get together, they can all get the benefit of that wall, and raise their prices up to its level. If they do not come together, if they compete, none of them will get the benefit of the tariff wall, consequently we find producers combining and all our great industries organized to eliminate competition. They either combine openly or they have a gentlemen's agreement. In many cases they have actually consolidated until they control the whole output, or substantially the output, and dictate the price.

Continued protection leads inevitably to monopoly and the oppression that comes with it. Holding a monopoly in a necessity of life gives the power to tax the American people, which as a source of profit is greater than all the gold mines in the world. Tyrants used to tax the people of small resources and accumulate vast treasures, but the power to tax the American people with their one hundred and thirty billions of property is such a vast source of gain that the moment it is acquired the holdings can be doubled, trebled, increased tenfold, and pay dividends.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

This is largely the secret of the high cost of living. This is why we have had such universal rank abuse in watering of stocks, and raising of prices to pay dividends on the watered stock. This is why we have had such mushroom growths of millionaires and multimillionaires. But that is not all. Making the large dividends within this high-tariff wall the stockholders care but little about the great markets of the world where competition causes the dividends to be reasonable.

CORRUPTS POLITICS.

Instead of continuing development the industries give their main attention to fortifying their control or monopoly. They go into politics and hold out great rewards to men and parties for continued favors, they shut down plants, as they have done in Birmingham, as a threat, they precipitate panics, they undertake to destroy statesmen, to chastise parties, to overturn administrations, to intimidate the American people.

What happens to the industry we are supposed to be protecting? Do they continue a healthy development? On the contrary. I realize that we are having an increase of population here by immigration of nearly a million a year, which with the natural increase of population increases the home market, and the industries naturally grow to that market, but for the last 20 years there has been no serious effort on the part of these industries to go out and capture the great markets of the world.

DWARFS THE INDUSTRIES THEMSELVES.

This Nation can never be on a sound, permanent, economic basis until its industries have for their markets the great reservoir of the world's consumption. The perpetuation of these high tariffs beyond their legitimate period is dwarfing the development of the industries themselves. It has reached the second period of the organic life of the Nation's industries, where it is producing degeneracy.

I realize perfectly well what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] had in mind in asking me questions about competition with Canada. He would probably have followed them up by claiming that American labor engaged in these industries needs protection. I do not hesitate to say that when this monopolistic power is acquired labor gets less than it got before, no matter how enormous the profits. The Steel Trust will clear a net dividend greater than all the wages paid to all the labor without volunteering a dollar raise in wages. The truth is that labor engaged in the highly protected industries to-day is the poorest paid labor in America. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

OPPRESSES LABOR.

The supreme power in the hands of a monopoly enables it the better to oppress labor. You do not pay a dollar more for labor than you have to; neither do I; neither does a soulless corporation. No matter how great their profits they undertake to get labor as cheaply as they can. They operate in two ways. At strategic moments they shut down part of their plant. It matters little to them, because they will put up the prices of the commodity to the American people and make the American people bear their losses. They shut down their plants, reduce the demand for labor, and throw labor on the market, and thereby lower the price. Holding a monopoly enables them to wield the weapon of shut-outs, so demoralizing to labor and so harmful to the public. But they are not satisfied with that weapon. They undertake to increase the supply of labor on the market by bringing in aliens. I pointed out in the remarks I made on the reciprocity measure that it is the policy, and a natural policy, for these great industries to promote immigration from Europe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I would ask five minutes more. I do not want to impose upon the gentleman from Alabama, but I would be obliged if he could spare me that much time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional time.

PERVERTS IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HOBSON. As I was saying, the great overprotected industries are at the basis of a large part of our immigration. They fight every immigration law we try to put on the statute books. They reach out to crowded Europe for pauper labor. Pauper labor comes which can not pay its passage, but it comes somehow—some way—and when it comes it does not go out to the farms where, as I pointed out, the demand is so great, but it remains in the cities, remains around the factories, remains at the mouth of the mines, to glut the labor market and put the price of labor down. It is ridiculous to maintain that American labor is now protected in any industry against any pauper labor of Europe. Labor is the one thing that is eternally on the free list in Republican tariff measures. I do not mean to say that American labor, if freed from the grip of monopoly and monopolistic prices, needs any protection against the labor of Europe. I will not take the time now to repeat what I stated in my remarks on reciprocity that the average American laborer turns out $2,450 worth of product a year, the Canadian $1,455, the Australian $900, the Frenchman $640, the Englishman $556, the German $460. The average American laborer produces four times as much as the average European laborer. It is alleged he gets twice the amount of wages. I question it; but, suppose he did? He is then only one-half as well paid as the European laborer for what he produces. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If, instead of being dwarfed by the high tariff, our great industries proceeded systematically to capture their proportion of the world's markets they would seldom if ever shut down plants, but would run plants full time and steadily increase the number of plants. The increasing demand for labor would cause the price of labor to go up, and the laborer, freed from the clutches of monopoly, would find his proportionate share of the profits of production continually increasing while the cost of living continually declined. A proper revision of the tariff would usher in a veritable new era of prosperity for American labor. Thus the most powerful economic reasons demand speedy reform in our tariff policies—the high cost of living, the actual dwarfing of our industries themselves, the great hardships to American labor.

MENACE TO AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are deeper reasons even than these economic ones why we should hasten reform. The perpetuation of such abnormal conditions of taxation is menacing our political institutions. Great interests go into politics and pour vast sums into political campaigns in order to secure privileges at the hands of the victorious party. It is not an overstatement to say that more than once has the popular will been reversed in national elections by money put into doubtful States, and many times has the will of the people been disregarded in the election of Senators or even of Representatives. The successful party, more dependent on great moneyed interests than upon the will of the people, has naturally enacted laws and administered laws with scant regard for the public welfare, and with but slight concern for economy and efficiency. Widespread extravagance, not to say corruption, have been inevitable, and inefficiency has been almost universal. In addition, we can not but view with alarm the effect of continual refusal on the part of the party in power to make legitimate reforms. Dammed up so long, the current of reform is threatening us with the floods of radicalism.

CAUSE OF SECTIONALISM AND BLIGHT UPON STATESMEN.

Furthermore, the availability of the Government for exploitation has caused each interest, each locality, each section to take a narrow, selfish view of the function of government. For 20 years these conditions have been producing parochial statesmen, men really sincere and earnest, who on this floor do not hesitate to advocate unwise policies for the nation, provided only they can gain selfish advantages for their localities, while the National Treasury is considered legitimate prey for anyone to raid. Our statesmen have come to operate for to-day with a magnifying glass turned upon the temporary interests of a district; they should operate with a telescope turned upon the whole world and upon all history to establish policies for a nation that is to endure a thousand years.

PERVERTS THE FUNCTIONS OF GOVERNMENT.

The harmful effect upon our political institutions goes yet deeper and reaches the very conception in the public mind of the functions of government. The true sphere of an enduring government is in the regulating system, leaving the producing and distributing systems to private enterprise. Our tariff system has produced such a perversion in the public mind that one of the great parties in its platform advocates the Government's taking such a part in private enterprise as to insure the profits. No government in the world can long endure that burdens itself with such activities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has been extended for three minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman desires, I will yield 10 minutes more.

Mr. HOBSON. I will be glad to have it, but I will try not to consume it all, as I do not wish to impose on the time of others who are to speak this afternoon.

I wish to complete this thought, Mr. Chairman, namely, that we are tending to produce a condition here in America that is striking at the foundation of our political institutions, namely, the conception in the minds of our people that the Government is something to go out and affect the producing system and the distributing system, for individuals and combinations to get all out of it they can; whereas the Government is founded primarily to be the regulating system, to lay down principles and maintain the administration of justice and equity for and between all the people.

EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY IS THE MAIN OBJECT OF GOVERNMENT.

I lived for three years on the Continent of Europe and I have lived in Asia. I have seen many of the peoples of the world and their systems and have had occasion to see the effect of those systems upon the development of their citizens. The greatest thing in this part of the universe is human life. Human life comes into the world in an embryonic state and has to evolve and develop. The evolution and development of human life is the greatest thing in the world. The primary object of any Government that would fulfill its highest functions is to establish those conditions under which all its people would attain the highest development. Now the law of development is repeated regular exercise of the faculties. In order to have repeated regular exercise of the faculties there must be opportunities for same in regular avocations. In order to realize a maximum of opportunities for all the peoples there must be equality of opportunity between the individuals. Therefore the guarantee of equality of opportunity between its citizens is the highest object of government. It is not only the essence of liberty, but the foundation of progress and development.

EUROPEAN, AMERICAN, CANADIAN.

Let us be concrete and take a young peasant, such as one finds in any country in Europe. He may be endowed by nature with wonderful God-given faculties. Of course there are exceptions, but speaking broadly he is not going to have a chance to fully develop his faculties. His opportunities for exercising them will be limited to a certain small sphere, limited by his own strata of society. Pass to the other stages on up until you get to the nobility and the royalty. Take the crown prince. In many cases I have seen the crown prince would have improved his development if he had gotten down the ax or gone between the handles of the plow.

But he can not. He has to sit on a throne and rule; perhaps the very thing that may ruin his development. With artificial stratification of society, limiting individuals to the activities of one strata only, the average citizen in each strata falls short in his development, and the nation must fall short in the aggregate. Come to America. The system that our forefathers founded and that we should perpetuate and develop is a system whose very essence is a guarantee, not only of equality of public burdens, but equality of public opportunities. This tells the secret many have wondered at of America's marvelous growth, the marvel of all history. This tells the secret of the contrast between America's growth and the growth of Canada, where the start was made at the same time, under similar physical conditions and natural advantages. On one side of an imaginary line is the undeveloped country; on the other populous cities.

REPUBLICAN HERESY.

The most alarming event of modern times is the appearance in the platform of a great party of a plank that calls upon the Government to guarantee "profits" to those on the lists of protection. This plank does violence to the American conception of the functions of government. It takes the Government into the forbidden spheres of business, and causes it to fail in its duty in the legitimate sphere of regulation.

The policy defined by this plank, persisted in, would lead straight to the permanent development of privileged classes and the disruption of free institutions. Until that plank is purged from the platform and from the purposes of the Republican Party it should forfeit the support of all independent citizens who hold country above party.

OUR GLORIOUS INHERITANCE.

It is time for us as a people to restore the conditions bequeathed to us by our forefathers—the conditions of equality, of opportunity—where any American boy, no matter where born, no matter how humble the circumstances of his birth, no matter how richly endowed with capacity, can develop his faculties to the utmost, by having a free access, with equal chances of success, to any occupation, any business, any profession. Any American boy should have access to the development that comes with grappling with great problems of his day—economic, political, social. Every American boy should have a clear field, without let or hindrance, for leadership, for holding positions of honor and trust at the hands of his State, at the hands of his country. With our institutions preserved, the humblest-born American boy can have the developing uplift of the feeling that he in a devoted life can help shape his country's great world policies; and with such a country as we have, advocating such wonderful principles of equal justice and peace and brotherhood over all the earth, that he can help mold the destiny of mankind, effecting the happiness of myriads yet unborn. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

AMERICA AND ROME.

Alongside the possibilities of such a noble ambition here in America, the ambitions of history, that have so fascinated us, like those of Alexander, Caesar, Napoleon, all combined are as naught. There is but one parallel in the history of this world, and that came about as the result of equality of opportunity. That was when Rome had liberty, and under equality of opportunity extended its empire to the uttermost corners of the earth. Then the old Romans proudly proclaimed that to be a Roman was greater than a king.

The time is near at hand when we, in restoring the integrity of the institutions that our forefathers founded, can proclaim that to be an American is greater than an emperor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A CALL FOR PATRIOTISM.

The time has come for a new baptism of patriotism and devotion to country, for a return to the basic principles of government established by our fathers, so that we can successfully meet the great problems that have come upon us in an industrial age, and in solving them not only perpetuate the institutions of our fathers but make them even stronger and nobler than we have received them. I believe that the adoption of this measure is a step—an important step, though only a step—in that direction. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to make a request.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask how the balance of time stands in this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has used 4 hours and 18 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has used 4 hours and 26 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Four hours and twenty-six minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Eight minutes difference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield 30 minutes on that side.

Mr. DALZELL. All right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitancy in saying that we have listened to one of the most interesting speeches that I have heard delivered on this floor. I believe that if we would only follow out the line suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] we would not have very much trouble in formulating a revenue measure. The trouble has been that we use every tariff bill as a political football, each side of the House seeking to make political capital out of it. If the spirit which the gentleman suggests could control all of us; if we could broaden out somewhat and get away from the idea that each of us is interested only in the things that especially affect our individual districts; if we could be statesmen in the broadest sense of the word, the people of this country would be very much better off.

But in the past—and, so far as I know, throughout the entire history of this country—the lines proceeded upon have been directly the opposite of this idea. For years the selfish idea of protection has prevailed in this country—protection not to the whole people, protection not to all the people alike, but protection to certain individuals engaged in certain special lines of business. In other words the heel of the protectionist has been upon the necks of the farmers and the laboring people of this country for a great many years, but now, it seems to me, the opportunity has come for us to remove said heel and, by this bill, to give the people of this country many of the prime necessities of life duty free.

I feel that I can say with the good old poet—

This is the day I long have sought
And mourned because I found it not.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am looking forward to the day, which I hope is not far distant, when it can be announced that three-fourths of the States of the Union have adopted the income-tax amendment to the Constitution, after which time we can enact a graduated income-tax law which will compel the wealth of this country to bear its just proportion of the burdens of government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But until that time, Mr. Chairman, every sane man realizes that the expenses of the Government will go on, and that Congress must provide means for meeting those expenses. Experience has taught us that in order that money enough can be provided to meet these expenses about $350,000,000 annually must be raised by a duty on imports. Therefore it is utterly impossible for us to put all the things on the free list that we would like to put there. The other day we passed through this House the Canadian reciprocity bill, which places upon the free list certain necessities of life, and reduced the present tariff on others, but that agreement only affected articles of import between the United States and Canada. I did not fully agree with the terms of that trade pact, but I believed that it was a step in the right direction, hence I voted for it, and I believe this bill, known as the farmers' free list, is several steps in the right direction, for it not only applies to the importations of the things mentioned in the bill from Canada, but from all the countries of the world.

Mr. Chairman, I sat for a week and listened to the debate on the reciprocity bill, and confess to you that it was amusing to hear the reasons assigned by the opponents of that bill for opposing it. Without a single exception, I believe, they put their opposition on the ground, as they claimed, that the farmer was being discriminated against. Why, here was my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] agonizing over the condition of the poor farmer, when, in fact, there is not a farm in 150 miles of Pittsburg, his home. Of course I would not intimate that the gentlemen who opposed that bill were not entirely sincere in their solicitude for the farmers of the country, but I could not help but notice that each one of them who were here in the last Congress, except some of our insurgent friends, voted against free lumber when the Payne-Aldrich bill was before the House, and the Canadian reciprocity bill puts lumber on the free list. Being human, I could not help but wonder if the fact that lumber was put on the free list had anything to do with their opposition to that bill. I presume not, or else they would have been frank enough to have said so. If it did, however, I would suggest that if they had bottled up all the briny tears they shed in sympathy for the poor farmer they could have run their sawmills by water power, in which event I am sure they could compete with Canada without the aid of a tariff on lumber. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss this pending bill in its relation to the farmer, and it does immediately and directly concern him.

This bill places upon the free list the following articles: Agricultural implements; cotton bagging and ties; boots, shoes, harness, saddlery, and other leather products; fencing wire; lumber; sewing machines; salt, and so forth.

Every one of these articles are prime necessities of life—things which the farmers of this country must buy.

I congratulate the Democrats of the Ways and Means Committee in bringing out this bill, for it goes far toward redeeming the promises which my party made to the people.

And, Mr. Chairman, while I am congratulating, let me congratulate my party on the splendid energy, determination, speed, and unanimity which it is proceeding to make good every promise it made to the country.

True to the promises which we made to the people, we promptly took from the Speaker the power to appoint the standing committees of the House and placed that power where it belongs, in the membership of the House, making the Speaker what the Constitution intended he should be, a presiding officer and not a czar. And, without the aid of the objectionable special rule or limiting debate or shutting off amendments, we have in less than three weeks passed through the House the following important bills, to wit:

First. A joint resolution providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people.

Second. A drastic publicity law, known as the Rucker bill, requiring all political parties, not more than 15 days nor less than 10 days prior to any election, to publish a detailed statement of all contributions made above $10, giving name of contributor, also how disbursed, and to file a like supplemental statement every three days thereafter down to the day of election, intending thereby to prevent corruption at the ballot box by the use of large sums of money.

Third. Canadian reciprocity.

And now we are considering, and will in a day or two pass, this free-list bill.

This record has certainly never been equaled by any political party. We will follow this up with an adjustment of the woolen, the cotton, steel, and other schedules in their order.

It seems to me that every citizen who believes in a government of the people, by the people, and for the people ought to be proud of this record.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having felicitated my party upon this splendid record made and to be made in a few weeks, I must get back to a discussion of this bill.

The opponents of this bill and the reciprocity bill, and they are practically the same people, talk about injuring the farmer by taking the tariff off his products. I am loath to believe that there is any man on this floor who knows so little as to actually believe that a tariff on wheat, corn, or other cereals adds to the price of these things to the farmer.

I am reminded that our erstwhile distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], did the other day, in a speech on the reciprocity bill, in a sort of half-hearted way deny that the price of the farmers' wheat was fixed in foreign markets. Of course men sometimes, in the interest of consistency, take positions they otherwise would not take, for if he had admitted that the price of our wheat was fixed in foreign markets he would have given his whole case away. But the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] did read into that speech an admission of the gentleman from Illinois, made in a speech on this floor in 1894, that the price of our wheat is fixed in the foreign markets. The colloquy was between Mr. Simpson, of Kansas, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as follows:

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?
Mr. CANNON. Certainly.
Mr. SIMPSON. Does the gentleman not admit that we are now competing in Europe with the different countries of the Old World for the sale of our wheat?
Mr. CANNON. Certainly; with Roumania, Russia, and India.
Mr. SIMPSON. Then the gentleman will admit that the price we receive there fixes the price of our article not only in the United States but in the foreign markets?
Mr. CANNON. Certainly; all prices are regulated by the prevailing market, wherever it is.

Now, if that statement was true—and it was—in 1894 it is true in this good year of our Lord 1911. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I stated two years ago in a speech which I made on this floor when we were discussing the Payne-Aldrich bill that "no man is protected who is compelled to sell his products in the open markets of the world." This was and is a true statement of a fact.

Let us take wheat, for an example. There has never been a year since I can remember when the farmers of this country did not raise a surplus. Of necessity they must find a market for this surplus. This market can only be found outside the United States. The moment the farmers' wheat passes beyond the limits of the United States the pretended tariff on it can be of no effect. His wheat goes to Liverpool, and when offered for sale there it comes in competition with the surplus wheat of Canada, Australia, Russia, India, and every other country that raises a surplus of wheat, and the price it brings is fixed in this open market. And the price fixed in this open market controls the price here. Therefore, how can a tariff on wheat benefit the farmer? And the same is true of corn, oats, and other cereals. In view of these facts, then, how can reciprocity with Canada injure our farmers? To be more specific: We raise a surplus each year, so does Canada, and both countries seek the same market in Europe and the price of wheat of both countries is fixed there, where there is no tariff, and the price there fixes the price both here and in Canada, and the only material difference there can be in the prices in the different localities is the cost of transportation to market and elevator facilities. Of course I recognize the fact that the price of these staples is sometimes affected temporarily by the grain gamblers, whom I wish to God were in the bottom of the sea. Democrats know that this is true, and in order that my Republican friends may be convinced that I am right I will quote from high Republican authority.

Hon. James Wilson, the present Republican Secretary of Agriculture, in a letter written by him to the National Grange on February 9, 1911, among other things said:

> There is a difference of 10 or more cents a bushel on wheat and other cereals between the markets of Winnipeg and Minneapolis, but this difference is fully explained by the lack of transportation and elevator facilities and by the greater difficulty that the Canadian farmer now has in point of economic carriage from the Northwest to Liverpool, where by the sale of the world's surplus the price of wheat is fixed for the world.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Again, Mr. Secretary Wilson says:

> The United States produces surplus wheat above domestic requirements. This surplus production is sold in foreign countries. The price of our exported surplus is governed by the world's requirements, being regulated by the law of supply and demand, and the price of wheat in the United States, while we are exporting, is governed by the price at which the surplus is sold, as a general proposition. Occasionally wheat corners may interfere with the law of supply and demand and temporarily affect the price.

If this be true, then how can the farmer be hurt by reciprocity with Canada?

Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country are intelligent. They know that when you talk about a tariff on their wheat, corn, oats, and other cereals being a benefit to them that you are only seeking to deceive them. They know, or at least many of them do, that the tariff was put on these things as an excuse for putting a high tariff on certain manufactured articles which they are compelled to buy.

Mr. Chairman, to show that all the farmers are not fooled by the siren voice of the protectionist, I want to read to you a letter which I received the other day from a farmer in my district. I am not authorized by him to use this letter for publication, consequently will suppress the name and place.

The letter is as follows:

> There seems to be well-organized effort to create the impression that the farmers, regardless of party, are opposed to Canadian reciprocity, and I presume that you have received numerous letters to this effect. I have heard several expressions, but invariably from Republicans.
>
> Democrats condemn the principle involved in the pact—that is, "free raw material and little or no reduction in the manufactured product"—but they know that "protection" on farm products, wool excepted, is a farce and a humbug, levied only to deceive and furnish an excuse for high duties on manufactured goods, and the sooner the fallacy is exposed and the "bundle separated" the earlier we will be relieved from the extortion from which we have suffered. Rest assured that this noise is made by protectionist and his dupes, and that the Democrats who till the soil have no part in it.
>
> I hope that you may not only be able to pass this bill, but several schedule bills during the extra session.

Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. PROUTY. Is this gentleman engaged in raising sheep?

Mr. HAMLIN. No. He may have a few sheep, but he is a large farmer in one of the best agricultural counties in the United States.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will.

Mr. STANLEY. His letter certainly reads like that of a man who did not have the head of a sheep. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is the gentleman from Missouri able to tell the reason of the exception of wool in this economic letter?

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not know what was in the mind of the writer——

Mr. STANLEY. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me, I will say that it is because we do not produce as much wool as we use. Where we import a commodity the market to which it is exported fixes the price, as was said by Secretary Wilson, by Adam Smith, by John Stuart Mill, and every other man who ever lived who wrote and thought on the subject of political economy.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to finish my answer. As I said, I can not tell what was in the mind of the writer of that letter; but if you had asked me why wool was excepted, I should give the answer that has been given by my friend from Kentucky, with this addition, that the reason that protection amounts to nothing upon wheat and corn and other cereals is because we raise a surplus in this country and are compelled to find a market beyond the limits of the United States.

Now, that is not true of wool. We do not raise a surplus of wool, and the sheep industry in this country seems to be declining. I will not say that the tariff on wool may not be of some benefit to the farmer, and I presume that is what this farmer had in mind; but he had sense enough to know—which seems to be a knowledge beyond that possessed by some gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber—that the tariff on wheat, corn, and oats is no protection to the farmer.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit an observation on that subject?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; but I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. The statement which the gentleman has been making is clear that the price of commodities where there is a surplus raised is controlled by the price in the market where the surplus is disposed of. I think it is essential that an exception should be noted that where the home product is controlled by a trust it may have a higher home price than the foreign price.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hinted at that a moment ago. The control of any article of commerce by a trust creates an abnormal condition, sets aside the law of supply and demand, and creates fictitious prices.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Now, will the gentleman extend to me the same courtesy that he did to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; if the gentleman will not take up any more time than did the gentleman from Texas, for my time is limited.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I followed with great interest the development by the gentleman of the argument that the market where the surplus is disposed of controls, but I think the fallacy of the argument lies in this, that the world's market may control or have great influence upon the surplus of that product seeking a market, but it has but little influence on the large proportion we consume in our own country, unless the world's open market can become a competitor to supply our home consumption, which Liverpool can not do as to wheat and corn.

Mr. HAMLIN. The fallacy of the gentleman's statement is demonstrated by actual conditions. The gentleman never heard of a farmer going into town and saying, "I am going to have so much a bushel for my wheat." The farmer realizes that he is at the mercy of the markets of the world, and his first inquiry is, "What is wheat worth to-day?" And the man who is buying wheat can not give him this information until he first hears from either the Chicago or New York market, and these markets will give out no prices until they have heard from Liverpool indicating what the market price is there that day.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. On the other hand, as a matter that I have observed a great deal, I desire to state that there is scarcely a day in the northwestern wheat market but what the price obtained by the farmer in the Dakotas is larger by quite a considerable sum than the price paid in Liverpool, minus the freight. In other words, the American market in the Northwest at the present time, because of a large demand for the consumption of wheat among 92,000,000 people, which is a protected market to the American farmer, yields a higher price than he could get for the same commodity if he were compelled to sell it abroad.

Mr. HAMLIN. But the official reports do not bear out the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The official reports do.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then if that be true the gentleman can put the official figures in his speech

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will put it in this speech of the gentleman if he will give me the time.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not the time; the gentleman will doubtless make a speech in his own time.

Mr. Chairman, the enemies of this bill and also of the reciprocity bill, and who are all protectionists in some degree—ranging from an insurgent Republican whose opinion on any proposition is best represented by an "x," stated algebraically, to a Pennsylvania standpatter—accuse us of bringing in the farmer free-list bill, so called, to pacify, and in a way compensate, the farmer for the injury which will be done him by this reciprocity with Canada.

Of course that allegation is not warranted by the facts. Reciprocity with Canada will not hurt the farmer; therefore he needs no compensating law.

Reciprocity with a country that buys more of the products of our farmers each year than we buy of them can not hurt our farmers. And the official figures show that that is what Canada does. In five years, ending June 30 last—

We sold in Canada	$886,417,376
Canada sold to us	393,913,673
Difference in our favor	492,503,703

It seems to me that no tariff ought to stand between us and such a country, for the more trade we can have with them the better it is for us.

Let us take some of the principal products of our farms, and it applies especially to our Missouri farms, and see whether reciprocity with Canada can injure our farmers.

Government statistics show that for five years ending June 30 last:

Horses:
We sold in Canada	$14,172,075
Canada sold to us	2,549,201
Difference in our favor	11,622,874
Cattle:
We sold in Canada	1,578,179
Canada sold to us	1,193,796
Difference in our favor	384,383
Meat and dairy:
We sold in Canada	17,011,017
Canada sold to us	904,191
Difference in our favor	16,106,826
Breadstuffs:
We sold in Canada	31,596,556
Canada sold to us	6,679,884
Difference in our favor	24,916,672

Of these items we sold to Canada $53,030,755 more than Canada sold to us.

No, Mr. Chairman, this bill now before the House is not brought in to compensate the farmers on account of any anticipated injury to them by reason of reciprocity with Canada, but it is brought in to compensate them and other laboring people in a measure for having submitted for years to being robbed by a high tariff which you Republicans imposed upon the things which they were compelled to buy for the benefit of a few people who have contributed the money to keep you in power. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And they are the very men who are behind this propaganda to try to make the farmers believe that reciprocity will hurt them.

The RECORD shows that there were 79 of you Republicans who voted against the reciprocity bill because you said that you believed it discriminated against the farmer.

If you are sincere in your protestation of friendship for the farmers you will vote for this bill, because it puts the things which he is compelled to buy on the free list, as follows:

FARM IMPLEMENTS.

Plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins, farm wagons and farm carts, and all other agricultural implements of any kind and description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

SHOES AND LEATHER.

Grain, buff, split, rough and sole leather, band, bend, or belting leather, boots and shoes made wholly or in chief value of leather made from cattle hides and cattle skins of whatever weight, of cattle of the bovine species, including calfskins; and harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather; and leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps or other forms suitable for conversion into manufactured articles.

FENCING WIRE.

Barbed fence wire, wire rods, wire strands or wire rope, wire woven or manufactured for wire fencing, and other kinds of wire suitable for fencing, including wire staples.

LUMBER.

Timber, hewn, sided, or squared, round timber used for spars or in building wharves, shingles, laths, fencing posts, sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed, except boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, of lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods.

SEWING MACHINES

Sewing machines, and all parts thereof.

Salt, whether in bulk or in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages.

We are told by certain Republicans on this side of the House that this free-list bill will not pass the Senate and will therefore never become a law. As to that I admit I do not know. I confess that I am not in the confidence of the Republican Party, but whether a Republican Senate will pass this bill or not, or if it does whether a Republican President will sign it or not, will not deter us as Democrats from keeping faith with the people. We will do our duty and pass it through the House where we have the majority and are responsible, and then if your party in the Senate wants to turn it down you can take the responsibility. In the language of our admirable leader, Mr. UNDERWOOD, I quote:

I will say to the gentleman that the bill puts on the free list agricultural implements, fencing wire, and salt and free lumber for your northern farmers. It puts on the free list free cotton bagging and free hides for the southern farmers.

It puts on the free list free meats, free bread, free salt for the people who live in the cities and who are crying for cheaper food products to reduce the cost of living. I say to you that when this bill arrives in the United States Senate, if it is not acted upon, there will be a judgment day on the Republican side of the Senate, and if the President does not sign it there will be a judgment day at the White House.

And I will add to this statement that if the Republican Party refuses to pass this bill through the Senate or the President refuses to approve it there will be a Missouri Democrat placed in the White House and an Alabama Democrat in the Speaker's chair. [Applause.]

My Democratic colleagues, we told the people that if they would place us in power we would enact laws which would tend to cheapen the cost of living. We told them that we would try to relieve them of the burdens of the infamous trust in this country. Measured by either of these standards, this bill stands the test, and we can well afford to give it our hearty support.

Every class of articles mentioned in this bill is now controlled by a trust. What are they? The Agricultural Implement Trust, the Steel Trust, the Leather Trust, the Salt Trust, the Lumber Trust, the Meat Trust, Jute Bagging Trust—some of the largest trusts of the country which have secured a monopoly on these necessities of life by virtue of being protected by a tariff on these things and have forced up prices beyond reason or endurance.

This bill puts their products on the free list.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that in revising the tariff we are inviting a relentless war with the entrenched special interests that have enjoyed many years' special privileges under the McKinley, Dingley, and Payne-Aldrich tariff laws. They will not surrender without a terrific struggle.

These interests have so long, under these laws, been permitted to plunder the people that they have come to believe that it is a kind of a divine right they have. And with their increased riches they have grown arrogant. They do not hesitate to attack any man or set of men who dares for a moment to question their right to these special privileges. Only two short years ago these same fellows were freely dropping their shekels into the Republican campaign contribution box and singing the praises of Mr. Taft. He was elected, and now that he shows some little signs of recognizing that there are other people on earth besides these "captains of industries" who deserve some little consideration they turn upon him and make a dire prediction as to his political future that would do credit to the most optimistic Democrat.

Listen to what their organ, the American Economist, has to say this week:

[Correspondence American Economist.]

WASHINGTON, April 20.

If President Taft is able to retain his complacent and cheerful smile in the midst of existing conditions in Congress, and in the political arena of the United States generally he is giving a splendid imitation of that famous Emperor of Rome who is said to have performed on a violin while a conflagration was in progress.

Never in the history of the Republican Party has there been such an exhibition of want of leadership by the head of a party as has been displayed by President Taft in dealing with the tariff question and the principles for which his party stands in its platform. Indeed, so lamentable is the situation that few Republicans at this time are found willing to hazard any prediction other than that President Taft must be the nominee of his party in 1912, because no other Republican will accept the nomination, and that Mr. Taft will be the worst defeated candidate since William J. Bryan ran for the office in 1896.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

SO MOTE IT BE!

Thus it will be seen that these selfish special interests, the beneficiaries of a high tariff, know no friends but self, worship no god but Mammon, and will stop at nothing to accomplish their selfish purposes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why should not the things mentioned in this bill be put on the free list? The manufacturers of agricultural implements are supplying the farmers of the world with implements, often at a lower price than they will sell to our farmers here at home.

The Steel Trust invades every market in the known world.

The American-made shoe is worn by all civilized people of the earth. And so it is with the other articles mentioned in the bill. I am glad that they can go out and conquer the markets of the world, but if they can compete in foreign markets after paying transportation charges it is worse than ridiculous to say that they can not compete here at home without the aid of a tariff.

Let us have a "square deal."

No difference what we may do, Mr. Chairman, our actions will be misrepresented, our motives questioned, and our purpose maligned by these selfish interests; but as men we ought to have the courage of our convictions and do what we believe to be right and abide by the consequences. As I have often said, I have an abiding faith in the judgment, intelligence, and fairness of the people, and as for me I am willing to submit my record to them.

I realize that it requires time to accomplish these great reforms and that we will be unable to do many things that we would like to do, but let us do our utmost to keep our promises to the people, and in doing this our conduct will meet with their approval and, what is even more comforting, the approval of our own consciences. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the debate in this House on reciprocity; I have listened to the debate on the bill that is now before the House, and two years ago I listened to the debate on the tariff bill that was passed at that time. I have been impressed during all this time with the idea that the agricultural interests have not always had fair consideration in legislation involving questions of the tariff. It has always been that gentlemen on that side of the House have undertaken to legislate against the farmer in tariff legislation, and it sometimes happens that there are gentlemen on this side, who represent districts that are not agricultural, who are willing to join the Democratic free-trade party and sacrifice the farmer for the benefit of other interests. Gentlemen on that side of the House are pleased to call this a bill in the interest of the American farmer. If they imagine that they can fool the farmers of the North and West by legislation which opens his markets, the markets of the United States, to everything which he produces; if they think they can make him believe that that is in his interest, they are very much mistaken. To the gentlemen on this side of the House who call themselves protectionists, but who vote for free farm products, I desire to say that when you discriminate between industries that need protection you threaten the very existence of the protective principle.

It can not be justly said that Members on this side of the House who are demanding protection for agricultural products act from any selfish motive, nor can it be said that the farmers of the country who demand protection for the product of their labor are selfish. The great mass of American farmers do not deny protection to American manufacturers. They believe protection should be granted wherever needed, and only ask the same equal protection under the law for that which they produce. The farmers of the country during the history of protective tariff have patiently paid tribute to the infant industries. They have done much to help build up this great home market, with a hope that they would have the right to enjoy it as against other agricultural countries. When the products of foreign farms sought to invade that market the Republican Party gave the farmer protection in the McKinley law. You gentlemen on that side very promptly repealed that law, and in a great measure deprived the farmer of that equal protection to which he was entitled. It was restored to him again in the Dingley tariff, and under that law the farmer has enjoyed a reasonable degree of prosperity, due to the fact that he was not at the mercy of competition from cheaper farm products of other countries.

No sooner is the Democratic Party again clothed with power in this House than it, true to its traditions, makes this onslaught on the American farmer.

Some gentlemen on that side have deplored, with seeming regret, that there should be a spirit of sectionalism develop in this debate. The first to suggest a spirit of sectionalism was the leader on that side, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

In his opening speech on the bill he said the Republican Party had seen fit to place binding twine, used by farmers of the North and West to bind their grain, on the free list, but had left cotton ties, used by the farmers of the South to bind their cotton, on the protected list. So he is the gentleman who first injected that question into this debate. Let me call attention of gentlemen on that side and on this who represent States like Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, and all the great Northwest—the States that produce the sheep and cattle, the States that produce the wheat, the oats, and the barley—to some of the things contained in this farmers' free list. This bill proposes to open our markets free of duty to all the meats and breadstuffs of all the world. Canadian reciprocity admits free from Canada cattle, sheep, swine, wheat, oats, and barley, and all things produced on our farms.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman consider that cattle, sheep, horses, and stock are raised in Texas and the South just as much as they are in the West?

Mr. STERLING. Yes. Texas produces a great many cattle and sheep.

Mr. HARDY. Then why is that a matter of sectionalism?

Mr. STERLING. It is not. I am not charging the gentleman with a spirit of sectionalism. I predict that the gentleman from Texas, when he realizes the effect of this legislation on the cattle industry of that great State, and his constituents call his attention to the fact that we are admitting beef and mutton free from Mexico, will regret his action with reference to this legislation.

Mr. HARDY. That may be; I do not think it will. But the question I was asking was whether that was sectional or not.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas, under our present tariff law there was imported from Mexico, in 1909, 65,000 head of cattle. The year before there was brought into this country from Mexico 100,000 head of cattle, and if that State does not feel this invasion of Mexican cattle now they will feel it later when cattle from Mexico, raised on cheaper land by cheaper labor, come into the American market without paying any tariff duty.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Will that seem like sectionalism and favoring our part of the country?

Mr. STERLING. I am not saying the gentleman from Texas, or anyone, is acting in that spirit. I am seeking to answer what has been injected into this debate on that question by gentlemen on that side. Now, let me call the attention of gentlemen on both sides who represent States like New York and the New England States and Michigan and Wisconsin—States that produce poultry and butter and cheese and fruits—that all these things come into our markets free under Canadian reciprocity.

And thus it is when we consider these two Democratic measures together, Canadian reciprocity and the farmers' free list, these twin enemies of agriculture, the farmers of the North and West are brought into free competition with the world in the production of cattle, sheep, swine, wheat, corn, oats, barley, hay, dairy products, poultry, vegetables, and fruit, everything that is produced by the farmers in the States which we represent.

On the other hand, this farmers' free list does not make sugar free. Rice is still on the protected list; lemons, oranges, and peanuts will still enjoy protection; and, singularly, these are products of the farms of the South. I think some of them, at least, are entitled to protection—to that same degree of protection to which the farm products of the North and West are entitled. Under the Republican doctrine, which is now and always has been as broad as the Union, all of these things are entitled to that protection which measures the difference in the cost of production here and abroad. These industries of the South came to the Republican Party for that protection, and they got it. They accepted it, and it is evident that gentlemen on that side are willing to retain it. In my opinion, these plain truths are sufficient to show to the country that the Republican Party is not now and never has been sectional in its administration of the protective system.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many States in the South produce sugar?

Mr. STERLING. One, mainly. I presume that Louisiana produces most of the sugar.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is the only Southern State that does produce it.

Mr. STERLING. What difference does it make? It is produced in the South, and it is essentially a southern industry, and these gentlemen think it ought to be protected. I will say, further, that when the Republican Party sought to reduce the tariff on sugar just to the amount of 5 cents per 100 pounds, practically every man on that side voted against that reduction by voting against the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not like to interfere with the gentleman's remarks, but still I would like an answer to my question.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. I thought I answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You spoke of sugar as a southern product. So far as I know there is only one State in the South that produces any sugar at all. Now, how many northern States are engaged in raising sugar?

Mr. STERLING. The South produces the bulk of the sugar. You gentlemen that represent the sugar-producing districts of the South have demanded protection all the time, and the Republican Party has given it to you; and they have not given it to you because it is a southern industry, but because it is an American industry. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, I would like to say a word in reply to the gentleman, if he will yield.

Mr. STERLING. I do not yield for a speech, only for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I wanted to say that there are lots of people here who do not ask for protection on anything.

Mr. STERLING. This free list admits, free of duty, biscuits, bread, wafers, and similar articles when not sweetened. It even seeks to deprive the baker in this country of an equal chance in the American market for the product of his labor, except when his product contains sugar. Why this distinction between plain and sweetened bread and wafers? There may be some good reason for it, but I am unable to understand what that reason is. Is it because the gentlemen are so diligent and so careful of the rights of the Sugar Trust that they even except the biscuits that are produced from the wheat of the northern farmer if they happen to contain the ingredient of sugar that happens to come from the South? What shall we say to our constituents when they ask why this distinction between the products of the North and the products of the South? It will not be sufficient to say that we were obeying the edicts of the party caucus.

The gentleman [Mr. KITCHIN] who opened the debate on that side on reciprocity boldly declared that the purpose of the Democratic Congress was the destruction of those laws that had been passed by the Republican Party in recent years. I want to say that, in my judgment, they are proceeding very rapidly in that direction. They are proceeding, as the first step, to repeal the very laws under which the American people have prospered in the last 15 years more than they had ever prospered in the same period in all the history of the country. It being their purpose, however, to tear down, they are proceeding effectively to that end by first assailing the farmer. On his success and prosperity depend the success and prosperity of all. He is the foundation stone of the whole structure.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I interrupt the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. STERLING. I will.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I desire to inform the gentleman that he is mistaken about what we are insisting on. We are insisting on striking down the tariff barrier that keeps American cattle, American corn, American wheat, American farm products from being sold in Canada; and in consideration for taking our commodities into Canada, to get their tariff out of our way, we are willing to take ours out of their way, because the balance of trade is in our favor.

Mr. STERLING. If that is the purpose of that side of the House, they ought to introduce bills along that line.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is precisely what it is.

Mr. STERLING. The gentleman should suggest to that side of the House, who are now in the majority, that that should be the purpose of his party.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we are selling more farm products in Canada than Canada sells in the United States, and by increasing the facilities for trade we are benefiting and not injuring the farmers.

Mr. STERLING. That is due to the fact that we are protecting agricultural products under Republican legislation. Is it not well enough to let that condition alone? Why destroy that situation? We do not want Canadian agricultural products to come into this country in excess of what we send there.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Have they not had protection against us?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and will continue to have it on about everything which we export to Canada.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I ask the gentleman if the Canadian tariff has not been an impediment against us as much as ours has been an impediment against them? I presume the gentleman wants to put the case fairly before the country, and those are the facts borne out by the statistics.

Mr. STERLING. I have investigated somewhat the question of our trade with Canada. I know that when the former similar reciprocal trade treaty between the two countries was abrogated in 1866 the balance of trade was $8,000,000 in favor of Canada. Since that treaty was abrogated the volume of trade has not only increased year after year, with very great regularity, but the balance of trade has changed, until now it is $120,000,000 in our favor.

Now, I ask, Why change a trade relation that has developed so splendidly for the American people?

Going back to the suggestion that I made awhile ago, that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] had boldly proclaimed to the House and to the country that it was the purpose of his party to tear down the splendid legislation under which prosperity had been built up, Canadian reciprocity is the first step in that direction, and this free-list bill is the second. The gentleman was no false oracle. This new majority has come not to build up, but to destroy. This can be said of you: You are true to your history and your traditions. You destroyed before when you were given power, and you will do so again.

It is said that the provisions of this bill will compensate the farmer for injuries committed against him in the bill for Canadian reciprocity. If, as you contended when Canadian reciprocity was before the House, it would not injure the farmer, what is the need of compensation? If you are sincere that that bill would not wound agriculture, why this balm to heal the wounds?

Let us see what it is you offer as compensation to the American farmer for throwing this great market open to the agricultural products of the world. You have placed agricultural implements, boots and shoes, lumber, and fence wire on the free list. What assurance can you give us that this will reduce the cost of these commodities to the consumer? Gentlemen on that side of the House and some on this told us two years ago that if Congress would put hides on the free list it would reduce the cost of shoes to the consumer. I did not believe you then, and I do not believe you now. Hides were placed on the free list, under the tariff act of 1909, and the duty on boots and shoes was greatly reduced. Hides have gone down in price to the farmer, until now he gets from $3 to $6 less for hides than he did then. Shoes have gone up in price, until the American consumer is paying a little more than he did when hides were protected. You can not fool the American people with this false prophecy a second time.

Nor do I understand the force of your argument when you say that if farm implements be placed on the free list they will be bought cheaper by the American farmer. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] discussed that question to-day and gave us some very important statistics, which proved conclusively in my mind that cheaper farm implements would not result from this legislation. A number of gentlemen have charged very freely that the price of these things is controlled by monopoly. If that be so, they will still be controlled by monopoly after this bill becomes a law. The gentleman from Kentucky called attention to the fact that the manufacturers of farm implements in the United States were exporting $28,000,000 worth every year. They are not only masters of the market here, but likewise in foreign countries. If other nations can not compete in their own countries with American manufacturers in this line of products, how can they compete in our own markets for the trade of the American farmer, with or without the tariff?

I agree with you that lumber should be on the free list, not that it would give cheaper lumber to the American consumer, for in my opinion the price of lumber to the consumer is largely fixed by trade agreements, and that price would be so fixed, whether it comes from our own soil or from Canadian soil. I would be glad, however, to see lumber coming from Canada to conserve, as far as possible, the remnants of our fading forests, and I would cheerfully vote again, as I have done in the past, for free lumber if you gentlemen on that side of the House will present the question freed from this unwise and unjust proposition that our markets shall be opened to the farm products of all the world.

It was only a few days since that your leader [Mr. UNDERWOOD] proclaimed to the House that you proposed to revise the tariff one schedule at a time. If that is your sincere intention, why do you present this bill in this form, containing articles from numerous schedules in the tariff law?

Give to the Members on both sides of this House the opportunity to cast their votes on these propositions separately. By this bill you admit a very little good legislation in order to get through a great deal of bad and ruinous legislation. When you ask the farmer to sell all of his great products in a free market in order to buy his little lumber in a free market he will say to you that your exchange of markets is unfair to him and the price you demand is too high.

What will be the result if we pass this bill placing agricultural implements on the free list? It has been stated here that already some American manufacturers of agricultural implements have moved to Canada in order to get their products into Canada free of duty. What will be the result now, with Canada charging us a tariff on agricultural implements, and we admitting them free from Canada? Will not the inevitable result be, under the laws of trade, to compel the American manufacturers to move across the line, where they will not only have the Canadian market free, but will also have the market in the United States free—when they will have the markets of both these great agricultural countries free—if you pass this bill?

Will it be of benefit to the American farmer to drive this great industry, monopoly though it be, into Canadian territory? It will deprive us of the vast amount of labor now engaged in making farm machinery in the United States and transfer it to other hands across the line.

I do not know how many men are employed in this industry in the United States, but there are thousands upon thousands of them. As I see it, we should continue to give to these men the right to work and a chance to clothe and care for their families, and to the American farmer a chance to feed them.

Let us not forget our first duty is to the citizens of our own country. Observing this principle, it will be a true guide to the solution of many of these great economic problems. It shall be the rule of my official acts, the lodestar toward which my feet shall plod.

In deciding whether or not this will be of benefit to the American farmer, it is important to consider the probable competition that may come to him from other countries in those things which he produces. It is well to know something of the production of other agricultural countries and of the amount of grain and meats they produce, as compared with the amount that we produce, per capita. The United States, with 90,000,000 people, produces annually about 700,000,000 bushels of wheat, or about 7 bushels per capita. We produce 2,660,000,000 bushels of corn, or about 26 bushels per capita. We produce 1,007,000,000 bushels of oats, or 12 bushels per capita. We have in this country 64,000,000 cattle, which is a little more than two-thirds of a head per capita; 57,000,000 sheep, a little less than two-thirds of a head per capita; and 47,000,000 hogs, or about one-half head per capita.

Canada has a population of 8,000,000 people. It produced in 1909, 167,000,000 bushels of wheat, or 21 bushels per capita. That is three times as much per capita as is produced in the United States. Canada raised 375,000,000 bushels of oats, or 47 bushels per capita. That is four times as much to the person as we produced in this country. Canada has 20,000,000 sheep, or two and one-half head per capita, which is nearly four times as many to the person as we produce in this country.

Argentina has a population of 6,000,000. That country produced 162,000,000 bushels of wheat, or 27 bushels per capita, nearly four times as much as we produce to the person. That country produces 136,000,000 bushels of corn, about 23 bushels to the person, or almost as much as the United States produces. Argentina has 26,000,000 cattle, or four and one-third head to the person, which is six and one-half times as many cattle per capita as we have in the United States. That country has 77,000,000 sheep, or 13 sheep to the person, nearly 20 times as many as we have in the United States. It has 3,000,000 hogs, the same per capita as we have. That country exported in 1909, 9,000,000 bushels of oats and 90,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Mexico has almost as many cattle per capita as has the United States, and it has more sheep and goats per capita. That country exported to the United States in 1909, 65,000 cattle and 100,000 the year before, in spite of the tariff duty of $3.75 per head.

The Republic of Brazil has a population of 20,000,000. Its cattle number 25,000,000, or one and one-fourth head per capita, and that is nearly twice as many to the person as has the United States.

Uruguay has a population of 1,000,000 people. In 1902 that Republic had 7,000,000 cattle, or 7 head per capita. That is 10 times as many per capita as we have in the United States. It had 18,000,000 sheep, which is 18 head per capita, and that is more than 30 times as many to the person as we have in this country.

Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why these countries can not produce sheep and cattle and meat stuffs and breadstuffs more cheaply than we can produce them in the United States. Canada has just as good access to our chief cattle and sheep markets as have many of our own farmers. They are raising cattle and sheep on land that is worth $10 per acre. Farmers in Ohio and Illinois and Indiana and all those great meat-producing States are raising sheep and cattle on land that is worth $150 and $250 per acre. I submit that our farmers can not compete under those conditions with the meat-producing people of Canada. They are raising wheat and oats and barley on cheap land. It is not sufficient to say that the only difference in the price between those grains in Canada and in the United States is due to the difference in transportation. Take it anywhere along the line where there is no difference in transportation, where the wheat and oats and barley and cattle on that side of the line are just as near to Duluth and Chicago and Minneapolis as on this side of the line, there is a difference in the price of these commodities, notwithstanding some statements to the contrary. It is wholly immaterial to the American farmer as to what the price of these things is at the shipping port or at the great city on the seacoast where they are loaded for the foreign markets. The question with him is, What are they worth on the farm? They are not worth as much on the farm in Canada as on the farm in the Dakotas and Minnesota and Iowa and Missouri and the other States where they are produced. Now, why this difference in price? It is because of a duty on these things, and just the instant that duty is removed those commodities will seek a common level. Wheat will go up a little in the town on the Canadian side of the line; it will go down a little in the town on this side of the line; and the American farmer is bound to suffer in the value of his products.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a statement the other day that in his judgment neither reciprocity nor the free-list bill would affect the price of wheat. On last Wednesday I copied from a local paper in my city a dispatch which appeared in the market reports from Chicago. I will read it:

> Wheat is bearish, due to proposed reciprocity with Canada. The prospect of the passage of the treaty has had a depressing effect and wheat is lower.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STERLING. I will.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it not a fact that last week, while we were debating the Canadian reciprocity bill, wheat went from 80 cents on Monday to 85 cents on Saturday?

Mr. STERLING. It did not. Here are the market reports from Chicago on last Wednesday, and so far as I have seen the market reports from Chicago they have been against wheat all the time, and have been going against wheat from the time the President sent his message on reciprocity to this House down to the present time.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STERLING. Is the gentleman from Ohio talking about cash wheat?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Then he is mistaken about it. It might be that some days wheat has sprung up a little, but the tendency has been downward all the time, until to-day the wheat in the bins of the American farmer is worth 28 cents a bushel less than it was a year ago at this time.

Mr. MADISON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. MADISON. It is true that wheat has been falling in price in recent months. Does the gentleman know when the decline began?

Mr. STERLING. It began very markedly, I am sure, about the time that Congress acted on the reciprocity measure at the last session.

Mr. MADISON. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. MADISON. Is it not true that the decline began in October when there was not even a suggestion of Canadian reciprocity?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is always lower in October.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. On the 26th of January, the day the reciprocity bill was introduced in the House accompanied by the message of the President of the United States, the kind of wheat that the northwestern farmers raise was $1.06⅜ per bushel cash in Minneapolis, and in Winnipeg on that day it was 97 cents. Two days afterwards, on the 28th, in Winnipeg, wheat went up a cent and a half, and the Minneapolis market went down 5 cents, and prices have been going gradually downward for this grade of wheat ever since, until within the last two or three days it has gone up 2 or 3 cents. That is the kind of wheat that the farmers in the Northwest raise 250,000,000 bushels of. These farmers have already lost pretty nearly $5,000,000 on the crop they had in their bins.

Mr. MADISON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a statement?

Mr. STERLING. If it is brief.

Mr. MADISON. I want to state that the fact is, and every man who has followed the market reports knows it, that the decline in wheat began last October or September, and has been continuous from that time until now. It began before there was a single suggestion of reciprocity, and there is no evidence that the President's message or the discussion on reciprocity—aside from the immediate day when the Canadian reciprocity matter was brought into this Congress—had anything on earth to do with the decline in wheat.

Mr. STERLING. I will say in reply that it makes no difference what we say here about these things, when it appears to be the fact that on the great wheat markets of the country the price of wheat is depressed, and buyers and sellers of wheat give that as the reason why it has gone down. That ought to settle the question as to what influence is at work destroying the value of the farmers' wheat.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. I will.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman from Kansas will look up the record for an indefinite number of years past, he will find that wheat invariably in the United States is reduced in price from about July or August and continues in reduction for some months, and begins to advance in price about December or January. He will find that that has always been the record in this country until they sprung this reciprocity proposition. This time it has gone down and remained down, and it can be due to no other cause than proposed reciprocity.

Mr. STERLING. The wheat markets of the country charge the decline to reciprocity. That ought to satisfy the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken of the possibilities of competition with Canada. What may we expect from the rich agricultural lands to the south of us? It is true that this bill does not admit cattle and sheep free from Mexico, but it does admit beef and mutton and lamb and veal. It admits all meats, fresh and cured, free from Mexico, along with all other countries. Gentlemen talk about striking a blow at the monopolies. Have we not reached a point in this debate when it would be proper for some one to suggest the name of a monopoly that would be suppressed or injuriously affected by this bill?

I know it will not be the packers. They will build packing houses just across the line, buy cheaper cattle from the haciendas of Mexico, send it into the great marts of the United States free of duty, and sell it to the American consumer, still at monopoly prices. The same conditions will apply to other countries and to other industries. The inevitable laws of trade will simply compel a change of location of the industry to a cheaper field for raw material, without affecting the monopolistic power of the industry to sell its products to the ultimate consumer at any price it may fix. Your whole scheme is in the interest of monopoly. You propose to give it a cheaper market in which to buy, and the certain and only result will be to increase the margin of monopoly's profits.

The packers in Argentina are already prepared for this pleasing advantage which you propose to give them. Even American packers are there to receive the benefits which you hold out to what you choose to call the Beef Trust. It will be a very easy matter for this powerful influence to dominate the price of beef at Buenos Aires as well as at Chicago.

Let me quote from a report on trade conditions in Argentina, issued last year by the International Bureau of American Republics:

Meat preparation: In 1902 there were three frigorificas (cold-storage plants). Since then they have increased so rapidly as to introduce injurious competition. A recent movement has been made toward consolidating the larger ones, so as to control the market, and it is said that American capital is interested.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Did the gentleman support the amendment offered to the reciprocity bill by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN]?

Mr. STERLING. I did not.

Mr. GARRETT. Really, what I meant was to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that my friend from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] presented his amendment, and gave as a reason for it that it was striking a blow at the Beef Trust. The gentleman says that it is not.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, let us look a little further at the situation in Mexico. It is a wonderfully fertile country. They have an immense territory, with the best beef and mutton producing grasses in all the world. The land is worth $3, $7, and $10 an acre. They can produce beef and mutton very cheaply. They have cheaper access to the great centers of population in the United States than have the farmers of the Mississippi Valley. They have water transportation to all the great markets on both our eastern and western seaboards. Mexico has water transportation to the very heart of the Mississippi Valley, and they can produce meat and grain and sell it in the American markets cheaper than can the American farmer.

For 40 years the farmers of the East and of the Middle West have been in competition with the great grass ranges of the West, where cattle and sheep have been grown cheaply on the public lands. That competition has about ended, but no sooner is he relieved of that unequal competition than you propose to burden him with another, more unequal and more enduring, by placing him in competition with all the cheap grass lands of both the North and South American Continents, of which there are countless millions of acres.

And that is not all—indeed that is but one-half of it—you propose to put him in competition with the lowest grade and lowest paid agricultural labor anywhere in the civilized world—with the greasers of Mexico and the mixed bloods of South America.

That, gentlemen, is the proposition you offer the American farmer to heal the wounds which you made by passing the reciprocity bill. Your farmers' free list is a humbug. If it becomes a law, it will, as the years go by, lay prostrate that greatest of all industries—American agriculture.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The friends of these two Democratic measures have had much trouble with their arguments. They assert that this legislation would not reduce the price received by the farmer for his products. They also assert that it will decrease the cost of these products to the consumer. I feel quite sure they have not succeeded in even satisfying themselves of the soundness of either statement. As a matter of fact, it must be apparent to all of us that neither statement is true. If one buys cheaper, then some one must sell cheaper. If the ultimate consumer gets his meat and breadstuffs cheaper, who in the line of trade will make this discount to him? There is at least one, and sometimes several, middlemen between the farmer at one end of the line and the ultimate consumer at the other. Next to the farmer is standing either the miller, the packer, or the cold-storage man. Next comes the jobber, the wholesaler, and the retailer, and, lastly, the ultimate consumer. Who in this line proposes to discount his selling price so that the ultimate consumer can live cheaper? If anyone does, it will be the farmer, because he is the only man in the line that does not control the price at which he sells. He is the only one who asks the buyer how much he will pay. All the rest of them tell the buyer how much he must pay. These trusts and monopolies of which we speak are doing business somewhere between the original producer and the ultimate consumer, and where monopolies do exist, they exist for the sole and only purpose of fixing the price at which they will sell to the consumer. They can do this with reference to these great necessities of life whether they come from the soil of the United States or from foreign soil. You need not expect them to make any gratuitous reductions to the consumer even though they do buy cheaper in the markets of the world.

The farmers' price is fixed largely by the supply and the demand. You propose by this legislation to so increase the supply in our great markets that the price to the American farmer will be the same as to the farmers in cheaper countries. This legislation is bound to reduce the price on the farm without affecting the price to the consumer. It simply widens the margin of profits for the middlemen, even though they may be monopolies, which stand between the original producer and the ultimate consumer.

HOW TO DEAL WITH MONOPOLIES.

You can not suppress and prevent monopolies by tariff legislation. Other countries are burdened with monopolies as well as this, and the people of this country under free trade pay tribute to foreign as well as domestic monopolies. But the people have the power to prevent all monopolies in this country, and it is within the province of the Congress to make that power effective. It is our plain duty to submit to the States of the Union an amendment to the Constitution giving to Congress the power to suppress and prevent monopolies by appropriate legislation. Permit me to say that I have introduced in this Congress a joint resolution for that purpose, and I ask of every Member his thoughtful consideration of that question.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] deplored the fact that the people were drifting from the country to the town. So do I. It shows that there is something wrong in our economic system. The purpose of humanity is to live, and it will seek the place where life is easiest. Men are attracted to the cities and the great industrial centers because they find there living to be a little more certain and their labor a little more remunerative. Even under present conditions the tendency is toward the town. Life is not quite so easy in the country as in the city, and the gentleman from Alabama proposes by this legislation to widen the difference between life in the country and in the city, and thus accelerate this movement which he so greatly regrets.

Mr. Chairman, I would be glad, indeed, if we could check this mad desire, this hot haste on the part of the Democratic Party to strike this blow at the agricultural interests of the country. It will hardly be possible to defeat the passage of this bill in the House. Some good may come, however, from this early determination of the Democracy to carry the country back to that ruinous free-trade policy which they inaugurated when last in power. I trust the country will discover the purpose and effect of this legislation before that party can gain supremacy in all the branches of government. I do not believe the people desire to go back to conditions that existed under that party. The legislation which you have urged so far tends in that direction, and the hope of the country rests in finding you out before you have achieved your purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he desires to yield any more time this evening?

Mr. DALZELL. I can not use any more time this evening.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4413, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BOEHNE was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill or who speak on the bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD within five legislative days after the completion of the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. May I ask the gentleman if that includes gentlemen who are merely yielded the floor for the purpose of asking leave to extend remarks?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Any gentleman who addresses the House will be included in this request.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman said those who spoke on this bill. Of course, that is not speaking on the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is always construed that way. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that everybody who has spoken on this bill or who may hereafter speak on it shall have leave for five legislative days to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman's request was for five legislative days after the bill is completed.

The SPEAKER. For five legislative days after the bill is passed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if he proposes on to-morrow to give way to the Committee on the Census to bring in the reapportionment bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is the understanding.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire the information so those of us who are interested in it will be here to-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the apportionment bill will be called up in the morning and completed before this bill is again considered. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 27, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting report of Special Agent W. A. Graham Clark on cotton goods in Latin America, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means (H. Doc. No. 37).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 109) to investigate the Post Office Department and service, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 13), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 7594) to consolidate certain branches of the War Department and the Army, and to decrease the expense thereof; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STONE: A bill (H. R. 7595) to increase the compensation of rural mail carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7596) to establish a fish hatchery at Peoria, in the State of Illinois; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 7597) to amend river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, making appropriation for improvement of upper White River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7598) to repeal section 1 of the act of March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States"; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 7599) to increase appropriation for site and erection of public building at Ashland, Ky.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CANDLER: A bill (H. R. 7600) to provide for the survey of the Tombigbee River in Alabama and Mississippi; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 7601) to prohibit the use of drinking cups and to prevent the communicating of infectious diseases; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7602) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector of customs at Belhaven, N. C.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7603) authorizing the establishment of experimental parcel post limited to the delivery limits of rural routes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HOBSON: A bill (H. R. 7604) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers retired or advanced on the retired list with increased rank; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 7605) for the extension of Maryland Avenue east of Fifteenth Street to M Street NE.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BOWMAN: A bill (H. R. 7606) to provide for the incorporation, control, and government of associations organized to carry on business entering into or becoming a part of interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. COOPER: A bill (H. R. 7607) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Lake Geneva, Walworth County, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 7608) to amend section 233 of the Postal Laws and Regulations; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 7609) to revise and amend the statutes relating to patents; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. LEE of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 7610) to add 31,000 acres of land, by purchase or condemnation, to the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Military Park, and appropriating $761,000 for that purpose; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLAYTON: A bill (H. R. 7611) to provide for holding the district court of the United States for Porto Rico during the absence from the island of the United States district judge; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 75) reducing the number of Capitol police; to the Committee on Accounts.

Also, a resolution (H. Res. 128) declaring vacant certain offices in the service of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. PRAY: A memorial of the Legislature of Montana, favoring legislation for the termination of the treaty with Russia of 1832; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 7612) granting an increase of pension to Ezra P. Gallion; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 7613) granting a pension to Gabino Bernal; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 7614) granting a pension to Joseph Marshall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7615) granting an increase of pension to George W. Medick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BATES: A bill (H. R. 7616) granting an increase of pension to David W. Stafford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7617) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Shreck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7618) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Twichell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7619) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Rowley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 7620) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Spehn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7621) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Dillon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAMERON: A bill (H. R. 7622) granting a pension to James C. Shackleford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 7623) granting an increase of pension to Stephen F. Oliver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7624) granting an increase of pension to Selon H. Case; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER (by request): A bill (H. R. 7625) retiring Thomas Harrison, a clerk in the Naval Observatory, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CULLOP: A bill (H. R. 7626) granting an increase of pension to John Mahoney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7627) to correct the military record of Alfred A. Burris; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7628) for the relief of Andrew B. Ritter; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 7629) granting an increase of pension to William R. Huffman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7630) to pension Army teamsters; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7631) for the relief of Asa S. Hugill; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DIFENDERFER: A bill (H. R. 7632) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Harrison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FARR: A bill (H. R. 7633) granting a pension to Catherine M. Wardell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 7634) granting a pension to Frank Selmar; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 7635) granting a pension to Sarah McIntosh McGill; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7636) granting an increase of pension to Eliza S. Byram; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 7637) granting an increase of pension to James F. Churchill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7638) granting an increase of pension to Gardiner Roberts, jr.; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7639) granting an increase of pension to Henry Wheeler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS: A bill (H. R. 7640) to correct the military record of Frederic E. Fiske; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LITTLEPAGE: A bill (H. R. 7641) granting a pension to Bryant T. Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7642) granting a pension to Andrew J. Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7643) granting a pension to William D. Medley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7644) granting an increase of pension to William H. Cyrus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7645) granting an increase of pension to John Walton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLETON: A bill (H. R. 7646) granting a pension to Emma J. Crocker; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7647) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Stephen I. Haff and to grant him an honorable discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 7648) granting an increase of pension to J. P. Hayman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 7649) granting an increase of pension to James M. Wood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MACON: A bill (H. R. 7650) for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 7651) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Jarvis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7652) granting an increase of pension to Jose La Lerz Lovato; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7653) granting an increase of pension to Andrew W. Duggan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 7654) granting an increase of pension to John P. Goshen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to William H. Case; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7656) to grant an honorable discharge to William H. Riddensdale; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7657) to refund moneys paid into the Treasury of the United States through mistake; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PEPPER: A bill (H. R. 7658) granting an increase of pension to William H. McCune; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7659) granting an increase of pension to Herman F. Bonorden; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUCKER of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 7660) granting a pension to Eliza Lake Sprague; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7661) granting a pension to Nora Wayman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7662) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hardy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 7663) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Shipman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7664) granting an increase of pension to John Dryman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7665) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Harris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7666) granting a pension to James A. House; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 7667) granting a pension to Cecil R. Berry; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7668) granting a pension to Thomas M. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7669) for the relief of the estate of the late Thomas C. Fuller; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7670) for the relief of the estate of T. H. B. Myers, surviving partner of John Myers & Son; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7671) for the relief of the estate of Samuel R. Fowle, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7672) for the relief of Mary J. Manning; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7673) for the relief of the estate of B. F. Havens; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7674) for the relief of the estate of the late Jesse R. Stubbs; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7675) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Catholic Church in Washington, N. C.; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7676) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Washington, N. C.; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7677) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Presbyterian Church in Washington, N. C.; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7678) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of J. W. Howett, administrator of William Howett, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7679) to carry into effect the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1909, relating to surveys of waters of North Carolina where fishing is prohibited by law; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. STONE: A bill (H. R. 7680) granting an increase of pension to George W. Corl; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7681) to correct the military record of John W. Conkling; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITACRE: A bill (H. R. 7682) granting an increase of pension to John W. Randels; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7683) granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Junkin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7684) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Stover; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7685) granting an increase of pension to David M. Kirkstetter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7686) granting an increase of pension to Lyman H. Milner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7687) granting a pension to James Vanfossan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 7688) for the relief of Henry J. Bolander; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7689) for the relief of John G. Riley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: Petition of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the withdrawal of troops along the Mexican border; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BULKLEY: Resolution of the Cleveland conference board of the International Molders' Union of North America, protesting against the 10-cent tax on oleomargarine as a hardship on the working classes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: Papers accompanying H. R. 6160, granting an increase of pension to William Bennett; by Oscar Arnold, of Fond du Lac, Wis., requesting a pension; and to accompany a bill for the relief of Abner Hampton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of Luke P. O'Toole, of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against any new arbitration treaty with Great Britain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DALZELL: Resolutions of Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., protesting against the tax on oleomargarine; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FOSTER of Vermont: Petition of 139 citizens of Vanwert, favoring the establishment of a national health department; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of O. C. Barber, of Akron, Ohio, favoring physical valuation of railroads, etc.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Carolina Bagging Co., of Henderson, N. C., against the free-list bill admitting jute free of duty; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KENDALL: Petition of citizens of Hedrick and Eldon, Iowa, against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LAMB: Resolutions of Subdivision 475, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Texas; Branch No. 95, Glass-Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada; Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs, and Hyperion Club, of Nelsonville, Ohio; American Federation of Labor, Lodge No. 12868, Bedford, Ind.; Trades and Labor Assembly of Massillon, Ohio; and Union 713, Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers of America, favoring repeal of tax on oleomargarine; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LOBECK: Petition of Italian citizens of Omaha, Nebr., requesting that the tax on Italian lemons be repealed; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota: Petition of citizens of South Dakota, for general pension bill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of the W. E. Barret Co., Providence, R. I., favoring the passage of the Esch phosphorus bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PETERS: Resolutions of Central Council Irish County Clubs, of Boston, Mass., opposing any new arbitration treaty with Great Britain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PRAY: Petitions of Washington Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Butte; Trades and Labor Council, Bozeman; and Local Union No. 12837, Great Falls, all in the State of Montana, in favor of legislation proposed by the Immigration Commission; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of 19 farmers of Chouteau County, Mont., in favor of parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Farmers' Alliance of Gallatin County, Mont., against Canadian reciprocity and in favor of protection; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: Petition of the citizens of Lansing, Mich., for the proper observance of the Sabbath; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: Petition of George Bubb & Sons and others, of Williamsport, Pa., against the parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 27, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the request of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be read by the Secretary.

The communication was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE, UNITED STATES SENATE.

To Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
President of the Senate.

DEAR SIR: Will you communicate to the Senate my resignation as President pro tempore of the Senate and convey to them my grateful thanks for the long service they have given me in this honorable office?

Sincerely, yours,

WM. P. FRYE,
President pro tempore.

WASHINGTON, April 27, 1911.

CHUGACH NATIONAL FOREST, ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 20th instant, certain information relative to lands in the Chugach National Forest, Alaska. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources and printed.

Mr. NELSON. It should go to the Committee on Public Lands, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make a motion to that effect?

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the title be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the title of the communication. The Chair was requested by a Senator to refer it to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources, and, unless some motion was made to the contrary, the Chair felt constrained to make that reference.

The SECRETARY. A communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting information responsive to Senate resolution of April 20, 1911, relative to certain lands in the Chugach National Forest, Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the communication and accompanying illustrations will be referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. No. 12).

COTTON GOODS IN LATIN AMERICA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report by Commercial Agent W. A. Graham Clark on cotton goods in Latin America (H. Doc. No. 37), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ONEIDA, N. Y.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of an investigation made as to the needs for a public building at Oneida, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 30), which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court in the following causes:

The vessel schooner Alciope, Robert Rice, master (H. Doc. No. 32);

The vessel ship Goddess of Plenty, Thomas Chirnside, master (H. Doc. No. 36);

The vessel ship Golden Age, Caleb Earl, master (H. Doc. No. 33);

The vessel ship Nancy, Joseph Dill, master (H. Doc. No. 35);

The vessel schooner Kitty and Maria, John Logan, master (H. Doc. No. 31); and

The vessel brig Eliza, John Miller, master (H. Doc. No. 34).

The foregoing findings and conclusions were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of the congregations of the Church of the Brethren of Mill Creek, Va., Overbrook, Kans., and Elk City, Okla., praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the opium evil, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Chicago, Ill., praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 161, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers, Gas Fitters, Steam Fitters, and Steam Fitters' Helpers, of Quincy, Ill., praying for the repeal of the present oleomargarine law, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Homer Post, No. 263, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, of Homer, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called Sulloway old-age pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Concord, N. H., April 19, 1911.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was passed by both branches of our legislature during the closing week:

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That whereas a bill known as the Sulloway bill, granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico, has been introduced in the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives of New Hampshire (the senate concurring), That we approve of the provisions of said bill and do hereby respectfully urge our Representatives and Senators in Congress to vote for and use every honorable means to secure the passage of said bill.

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution, signed by the clerks of both branches of this legislature, be sent to the Representatives and Senators from New Hampshire in the Congress of the United States."

In accordance with the above resolution we are herewith transmitting the same.

Yours, respectfully,

HARRIE M. YOUNG,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
MARTIN W. FITZPATRICK,
Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER presented memorials of Felts Mills Union, No. 6; of Marble City Union, No. 67; of Palmer Union, No. 7; and of Thomson Union, No. 158, of Schuylerville, all of the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, in the State of New York, and of sundry citizens of Claremont and Franklin, N. H., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Concord Harness Co., of Concord, N. H., praying that harness leather be placed on the free list, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRIGGS presented memorials of Local Granges of Monmouth, Johnsonburg, Cedarville, Pemberton, Pennington, Spring Mills, Egg Harbor, Delaware, and Marlton, all of the Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association, of Elizabeth, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit competition by military or naval bands with civilian organizations, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Mercer County Federation of Labor, of Trenton, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation providing higher pay for Federal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of the waters of Niagara Falls, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of Dodd Post, Major Dandy Post, Wheeler Post, Lincoln Post, and Slocum Post, all of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of Local Camps of Peapack and Pennington, Patriotic Order Sons of America; of Friendship Council and Anthony Wayne Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics; and of sundry citizens, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a petition of Local Union No. 203, Federation of Musicians, American Federation of Labor, of Hammond, Ind., and a petition of Local Union No. 12868, of Bedford, Ind., praying for the repeal of the present oleomargarine law, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented memorials of Columbus Grange, No. 2174, of Columbus, and of West Grove Grange, No. 2117, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennville; of Sugar Grove Grange, of Whitley County; and of sundry citizens of Elkhart, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of William Russ, W. T. Epmeier, George Wintemhimer, and six other citizens of Evansville, Ind., all stockholders in the United Wireless Co. of America, praying that an investigation be made into the wireless-telegraph system of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Henry H. Moore and 10 other veterans of the Civil War, of Mooreland, Ind., and a petition of Boone Post, No. 202, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, of Zionsville, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Hymera, Ind., and a memorial of members of the Socialist Party of Mishawaka, Ind., remonstrating against the mobilizing of the United States troops on the Mexican border, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McLEAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of New Britain, Torrington, Naugatuck, and Waterbury, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 56, Patrons of Husbandry, of East Haddam, Conn., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition of the Oakland Board of Trade, of Pittsburg, Pa., and a petition of Local Branch No. 95, Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, of Brackenridge, Pa., praying for the repeal of the present oleomargarine law, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Reading, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to reduce local postage to 1 cent per ounce, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 698, Patrons of Husbandry, of Charlesville, Pa., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Parnell Club, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of Washington Camps No. 588, of Newtown; No. 46, of Minersville; No. 102, of Steelton; No. 427, of Molltown; and No. 273, of Hatboro, of the Patriotic Order Sons of America, and of Lawrence Lodge, No. 487, International Association of Mechanics of Pittsburg, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BURNHAM presented memorials of sundry citizens of Warner and Franklin, N. H., and of Local Union No. 25, of Ballston, and Local Union of Ticonderoga, of the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, in the State of New York, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented a memorial of sundry farmers and business men of Brown County, S. Dak., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of the American National Live Stock Association and of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, remonstrating against live stock and meats being placed on the free list, and also against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRISTOW presented petitions of Ficksburg Post, No. 72, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Humboldt; of Major Rankin Post, No. 439, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Kincaid, Kans.; and of sundry veterans of the Civil War, of Erie, in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Sulloway old-age pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MYERS. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 11—A memorial to Congress of the United States urging the ratification of the trade agreement with the Dominion of Canada.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill to enact into law the trade agreement between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada; and

Whereas the ratification of this agreement will materially reduce the present high cost of living to the people of the United States and will furnish an increased market for the products of the Northwest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate concurring), That this assembly hereby urgently petition the Congress of the United States to ratify said trade agreement without delay.

Mr. POMERENE. I present a joint resolution passed by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, petitioning Congress to provide for the call of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting polygamy. I ask that the joint resolution be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

THE STATE OF OHIO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Ohio, ss:

I, Charles H. Graves, secretary of state of the State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the following is an exemplified copy, carefully compared by me with the original rolls now on file in this office, and in my official custody as secretary of state, as required by the laws of the State of Ohio, of a joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1911.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal, at Columbus, this 16th day of March, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] CHAS. H. GRAVES,
Secretary of State.

House joint resolution 13—To define the law against polygamy as clearly as the law is defined against bigamy.

The contract made by Utah with the United States Government when admitted as a State was that polygamy should cease. From that day to the present Joseph Smith and the majority of his followers have lived in polygamy and new polygamous conditions have continued. The doctrine of the Mormon Church is the more spiritual its followers become the more will they practice polygamy. The Government of the United States takes precedence over the government of the Mormon Church. When the Mormon hierarchy discovers that the sentiment of the people of the United States is positive in its denunciation of polygamy, the Mormon Church has a new revelation, and again throughout the press of the country is the announcement of the doing away of polygamy. Soon the announcement is made to the press that there was no authority for the statement. The question that faces every legislator is, Shall the United States Government be maintained or shall the Mormon hierarchy rule the Government? It is only necessary to refer to the proceedings before the United States Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to be convinced that polygamy is the fundamental doctrine of the Mormon Church. Reference should also be made to Pearson's Magazine for September, October, and November, 1910, which will clearly explain the situation.

The consensus of opinion of statesmen and the great majority who are considering the welfare of our Nation is an amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting polygamy and polygamous practices. A concurrence resolution for an amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting polygamy and polygamous practices has passed 13 States—New York, West Virginia, Delaware, Missouri, Maine, Iowa, North Dakota, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, California, and Washington. When two-thirds of the States have passed this resolution Congress will act as in the case of the concurrence resolution which has passed all but four of the States in regard to the direct vote of the people for Senators of the United States. The following resolution is a Federal concurrence resolution, is not referred to a committee, is acted upon by both houses, does not lie on the table, but, under the rules, to be called up and acted upon by the assembly as a whole:

Whereas it appears from investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States, and otherwise, that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States, and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof by placing the subject under Federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and enforce its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now, therefore

Resolved, That the application be made, and hereby is made, to Congress, under the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, for the calling of convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States, now in session or when next convened, be, and they hereby are, respectfully requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or an equivalent resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the several Members of said bodies representing this State therein; also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

S. J. VINING,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
HUGH L. NICHOLS,
President of the Senate.

Adopted, March 15, 1911.

Mr. DU PONT presented a petition of Washington Camp, No. 18, Patriotic Order of Sons of America, of Viola, Del., and a petition of Washington Camp, No. 3, Patriotic Order of Sons of America, of Kenton, Del., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented memorials of sundry employees of the paper mills at Appleton, of sundry citizens of Schofield, of sundry employees of the paper mills at Wausau, of sundry citizens of Garfield, Weston, Grand Rapids, and Mattoon, of the Valley Iron Works Co., of Appleton, of sundry citizens of Rothschild, and of sundry employees of the paper mills at Kimberly, all in the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PERKINS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CURTIS presented memorials of sundry citizens of Effingham, Centralia, Oskaloosa, Seneca, Sabetha, Valley Falls, and Nortonville, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called cold-storage bill, which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of Henry Clouten, of West Roxbury, Mass., and of 200 citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the establishment of a national department of public health, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of the New England Shoe Wholesalers' Association, praying for the establishment of a permanent tariff board, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the New England Shoe & Leather Association, remonstrating against placing leather boots and shoes on the free list, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented memorials of sundry citizens of Elmwood, Stanley, Boyd, Colfax, Kewaunee County, Arkansaw, Lamont, Fond du Lac County, and Lamartine, all in the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Arkansaw, Wis., remonstrating against the mobilizing of United States troops on the Mexican border, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called cold-storage bill, which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LIPPITT:

A bill (S. 1640) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Turner;

A bill (S. 1641) granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. Young;

A bill (S. 1642) granting an increase of pension to Daniel E. Corey;

A bill (S. 1643) granting an increase of pension to Lucien E. Kent;

A bill (S. 1644) granting an increase of pension to Abby E. Perkins;

A bill (S. 1645) granting an increase of pension to George L. Keach; and

A bill (S. 1646) granting an increase of pension to Eliza L. House; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 1647) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories.

By Mr. GAMBLE:

A bill (S. 1648) granting an increase of pension to Norman B. Van House (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 1649) granting an increase of pension to Henry Crall; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 1650) to amend section 110 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DU PONT:

A bill (S. 1651) granting an increase of pension to William Reilly (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1652) for the relief of Elizabeth Lynch; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRIGGS:

A bill (S. 1653) to provide American register for the steam yacht Diana; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 1654) granting an increase of pension to Stella D. Webster; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1655) appropriating $10,000 to aid in the erection of a monument in memory of the late President James A. Garfield, at Long Branch, N. J.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 1656) to regulate the construction of buildings along alleyways in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HEYBURN:

A bill (S. 1657) granting a pension to Amelia Xandry; and

A bill (S. 1658) granting a pension to Alexander M. Roe; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 1659) to grant an honorable discharge to Harry P. Eakin;

A bill (S. 1660) to correct the military record of Edward M. Warren; and

A bill (S. 1661) to grant an honorable discharge to Emmet M. Lowery (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1662) granting an increase of pension to Ira Lyle;

A bill (S. 1663) granting an increase of pension to Christian J. Koch;

A bill (S. 1664) granting an increase of pension to Simon B. Barr;

A bill (S. 1665) granting a pension to Zella J. Burdick (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 1666) granting a pension to Emma C. Young (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

A bill (S. 1667) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Gilbert (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 1668) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Weeks (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURNHAM:

A bill (S. 1669) granting an increase of pension to Seth Goldthwait; and

A bill (S. 1670) granting an increase of pension to Jacob P. Buswell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 1671) granting an increase of pension to Emerette A. Walter (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 1672) to amend section 4132 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 1673) providing for the retirement of certain officers of the Philippine Scouts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1674) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Adams; and

A bill (S. 1675) granting an increase of pension to William A. Sims; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 1676) granting a pension to Mary E. Putney; and

A bill (S. 1677) granting a pension to Isaac Wharton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 1678) granting an increase of pension to Elmore G. Shelt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 1679) for the relief of Amos Van Fossen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1680) granting an increase of pension to Wells Minor; and

A bill (S. 1681) granting an increase of pension to John W. Phillips; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 1682) for the relief of B. H. Harrison (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GUGGENHEIM:

A bill (S. 1683) for the relief of Baer, Senior & Co.'s successors and C. Ingenohl; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CRANE:

A bill (S. 1684) granting an increase of pension to Mary M. Arnold; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 1685) granting an increase of pension to George E. Wentworth (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 1686) granting an increase of pension to Segarlin C. Knighton;

A bill (S. 1687) granting an increase of pension to James S. Woodman;

A bill (S. 1688) granting a pension to Ottiwell M. Roberts; and

A bill (S. 1689) granting an increase of pension to John Dixon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 1690) to amend section 1 of an act approved January 30, 1897, entitled "An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians, providing penalties therefor, and for other purposes"; and

A bill (S. 1691) for the relief of the Miami Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 1692) providing for transferring the remains of Dr. William Jones from the Philippine Islands to the State of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 1693) granting an increase of pension to William Stoneking (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNTER:

A bill (S. 1694) for the relief of the county court of Allen County, Ky.; and

A bill (S. 1695) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the claim of Irene E. Johnson, administratrix of the estate of Leo L. Johnson, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1696) granting a pension to Lizzie L. Russ (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 21) increasing the membership of the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Rules.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. NELSON submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4412) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

CLERICAL FORCE OF SENATORS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit a Senate resolution (S. Res. 24) and ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the matter and report as early as practicable a resolution whereby all Senators holding chairmanships of inactive committees and all Senators without chairmanships at all shall have their clerical force equalized as to number and compensation.

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following order and ask for its present consideration.

The order was read, as follows:

Ordered, That so much of Rule XXIV of the Senate as provides for appointment of the standing and other committees of the Senate by ballot be suspended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The order is entered, and the rule is suspended by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following resolution (S. Res. 25) and move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the resolution may lie over until the next session of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to present consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution first be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the following shall constitute the standing committees of the Senate of the Sixty-second Congress, effective May 1, 1911.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not necessary to read the names, if objection is made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to present consideration. The resolution will go over.

Mr. STONE. Before that is done, I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the names be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that a wise suggestion on the part of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD as if read in full, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER is as follows:

Resolved, That the following shall constitute the standing committees of the Senate of the Sixty-second Congress, effective May 1, 1911:

On Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.—Messrs. Bailey (chairman), Stone, Cullom, Nelson, and Poindexter.

On Agriculture and Forestry.—Messrs. Burnham (chairman), Warren, Perkins, Guggenheim, Page, Crawford, Bradley, Lorimer, Gronna, Bankhead, Gore, Chamberlain, Smith of South Carolina, Percy, Terrell, and Lea.

On Appropriations.—Messrs. Warren (chairman), Perkins, Gallinger, Curtis, Gamble, Smoot, Nixon, Dixon, Bourne, Wetmore, Tillman, Foster, Culberson, Martin of Virginia, Overman, Owen, and Smith of Maryland.

To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.—Messrs. Briggs (chairman), Dillingham, Bristow, Clarke of Arkansas, and Williams.

On Canadian Relations.—Messrs. Oliver (chairman), Cummins, Burton, Root, McLean, Tillman, Foster, Gore, and Smith of Maryland.

On the Census.—Messrs. La Follette (chairman), Guggenheim, Cummins, du Pont, McLean, Townsend, Lippitt, Bailey, Shively, Thornton, Chilton, and Pomerene.

On Civil Service and Retrenchment.—Messrs. Cummins (chairman), La Follette, Lodge, Smoot, Borah, Dixon, Gallinger, Clarke of Arkansas, Rayner, Owen, Johnston of Alabama, and Myers.

On Claims.—Messrs. Crawford (chairman), Smoot, Bristow, Oliver, Bradley, Page, Jones, McLean, Townsend, Martin of Virginia, Overman, Davis, Paynter, Bryan, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Coast and Insular Survey.—Messrs. Townsend (chairman), Richardson, Frye, Cullom, Works, Culberson, Davis, Bankhead, and Terrell.

On Coast Defenses.—Messrs. Curtis (chairman), Nixon, du Pont, Crane, Root, Works, Simmons, Foster, Smith of Maryland, Terrell, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Commerce.—Messrs. Frye (chairman), Nelson, Perkins, Smith of Michigan, Bourne, Burton, Burnham, Stephenson, Crawford, Oliver, Martin of Virginia, Simmons, Newlands, Bankhead, Fletcher, Percy, and Reed.

On Conservation of National Resources.—Messrs. Dixon (chairman), Clark of Wyoming, Dillingham, Briggs, Guggenheim, Jones, Richardson, Gronna, Townsend, Newlands, Overman, Bankhead, Smith of South Carolina, Watson, and Lea.

On Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.—Messrs. Newlands (chairman), Shively, Brown, La Follette, and Lippitt.

On Cuban Relations.—Messrs. Page (chairman), Burnham, Clapp, Curtis, Crane, Kenyon, Simmons, Stone, Watson, and O'Gorman.

On Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.—Messrs. Clarke of Arkansas (chairman), Kern, and Burnham.

On the District of Columbia.—Messrs. Gallinger (chairman), Dillingham, Curtis, Jones, Oliver, Lorimer, Works, Kenyon, Martin of Virginia, Paynter, Johnston of Alabama, Smith of Maryland, Pomerene, and Lea.

On Education and Labor.—Messrs. Borah (chairman), Penrose, du Pont, Page, McLean, Kenyon, Rayner, Bankhead, Shively, Swanson, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Engrossed Bills.—Messrs. Simmons (chairman), Lodge, and Burton.

On Enrolled Bills.—Messrs. Stephenson (chairman), Gronna, and Foster.

To Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.—Messrs. Paynter (chairman), Culberson, Simmons, Richardson, Crawford, Perkins, and Townsend.

On Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.—Messrs. Lippitt (chairman), Stephenson, Gronna, Simmons, and Gore.

On Expenditures in the Interior Department.—Messrs. Poindexter (chairman), McCumber, Frye, Davis, and Chamberlain.

On Expenditures in the Department of Justice.—Messrs. Bradley (chairman), Burnham, Borah, Bailey, and Rayner.

On Expenditures in the Navy Department.—Messrs. Gronna (chairman), Dillingham, Bradley, Martin of Virginia, and Tillman.

On Expenditures in the Post Office Department.—Messrs. Bristow (chairman), Smith of Michigan, Penrose, Bacon, and Chilton.

On Expenditures in the Department of State.—Messrs. Kenyon (chairman), Warren, La Follette, Stone, and Percy.

On Expenditures in the Treasury Department.—Messrs. Burton (chairman), Briggs, Works, Smith of Maryland, and Lea.

On Expenditures in the War Department.—Messrs. Works (chairman), du Pont, Cullom, Foster, and Johnson of Maine.

On Finance.—Messrs. Penrose (chairman), Cullom, Lodge, McCumber, Smoot, Gallinger, Clark of Wyoming, Heyburn, La Follette, Bailey, Simmons, Stone, Williams, Kern, and Johnson of Maine.

On Fisheries.—Messrs. Jones (chairman), Bourne, Perkins, Briggs, Curtis, Bailey, Overman, Fletcher, and Thornton.

On the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.—Messrs. Tillman (chairman), Fletcher, Clapp, Nixon, and Smith of Michigan.

On Foreign Relations.—Messrs. Cullom (chairman), Frye, Lodge, Smith of Michigan, Root, McCumber, Sutherland, Borah, Burton, Bacon, Stone, Shively, Clarke of Arkansas, Rayner, and Hitchcock.

On Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.—Messrs. McLean (chairman), Perkins, Burnham, Lodge, Poindexter, Tillman, Overman, Taylor, and Hitchcock.

On the Geological Survey.—Messrs. Taylor (chairman), Rayner, Smith of South Carolina, Briggs, Wetmore, Page, and Kenyon.

On Immigration.—Messrs. Lodge (chairman), Dillingham, Penrose, Brown, Richardson, Burton, Gronna, Davis, Gore, Smith of South Carolina, Percy, Kern, and O'Gorman.

On Indian Affairs.—Messrs. Gamble (chairman), Clapp, McCumber, Sutherland, La Follette, Curtis, Brown, Dixon, Page, Stone, Davis, Owen, Chamberlain, Watson, and Myers.

On Indian Depredations.—Messrs. Rayner (chairman), Davis, Johnston of Alabama, Owen, Percy, Curtis, Dixon, Stephenson, Crawford, Brandegee, and Lippitt.

On Industrial Expositions.—Messrs. Root (chairman), Jones, Crane, Stephenson, Oliver, Gronna, Works, Rayner, Overman, Taylor, Paynter, Swanson, and Newlands.

On Interoceanic Canals.—Messrs. Brandegee (chairman), Borah, Crawford, Bristow, Perkins, Page, Jones, Townsend, Simmons, Johnston of Alabama, Percy, Thornton, Chilton, and O'Gorman.

On Interstate Commerce.—Messrs. Clapp (chairman), Cullom, Crane, Nixon, Cummins, Brandegee, Oliver, Lippitt, Townsend, Tillman, Foster, Newlands, Clarke of Arkansas, Gore, Watson, and Pomerene.

To Investigate Trespassers upon Indian Lands.—Messrs. Smith of Maryland (chairman), Bryan, Bradley, Richardson, and Poindexter.

On Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.—Messrs. Nixon (chairman), Warren, Sutherland, Borah, Jones, Brandegee, Works, Bailey, Newlands, Gore, Smith of Maryland, Chamberlain, and Myers.

Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States.—Messrs. Heyburn (chairman), Sutherland, Clarke of Arkansas, and Percy.

On the Judiciary.—Messrs. Clark of Wyoming (chairman), Nelson, Dillingham, Sutherland, Brandegee, Borah, Brown, Cummins, Root, Bacon, Culberson, Overman, Rayner, Paynter, Chilton, and O'Gorman.

On the Library.—Messrs. Wetmore (chairman), Briggs, Cummins, Root, Burton, Newlands, Shively, and Swanson.

On Manufactures.—Messrs. Heyburn (chairman), Oliver, Lorimer, La Follette, Cummins, McLean, Smith of South Carolina, Terrell, Reed, Pomerene, and O'Gorman.

On Military Affairs.—Messrs. du Pont (chairman), Warren, Dixon, Briggs, Brown, Guggenheim, Bristow, Jones, Lorimer, Foster, Johnston of Alabama, Clarke of Arkansas, Taylor, Chamberlain, Hitchcock, and Williams.

On Mines and Mining.—Messrs. Lorimer (chairman), Heyburn, Nixon, Sutherland, Guggenheim, Poindexter, Tillman, Johnston of Alabama, Watson, and Myers.

On the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.—Messrs. Davis (chairman), Owen, Thornton, Brown, Burton, Stephenson, and Wetmore.

On Naval Affairs.—Messrs. Perkins (chairman), Penrose, Wetmore, Clapp, Lodge, Smith of Michigan, Page, Poindexter, Tillman, Smith of Maryland, Thornton, Swanson, Bryan, and Johnson of Maine.

On Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.—Messrs. Richardson (chairman), Clapp, Lorimer, Nelson, Burnham, Brandegee, Poindexter, Clarke of Arkansas, Owen, Fletcher, Watson, and Kern.

On Pacific Railroads.—Messrs. Owen (chairman), Chamberlain, Shively, Reed, Frye, Smith of Michigan, Stephenson, McCumber, and Brown.

On Patents.—Messrs. Brown (chairman), Brandegee, Kenyon, Works, Shively, Smith of South Carolina, and Gore.

On Pensions.—Messrs. McCumber (chairman), Burnham, Smoot, Curtis, du Pont, Brown, Bradley, Poindexter, Taylor, Gore, Shively, Bryan, Johnson of Maine, and Pomerene.

On the Philippines.—Messrs. Guggenheim (chairman), Lodge, Nixon, Heyburn, Bristow, Crawford, McLean, Lippitt, Johnston of Alabama, Paynter, Chamberlain, Fletcher, Hitchcock, and Reed.

On Post Offices and Post Roads.—Messrs. Bourne (chairman), Penrose, Crane, Guggenheim, Briggs, Richardson, Bradley, Bristow, Lorimer, Bankhead, Taylor, Terrell, Smith of South Carolina, Swanson, Bryan, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Printing.—Messrs. Smoot (chairman), Gallinger, Richardson, Page, Kenyon, Smith of Maryland, Fletcher, and Chilton.

On Private Land Claims.—Messrs. Bacon (chairman), Davis, Thornton, Smith of Michigan, Oliver, Lorimer, and Gronna.

On Privileges and Elections.—Messrs. Dillingham (chairman), Gamble, Heyburn, Clapp, Sutherland, Bradley, Jones, Oliver, Kenyon, Bailey, Paynter, Johnston of Alabama, Fletcher, Kern, and Lea.

On Public Buildings and Grounds.—Messrs. Sutherland (chairman), Warren, Heyburn, Wetmore, Gamble, du Pont, Stephenson, Bourne, Poindexter, Culberson, Taylor, Swanson, Owen, Watson, Martine of New Jersey, and Reed.

On Public Health and National Quarantine.—Messrs. Culberson (chairman), Fletcher, Thornton, Owen, Williams, Smoot, Crawford, Crane, Gronna, Lippitt, and Works.

On Public Lands.—Messrs. Nelson (chairman), Clark of Wyoming, Gamble, Smoot, Heyburn, Dixon, Jones, Guggenheim, Works, Newlands, Davis, Chamberlain, Thornton, Bryan, and Myers.

On Railroads.—Messrs. Gore (chairman), Bacon, Taylor, Watson, Reed, Clark of Wyoming, Nelson, Bourne, Bristow, Penrose, and McCumber.

On Revolutionary Claims.—Messrs. Stone (chairman), Chilton, Bradley, Root, and Borah.

On Rules.—Messrs. Crane (chairman), Warren, Gallinger, Nelson, Cummins, Bacon, Bailey, and Overman.

On Standards, Weights, and Measures.—Messrs. Bankhead (chairman), Bacon, Borah, Clapp, and Gamble.

On Territories.—Messrs. Smith of Michigan (chairman), Nelson, Burnham, Brown, Bristow, McLean, Lippitt, Owen, Chamberlain, Shively, Johnson of Maine, and Hitchcock.

On Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.—Messrs. Smith of South Carolina (chairman), Rayner, Gore, Bankhead, Clark of Wyoming, McCumber, Brandegee, Bourne, and Burton.

On Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.—Messrs. Foster (chairman), Watson, Clark of Wyoming, Nixon, and Townsend.

On the University of the United States.—Messrs. Johnston of Alabama (chairman), Foster, Overman, Terrell, Williams, Frye, Dillingham, Curtis, Wetmore, Dixon, and Cummins.

On Woman Suffrage.—Messrs. Overman (chairman), Johnston of Alabama, Wetmore, du Pont, and Bourne.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 7 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 28, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 27, 1911.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Elliot Marshal, of Missouri, to be surveyor of customs for the port of St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, in place of John Albus, jr., whose term of service expired by limitation February 2, 1910.

FIRST ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Samuel Adams, of Illinois, to be First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, vice Frank Pierce, resigned.

ASSISTANT TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

James A. Fowler, of Tennessee, to be assistant to the Attorney General, vice William S. Kenyon, resigned.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Ernest Knaebel, of Colorado, to be Assistant Attorney General, vice James A. Fowler, nominated to be assistant to the Attorney General.

REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES.

Edwin G. Coleman, now receiver of public moneys at Lemmon, S. Dak., to be register of the land office at Lemmon, vice Cyrus C. Carpenter, resigned.

Paul D. Kribs, now register of the land office at Aberdeen, S. Dak., to be register of the land office at Timber Lake, S. Dak. The land office at Aberdeen is to be removed to Timber Lake, pursuant to Executive order of February 18.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Samuel W. Huntington, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., to be receiver of public moneys at Lemmon, S. Dak., vice Edwin G. Coleman, nominated to be register of the land office at Lemmon.

Jacob L. Parrott, of Mobridge, S. Dak., to be receiver of public moneys at Timber Lake, S. Dak. The land office at Aberdeen is to be removed to Timber Lake, pursuant to Executive order of February 18.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. John F. Guilfoyle, Seventh Cavalry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Cunliffe H. Murray, Fourteenth Cavalry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Matthias W. Day, Sixth Cavalry, to be colonel from March 21, 1911, vice Col. George S. Anderson, Ninth Cavalry, who accepted an appointment as brigadier general on that date.

Maj. Joseph A. Gaston, First Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Charles H. Watts, Ninth Cavalry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Henry L. Ripley, Eighth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Frank A. Edwards, Twelfth Cavalry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. James B. Erwin, Ninth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Hoel S. Bishop, Fifteenth Cavalry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. George H. Morgan, Third Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Edwin P. Andrus, Second Cavalry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Daniel H. Boughton, Fifth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 5, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Walter L. Finley, Thirteenth Cavalry, detailed as inspector general on that date.

Maj. Franklin O. Johnson, detailed paymaster, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. John F. Guilfoyle, Seventh Cavalry, promoted.

Maj. Lloyd M. Brett, First Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. William D. Beach, Eleventh Cavalry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Augustus C. Macomb, Ninth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Homer W. Wheeler, Fifth Cavalry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Thomas J. Lewis, Thirteenth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. James Lockett, Fourth Cavalry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Charles H. Grierson, Tenth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 21, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Matthias W. Day, Sixth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. George O. Cress, Fourth Cavalry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Augustus P. Blocksom, Tenth Cavalry, advanced to the grade of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. James B. Hughes, Fourth Cavalry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Joseph A. Gaston, First Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Robert A. Brown, Fourth Cavalry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Hugh L. Scott, Fourteenth Cavalry, advanced to the grade of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Willard A. Holbrook, Fifth Cavalry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Henry L. Ripley, Eighth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Lewis M. Koehler, Fourth Cavalry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Jacob G. Galbraith, Fourth Cavalry, advanced to the grade of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Robert E. L. Michie, Twelfth Cavalry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. James B. Erwin, Ninth Cavalry, promoted.

First Lieut. John S. Fair, Ninth Cavalry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. George O. Cress, Fourth Cavalry, promoted.

First Lieut. Robert J. Reaney, Second Cavalry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. James B. Hughes, Fourth Cavalry, promoted.

First Lieut. Sherrard Coleman, Eight Cavalry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Robert A. Brown, Fourth Cavalry, promoted.

First Lieut. William F. Herringshaw, Thirteenth Cavalry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Willard A. Holbrook, Fifth Cavalry, promoted.

First Lieut. Joseph A. Baer, Sixth Cavalry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Lewis M. Koehler, Fourth Cavalry, promoted.

First Lieut. Frank O. Whitlock, Fourteenth Cavalry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Robert E. L. Michie, Twelfth Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Thomas A. Rothwell, Fifth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. John S. Fair, Ninth Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Thomas E. Cathro, Thirteenth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Robert J. Reaney, Second Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. E. R. Warner McCabe, Sixth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Sherrard Coleman, Eighth Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. James B. Henry, jr., Fourth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. William F. Herringshaw, Thirteenth Cavalry, promoted.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Edwin St. J. Greble, Third Field Artillery, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Edward T. Brown, Fifth Field Artillery, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Edward A. Millar, Fifth Field Artillery, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Eli D. Hoyle, Sixth Field Artillery, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. John Conklin, Second Field Artillery, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Granger Adams, Fifth Field Artillery, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Samuel D. Sturgis, First Field Artillery, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Edwin St. J. Greble, Third Field Artillery, promoted.

Maj. Lucien G. Berry, Third Field Artillery, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Charles G. Treat, Fourth Field Artillery, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. William J. Snow, Sixth Field Artillery, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Edward A. Millar, Fifth Field Artillery, promoted.

Capt. George C. Gatley, Third Field Artillery, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. John Conklin, Second Field Artillery, promoted.

First Lieut. Joseph F. Barnes, Second Field Artillery, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. William J. Snow, Sixth Field Artillery, promoted.

First Lieut. William P. Ennis, First Field Artillery, to be captain from March 11, 1911, vice Capt. George G. Gatley, Third Field Artillery, promoted.

Second Lieut. John G. Tyndall, Fourth Field Artillery, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Joseph F. Barnes, Second Field Artillery, promoted.

Second Lieut. Alfred L. P. Sands, Sixth Field Artillery, to be first lieutenant from March 11, 1911, vice First Lieut. William P. Ennis, First Field Artillery, promoted.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Lieut. Col. Frederick S. Strong, detailed adjutant general, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Erasmus M. Weaver, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Warren P. Newcomb, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Charles G. Woodward, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Charles L. Phillips, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from March 13, 1911, vice Col. William R. Hamilton, retired from active service March 12, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Clarence P. Townsley, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from April 1, 1911, vice Col. Frederick Marsh, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Isaac N. Lewis, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. William C. Rafferty, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Harry L. Hawthorne, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Warren P. Newcomb, promoted.

Maj. John D. Barrette, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Charles J. Bailey, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Elmer W. Hubbard, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Adelbert Cronkhite, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Gustave W. S. Stevens, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. George T. Bartlett, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Richmond P. Davis, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 13, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Charles L. Phillips, promoted.

Maj. Wirt Robinson, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from April 1, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Clarence P. Townsley, promoted.

Maj. George F. Landers, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from April 1, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Charles H. Hunter, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. George W. Gatchell, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from April 12, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. John W. Ruckman, detailed as inspector general on that date.

Capt. Alston Hamilton, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Ira A. Haynes, advanced to the grade of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. John C. Gilmore, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Willoughby Walke, advanced to the grade of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Joseph L. Knowlton, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Isaac N. Lewis, promoted.

Capt. Joseph Wheeler, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. Harry L. Hawthorne, promoted.

Capt. Robert E. Callan, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. John D. Barrette, promoted.

Capt. Edwin Landon, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. Elmer W. Hubbard, promoted.

Capt. Clarence H. McNeil, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. Gustave W. S. Stevens, promoted.

Capt. Joseph P. Tracy, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. Oscar I. Straub, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Percy M. Kessler, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. Alfred M. Hunter, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Johnson Hagood, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. Henry D. Todd, jr., detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. George T. Patterson, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. William C. Davis, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Frank K. Fergusson, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. George Blakely, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Robert S. Abernethy, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from March 11, 1911, vice Maj. Gordon G. Heiner, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Edwin O. Sarratt, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from April 1, 1911, vice Maj. Wirt Robinson, promoted.

First Lieut. Graham Parker, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Alston Hamilton, promoted.

First Lieut. Norris Stayton, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. John C. Gilmore, jr., promoted.

First Lieut. Richard Furnival, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain from March 11, 1911, vice Capt. Joseph Wheeler, jr., promoted.

First Lieut. George A. Taylor, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain from March 11, 1911, vice Capt. Robert E. Callan, promoted.

First Lieut. Ralph E. Herring, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain from March 11, 1911, vice Capt. Edwin Landon, promoted.

First Lieut. William E. De Sombre, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain from March 11, 1911, vice Capt. Clarence H. McNeil, promoted.

Second Lieut. Edwin K. Smith, Coast Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Graham Parker, promoted.

Second Lieut. Clarence T. Marsh, Coast Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Norris Stayton, promoted.

Second Lieut. John B. Maynard, Coast Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant from March 11, 1911, vice First Lieut. Richard Furnival, promoted.

Second Lieut. Jacob Frank, Coast Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant from March 11, 1911, vice First Lieut. George A. Taylor, promoted.

INFANTRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Charles McClure, detailed adjutant general, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Thomas C. Woodbury, Third Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. James S. Rogers, First Infantry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Edwin B. Bolton, Fourth Infantry, retired from active service March 10, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Robert L. Bullard, Eighth Infantry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Charles St. J. Chubb, Thirtieth Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Edwin F. Glenn, Twenty-third Infantry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. William P. Evans, Twenty-fifth Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Millard F. Waltz, Twenty-seventh Infantry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Col. Francis H. French, Twenty-eighth Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Samuel W. Dunning, Seventh Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. William C. Buttler, Twenty-second Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Joseph M. T. Partello (since retired from active service), Fourth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. George S. Young, Twenty-first Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. George Bell, jr., detailed inspector general, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. George R. Cecil, Tenth Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Frank B. McCoy, Seventeenth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. William A. Mann, Third Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Richard M. Blatchford, Eleventh Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Alexis R. Paxton, Twenty-fourth Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. John H. Beacom, Sixth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. William Lassiter, Fourth Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Lawrence J. Hearn, Third Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Robert C. Van Vliet, Sixteenth Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Charles W. Penrose, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. James S. Rogers, First Infantry, promoted.

Maj. Francis J. Kernan, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Robert L. Bullard, Eighth Infantry, promoted.

Maj. Chase W. Kennedy, Sixteenth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Edwin F. Glenn, Twenty-third Infantry, promoted.

Maj. Thomas W. Griffith, Twenty-eighth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Millard F. Waltz, Twenty-seventh Infantry, promoted.

Maj. George W. McIver, Ninth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. William A. Nichols, Thirteenth Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Wilds P. Richardson, Thirteenth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Reuben B. Turner, Twenty-ninth Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Charles H. Barth, Twelfth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Daniel A. Frederick, Nineteenth Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Omar Bundy, detailed inspector general, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Hunter Liggett, Fifteenth Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Everard E. Hatch, Twenty-sixth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Samuel W. Miller, Twenty-fifth Infantry, detached from his proper command under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. David C. Shanks, Fourth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Edward H. Plummer, Twenty-eighth Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. William H. Allaire, Twenty-third Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Henry Kirby, Sixth Infantry, advanced to the grade of colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Maj. Willson Y. Stamper, Twenty-first Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 20, 1911, vice Lieut. Col. Samuel W. Dunning, unassigned, detailed as adjutant general on that date.

Capt. Michael J. Lenihan, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Samuel W. Dunning, Seventh Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Mark L. Hersey, Sixth Infantry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Joseph M. T. Partello, Fourth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Frank H. Albright, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. John S. Parke, Fourteenth Infantry, advanced to the grade of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Frederic D. Evans, Eighteenth Infantry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Frank B. McCoy, Seventeenth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. James Baylies, Tenth Infantry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Charles R. Noyes, Ninth Infantry, advanced to the grade of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1911.

Capt. Earl C. Carnahan, Eleventh Infantry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. Richard M. Blatchford, Eleventh Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Edson A. Lewis, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to be major from March 3, 1911, vice Maj. John H. Beacom, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. William S. Sinclair, Fifth Infantry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Michael J. Lenihan, Twenty-fifth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Richmond Smith, Eleventh Infantry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Mark L. Hersey, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Charles L. Willard, Fifteenth Infantry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Frank H. Albright, Twenty-fifth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Robert H. Sillman, Fifteenth Infantry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Frederic D. Evans, Eighteenth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Samuel W. Widdifield, Eighth Infantry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. James Baylies, Tenth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Rufus B. Clark, Third Infantry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Earl C. Carnahan, Eleventh Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Arthur P. Watts, Eighteenth Infantry, to be captain from March 3, 1911, vice Capt. Edson A. Lewis, Twenty-fifth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Walton Goodwin, jr., Fifth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. William S. Sinclair, Fifth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Philip B. Peyton, Sixteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Richmond Smith, Eleventh Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Karl Truesdell, Fifth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Charles L. Willard, Fifteenth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Frederick B. Terrell, Nineteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Robert H. Sillman, Fifteenth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Howard G. Sharpe, Twenty-third Infantry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Samuel W. Widdifield, Eighth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. David H. Scott, Thirteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Rufus B. Clark, Third Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Charles A. Dravo, Eighth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from March 3, 1911, vice First Lieut. Arthur P. Watts, Eighteenth Infantry, promoted.

ADVANCEMENT IN THE ARMY.

Each of the officers herein named for advancement in grade in accordance with the rank he would have been entitled to hold had promotion been lineal throughout his arm or corps since the date of his entry into the arm or corps to which he permanently belongs:

CAVALRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Charles H. Watts, Ninth Cavalry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Frank A. Edwards, Twelfth Cavalry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Hoel S. Bishop, Fifteenth Cavalry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Edwin P. Andrus, Second Cavalry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Frederick W. Sibley, detailed inspector general, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Homer W. Wheeler, Fifth Cavalry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911.

Maj. Augustus P. Blocksom, Tenth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Hugh L. Scott, Fourteenth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Loyd S. McCormick, detailed inspector general, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Jacob G. Galbraith, Fourth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Horatio G. Sickel, Twelfth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Herbert J. Slocum, Seventh Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. William J. Nicholson, Seventh Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Fred W. Foster, Fifth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Edwin P. Brewer, Seventh Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Henry J. Goldman, Twelfth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Eli D. Hoyle, Sixth Field Artillery, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Granger Adams, Fifth Field Artillery, to be colonel from March 11, 1911.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Lieut. Col. William C. Rafferty, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Charles J. Bailey, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from March 11, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Millard F. Harmon, detailed inspector general, to be colonel from March 13, 1911.

Lieut. Col. Charles H. Hunter, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from April 1, 1911.

Maj. Ira A. Haynes, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

Maj. Willoughby Walke, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.

INFANTRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. William C. Buttler, Twenty-second Infantry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.
Lieut. Col. George S. Young, Twenty-first Infantry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.
Lieut. Col. George R. Cecil, Tenth Infantry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.
Lieut. Col. William A. Mann, Third Infantry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.
Lieut. Col. Alexis R. Paxton, Twenty-fourth Infantry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.
Lieut. Col. William Lassiter, Fourth Infantry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.
Lieut. Col. Robert C. Van Vliet, Sixteenth Infantry, to be colonel from March 3, 1911.
Lieut. Col. William A. Nichols, Thirteenth Infantry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911.
Lieut. Col. Edward H. Plummer, Twenty-eighth Infantry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911.
Lieut. Col. Henry Kirby, Sixth Infantry, to be colonel from March 11, 1911.
Maj. Charles M. Truitt, detailed adjutant general, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.
Maj. John S. Parke, Fourteenth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.
Maj. Charles R. Noyes, Ninth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.
Maj. Willis T. May, Fifteenth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.
Maj. Edwin P. Pendleton, Twenty-ninth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.
Maj. Daniel L. Howell, Eighteenth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 3, 1911.
Maj. William F. Blauvelt, detailed paymaster, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911.
Maj. Walter H. Chatfield, Twenty-seventh Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from March 11, 1911.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS.

To be first lieutenants, with rank from April 24, 1911.

John Bundy Alcorn, of Ohio.
Robert Wesley Andrews, of New York.
Thomas Zopher Ball, of Indiana.
Porter Vernon Ballou, of Kentucky.
William Francis Bernart, of Illinois.
Albert George Bising, of New York.
John Newton Boyce, of New York.
Arthur Irving Boyer, of New York.
John Dosher Brooks, of South Dakota.
Earl Sprague Bullock, of New Mexico.
John Gerald Byrne, of Washington.
Willis Earle Chapman, of Michigan.
Harold Dunbar Corbusier, of New Jersey.
Leighton Randolph Cornman, of New York.
Richard Matthew English, of Connecticut.
Frank Wilbur Foxworthy, of Indiana.
Samuel Friedman, of New York.
Harry Greenberg, of Wisconsin.
Hubert Grieger, of Colorado.
Andy Hall, of Illinois.
Henry Norton Hall, of Georgia.
Stevens Thomas Harris, of Georgia.
Graham Edward Henson, of Florida.
Gustavus Ingomar Hogue, of Wisconsin.
Harry Murray James, of New York.
Frederick Niles Coligny Jerauld, of New York.
De Witt Clinton Jones, of Minnesota.
Wendell Ambrose Jones, of Ohio.
Edward Elmer Lamkin, of Maryland.
Samuel Connell Lindsay, of Iowa.
Charles Herbert Lowell, of California.
Laurence McEvoy, of New York.
Elmer Ellsworth Mansfield, of Georgia.
Clarence Martin, of Missouri.
James Vance May, of New York.
Ben Hicks Metcalf, of Massachusetts.
George Seltzer Mintzer, of Pennsylvania.
Charles Bernhard Julius Mittelstaedt, of New York.
John Lawson Norris, of the District of Columbia.
Clarence Quinan, of California.
Ivah James Ransbottom, of Ohio.
Ernest Charles Schultze, of New York.
Harry Clay Smith, of Montana.
William Hickman Spiller, of New York.
Charles Seymour Stern, of Connecticut.
William Stoutenborough Terriberry, of New York.
James William Thornton, of Iowa.
Clarence Allen Warwick, of Indiana.
Joseph Hall Whiteley, of Iowa.
Roy Alexander Wilson, of Ohio.
Shadworth Oldham Beasley, of California.
Frederick Douglass Branch, of New York.
John Carling, of New York.
Charles Arthur Cattermole, of Colorado.
Frederick Arthur Wellington Conn, of Pennsylvania.
Charles Grant Eicher, of Pennsylvania.
Bruce Ffoulkes, of California.
John Gilbert, of Pennsylvania.
Lewis Theophilus Griffith, of New York.
Howard Albertus Grube, of Michigan.
Vernon Jay Hooper, of Michigan.
Simon Pendleton Kramer, of Ohio.
George Bradford Lawrason, of Louisiana.
William Cooper Le Compte, of Pennsylvania.
Harry Rodgers Lemen, of Illinois.
Peter Duncan MacNaughton, of Michigan.
William Barton Orear, of Georgia.
Palmer Heath Lyon, of New York.
Frank David Pease, of Montana.
Alva Sherman Pinto, of Nebraska.
John Joseph Repetti, of the District of Columbia.
Herman Joseph Schlageter, of California.
Robert Scott Spilman, of Virginia.
Walter Hoepfner Winterberg, of California.

Physicians to be first lieutenants, with rank from April 24, 1911.

Clifford Thomas Sappington, of Maryland.
Alfred Carlyle Prentice, of New York.
Clarence Arthur McWilliams, of New York.
Edmund Dougan Clark, of Indiana.
John Vernon Frazier, of Michigan.
Ernest William Haass, of Michigan.
Haigazoon Kruger Kaprielian, of Connecticut.
Arthur Waller Slee, of New York.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Reed M. Fawell to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 4th day of March, 1911, to fill a vacancy.
Midshipman Arnold H. Vanderhoof to be an ensign in the Navy from the 6th day of June, 1910, to fill a vacancy.

POSTMASTERS.

GEORGIA.

Sallie M. Aaron to be postmaster at Lyons, Ga., in place of James B. Aaron, deceased.
Charles W. Parker to be postmaster at Elberton, Ga., in place of Charles W. Parker. Incumbent's commission expired December 11, 1910.

IOWA.

Daniel P. Ellsworth to be postmaster at Lohrville, Iowa, in place of Daniel P. Ellsworth. Incumbent's commission expired December 19, 1910.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Harriet F. Seaverns to be postmaster at North Scituate, Mass. Office became presidential October 1, 1910.

MICHIGAN.

Charles Gauntlett to be postmaster at Milan, Mich., in place of Charles Gauntlett. Incumbent's commission expired February 2, 1911.

MINNESOTA.

Fred W. Olson to be postmaster at Raymond, Minn., in place of Eva Frances Fay, resigned.

MISSISSIPPI.

Effie Du Berry to be postmaster at Baldwyn, Miss., in place of Carrie D. Morgan, resigned.
Martha H. Talbert to be postmaster at Pelahatchee, Miss., in place of Martha H. McLaurin, name changed by marriage.

NEBRASKA.

William A. Price to be postmaster at Laurel, Nebr., in place of William A. Price. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1910.

NEVADA.

Callie B. Ferguson to be postmaster at Fallon, Nev., in place of Callie B. Ferguson. Incumbent's commission expired February 18, 1911.

NEW JERSEY.

George E. Schenck to be postmaster at Haddon Heights, N. J., in place of Lizzie B. Minton, removed.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Clark D. Eckels to be postmaster at Cambridge Springs, Pa., in place of William E. Root. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1911.

Burd R. Linder to be postmaster at Orwigsburg, Pa., in place of Burd R. Linder. Incumbent's commission expired June 22, 1910.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Peter J. Schroder to be postmaster at Avon, S. Dak. Office became presidential January 1, 1911.

TEXAS.

John H. Carson to be postmaster at Dayton, Tex. Office became presidential October 1, 1910.

William D. McCaslin to be postmaster at Detroit, Tex., in place of William D. McCaslin. Incumbent's commission expired February 13, 1911.

Rufus H. Windham to be postmaster at Newton, Tex. Office became presidential April 1, 1911.

WISCONSIN.

Joseph W. Fritz to be postmaster at Ladysmith, Wis., in place of Joseph W. Fritz. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1911.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 27, 1911.

MINISTER.

Laurits S. Swenson to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Norway.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Frederick C. Harper to be collector of customs for the district of Puget Sound, Wash.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Jacob L. Parrott to be receiver of public moneys at Timberlake, S. Dak.

Samuel W. Huntington to be receiver of public moneys at Lemmon, S. Dak.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Edwin G. Coleman to be register of the land office at Lemmon, S. Dak.

Paul D. Kribs to be register of the land office at Timberlake, S. Dak.

Albert Kircher to be register of the land office at Miles City, Mont.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Commander John H. Dayton to be a commander.

The following-named carpenters to be chief carpenters:

Thomas O. Covell and Caleb Whitford.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

William J. Atwood, Midland.

MINNESOTA.

Nicholas J. Kohn, Fort Snelling.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Frank D. Dickey, Murphy.

OREGON.

Lawrence M. Scholl, Hubbard.

WISCONSIN.

Robert V. Baker, Kenosha.

John F. Shaw, Ellsworth.

Earle S. Welch, Eau Claire.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 27, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, let Thy blessing descend copiously upon us, to broaden our views, quicken our sensibilities, that we may make worthy our acts in whatsoever our hands findeth to do, and thus grow daily into the likeness of our Maker. And honor and glory and praise be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Presiding Officer had appointed Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas and Mr. GALLINGER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

PRINTING AND BINDING, COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 129.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary for the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand this committee is actually taking testimony and working through subcommittees.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Yes. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is offered at the request of members of the committee. This committee is actually at work taking testimony through subcommittees, and it is desirable to have it printed, so that the full committee can have the advantage of their work.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I think there can be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MCMORRAN was granted leave of absence for two weeks on account of important business.

THE APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2983—the apportionment bill—and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be fixed at three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2983, known as the apportionment bill, and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether he thinks that that will be ample time on this side of the House?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I supposed it would be. But one request has been made to me for time, and that is from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON]. Probably I will occupy 30 minutes—possibly 40. That would leave a half hour or so that may be distributed. If there is any Member on this side of the House who desires to speak and wants time, and thinks we ought to have more time, I would be glad to have it made known.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I want 15 minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from California wants 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], I think, have agreed upon the number of Representatives by the apportionment. Whether gentlemen opposed to the number desire to be heard or not to any extent, I am not informed. If any gentleman desires time, now is a very good opportunity to indicate it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may be that, as a matter of safety, we better have two hours on a side. I presume there will not be so much time required, but I suggest it as a matter of precaution. This is quite an important bill, and there are, perhaps, 125 Members of this body who were not Members of the last Congress, and who were not present at the discussion then, and, of course, I would like to give everybody an opportunity to express himself on the questions involved in this bill. I do not think the general debate will last over an hour and a half.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] that he make his request for two hours on a side. If the time is not occupied, very well. Five-minute debate would follow that, of course.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, judging from the number of those who have asked me for time in the discussion of this bill, I think that really one hour would be long enough for this side, and an hour and a half would be ample, and the gentleman from Indiana seemed to think that would be satisfactory. Now, of course, we will take up the bill after this general discussion, under the five-minute rule, and that would prolong its consideration for some time, and perhaps we would not get through until very late. It seems to me that three hours, one hour and a half on a side, would be ample time.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY]?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do.

Mr. LANGLEY. I did not quite catch the request. Did it include the statement that the general debate is to be confined to the merits of the bill? If not, I make that suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I include in my request that the debate be confined to the discussion of this bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think it ought to be.

The SPEAKER. The rules settle that question. When the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering a bill under general debate, Members are allowed great latitude in discussion. Outside of that, Members are confined to the question, if anybody raises the point.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I have had three requests since the gentleman made his motion for time, aggregating 45 minutes. I will probably occupy half an hour myself. I believe we ought to have two hours on this side, but we will not use it unless there is demand for it, of course. I wish the gentleman would modify his request and make it four hours—two hours on a side.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, in response to the request made by the gentleman from Indiana and others on that side, that we have more time for discussion, I agree to the time of two hours on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] modifies his request in two respects. He asks that the time be extended to four hours of general debate, one-half to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], and that the debate be confined to the bill under consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to consider House bill 2983, for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Thirteenth Census.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2983) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Thirteenth Census, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

Mr. GARNER took the chair amid applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2983. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill 2983, a bill for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Thirteenth Census.

Be it enacted, etc.——

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] is recognized.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I understand that both of the gentlemen to whom the control of time is allotted favor the same bill. I wish to ask if time will be apportioned to any Member on the floor who opposes the bill. This question was raised at the time this same bill was discussed at the last session, and a different rule was followed then, and a certain amount of time was allotted to those who opposed the bill. I would like at this time to make this inquiry, whether it is the intention of the gentlemen on either side in control of time to surrender some time to Members who oppose the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will answer, Yes; time will be given to those who oppose it. I am willing to make as much concession as I reasonably can.

Mr. Chairman, according to the provisions of the Constitution and under the laws passed by Congress, the census of 1910 has been taken and certified to Congress by the proper official of the Census Bureau, the Director of the Census. Under the Constitution it is our manifest duty to pass an apportionment bill, and I take it that it is unnecessary to offer any argument or any reason why an apportionment bill should be passed. The only question to be considered by this House is the character of the bill that is to be passed, so that I do not expect to take up more than a few minutes of the time of the House, and that will be occupied in setting forth the provisions of this bill and describing it.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, this bill provides that the membership of this House shall be 433. This involves an increase of 42 Members. It also provides that in the event the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona are admitted to the Union, they will have one Member each. This will be in addition to the 433 already provided for.

In the apportionment of the Representatives among the different States the committee was confronted with the question as to the manner and method of arriving at a just and fair apportionment, and upon this point I must say that there is a very great diversity of opinion. It is rather remarkable that after more than 100 years in the history of our Government there has been no uniform method agreed upon, either by Congress or by the officials of the Census Bureau or by statisticians in general. However, the method adopted in the formation of this bill, to my mind, adopts the simplest and the plainest and as fair a method as is available under the present conditions. The method adopted was the method known as the method of majority fractions. By that method a ratio is ascertained, and that ratio is divided among the population of the different States, each State getting a Member in the House for each full ratio and one for each majority fraction thereof.

Now, there are arguments made pro and con as to other methods—the method of 1850 and the method submitted by Dr. Hill, the chief statistician of the Bureau of the Census, which had features to commend it to the favorable consideration of the Census Committee. However, it is agreed by all that with the present population of the United States and the ratio determined upon by this committee of 211,877, as representing the average constituency of each Member, the same result is reached when you come to divide the membership of the House into the number 433. Therefore, however much any Member might prefer another method under different conditions, yet the same result is reached when you fix the number at 433 and use the method of major fractions, the method used in this bill, with the population of the United States as it now is. The same result is reached by the ratio the committee has determined upon, 211,877, and the number 433, as would be reached by this method suggested by the chief statistician, Dr. Hill. In view of that fact there can be no criticism that this method is not as fair and as just and uniform an apportionment as the later method.

This bill provides, as I have said, for an increase of 42 Members, distributed among the various States of this Union.

Mr. KENDALL. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KENDALL. The plan proposed by the committee allows each State to enjoy the representation that it now has?

Mr. HOUSTON. It does. I was coming to that. The plan proposed by the committee allows each State to retain its present membership. And I will say, in this connection, that the number 433 is the smallest number that will afford to each State the opportunity to retain its present membership without the loss of a single Member.

Objection has been made to the increase. The argument has been made that the House is too large and is getting unwieldy. In view of that, which I shall allude to later, it has been the general desire of the committee and of Members of the House to keep the membership as low as possible and yet prevent any State losing a Member. The bill provides that 21 States shall retain their present membership; 16 will gain 1 Member each; 5 will gain 2 Members each; 2 States, California and Oklahoma, will gain 3 each; Pennsylvania gains 4; and New York gains 6.

In this connection I will state that 25 States get a Member on a major fraction. Of these 25 it will be noticed that 15 gain a Member by virtue of the major fraction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this brings us to the consideration of the vital question in the passage of this bill, and that is the question of the increase of membership.

The argument is made that the membership ought to be kept as low as possible. To this I fully agree when you couple with it the furnishing of full representation to all the people of the United States and to each and every State. We know that much of the confusion and much of the difficulty in the proceedings of the House with its present membership is due not so much to the fact that there are 391 Members here now, but to the fact that the parliamentary procedure in the House is such as to cause this confusion and make this an unwieldy body. But I want to call attention to the contemplated change in the seating arrangements of this House, by which it is expected that all the Members will be seated closer together and be brought nearer, so that they can hear and understand each other and understand the business of the House better. I verily believe that with this rearrangement an increase of 42 can well be had in the membership and yet the House be much more deliberative, and that we will be much better able to give careful and understanding consideration to measures before the House than we can under present conditions, with the seats arranged as they now are.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is very important that every part of our people should have proper representation. It is unnecessary to say that one man can represent a constituency of 200,000 more fully and more capably than he can a constituency of 400,000. There are diversified interests in different sections of the country. The calls made upon Congressmen are increasing year by year. The scope of the legislation of this House is broadening. We are legislating upon more subjects than formerly. The advancement and development of new agencies and powers call for more legislation and for more work on the part of the individual Member. The best thing that could happen for the welfare of the country would be to have each Representative fully informed by an intimate knowledge of the wants and will of the people, so as to reflect those wants and that will in the legislation of Congress.

There is a feature that I suppose I might as well allude to here, as it will come up for discussion, although it is not embraced in this bill.

An amendment will be offered providing that the apportionment to be made in the future shall be made by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not appreciate the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee was going away from the part of the measure he has just been discussing—that of the basis for representation. It may be that I did not hear all of his remarks, but he conveyed to my mind the impression that his idea was that in order to have an effective representation the basis of that representation should be smaller than is proposed by the gentlemen who oppose the measure.

Mr. HOUSTON. My position is that increasing the number of Representatives necessarily will cause each Representative to represent a smaller constituency. That being true, he can understand and know the wishes and wants of that constituency much better than he could one double that size.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then would it not be the wiser thing to have a constituency of 25,000 or 50,000 people, because if the gentleman's argument be sound in that respect there would be a more effective representation than if he represented a constituency of 211,000?

Mr. HOUSTON. That might be true in a sense, but there is a limit.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Where would the gentleman put the limit?

Mr. HOUSTON. It must be controlled by conditions that exist, by the amount of population, by the character of the legislative body that will be chosen.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Where would the gentleman suggest that the line be drawn?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have suggested, and this bill suggests, at the present time that an increase of 42 is what the country needs and demands. I believe that increase will give us a better representation than the present number of 391. There can be no hard and fast rule because it is to be adjusted according to the varying conditions at every census, keeping in mind always that a smaller body can legislate more easily than a larger one, and yet the wants of the people are the first consideration, and the larger body can proceed in a parliamentary way, giving proper consideration to measures if the Members will do their duty, attend to their business, be prompt in their seats, and listen to what is going on.

Mr. SLAYDEN. One further question. If it were necessary to prevent a State from losing a Representative, would the gentleman be in favor of an increase of 82 Members instead of 42 Members?

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, the gentleman may reduce the proposition to an absurdity by putting abnormal figures to it. These things are to be considered in the light of reason and common sense, keeping in view a fair and proper representation of what the people throughout the country require.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I understood the gentleman to state that a smaller body could be easier controlled through leadership than a larger body.

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, I did not make that statement. I am very much of the opinion that a much larger body than this, if it would observe the parliamentary law and parliamentary procedure—and they all know what the procedure is—would be much more orderly and deliberative a body than this body sometimes is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to get to the point of the amendment, I say an amendment will be offered to this bill, which I merely allude to to bring before the House and to state my objections to it, that after the next census the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall apportion the Representatives among the States of the Union, taking the number of 430 and dividing the population by that to ascertain the ratio of the average constituency of the different districts.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. SHARP. What effect would such an amendment, carried by this House, have upon a future Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was just coming to that. I do not think it would have any effect. I think it would be very unfortunate if it should have any effect. It is, to my mind, attempting to do something that is not in the power of this Congress or any other Congress to do, and which, if it had the power, to my mind would be very unwise to attempt. I think that each Congress which has the duty of apportioning Representatives should meet that duty in the light of the conditions that exist at that time. It is impossible to do otherwise. I think it is wrong to attempt to forestall the action of future Congresses.

That method was adopted once in the history of our Government. In 1850 there was a similar provision enacted into law. The attempt to put this method into operation failed. The Secretary of the Interior at that time did apportion the Representatives under that statute, making the number, I believe, 233. Congress changed that number. They were not willing to abide by that and increased the number by 8, instead of standing by the apportionment made by the Secretary of the Interior at that time. Now, it is well known to everyone here that extraordinary conditions were the cause of that effort in 1850 to fix a limit upon the Representatives at future apportionments. Those were remarkable, without parallel in this country, and will not exist again.

The emergency or the exigency that was thought then to justify it was extraordinary. It did not accomplish its purpose, because the Congress which was elected 10 years later did not observe it. I think, honestly and candidly, that the proper thing for this House to do is to increase the membership now. I think it is inconsistent with that idea for this Congress to go forward and support an increase now and at the same time attempt to enact a provision that would prevent an increase by a future Congress.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Having in mind the statement just made, is it the gentleman's opinion that 10 years from now, after the next census, that Congress would, under the law, increase the membership of this body by 42 or 62, or something of that kind?

Mr. HOUSTON. I can not give information of that kind, but I hope not.

Mr. MILLER. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the number ought to be increased beyond the 433 prescribed by this bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. At this time?

Mr. MILLER. At some future time.

Mr. HOUSTON. That can only be determined in the light of existing conditions at that future time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman's argument, but I take it for granted that he is perhaps nearly through. I would hear, if he can state it briefly, some reason why the membership at this time should be increased by 42, other than to prevent some State from losing a part of its quota. I have tried to listen to the gentleman. There has been a lot of confusion. I have heard but little of it, but I would like to have that emphatically stated.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think there are many reasons that justify the increase. I think it is a very potent reason that no State shall lose a Member. I think it is a controlling reason. There are other reasons. There has been a very great change in our country in many respects. I mean in the population of the different States and the different sections. Conditions are changed very much, and the condition is such now that I believe the increased membership will better afford representation than to have it remain as it is. I believe the increased membership will put it within the power of the Representative to more properly and capably represent the constituency which he will have than if the membership were kept down to 391.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman permit one further question in that connection? Ten years from now will not the same argument prevail for increasing the membership of the House that we now have here, namely, to prevent any State losing its regular quota? Will not that always be before the Congress?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will answer the question in this way: I think it is possible that there will be reasons for an increased membership at that time. There have been reasons at each Congress that has had the duty of passing an apportionment bill to increase the membership, with one exception. In 1843 there was no increase, otherwise there have been at every apportionment an increase of various numbers. It is quite likely that in the future there will be a demand for an increase, and I should think it more than probable that there will be an increase. It is, I grant you, well to keep that increase as small as possible. When you come to compare the representation of the constituencies in other civilized countries, in the leading nations of the world, it will be found that they have a much smaller constituency to represent than we have. No nation has as large a constituency for each Representative as have the United States.

I here insert a table showing the number represented by each member in legislative bodies of other nations:

Countries.	Census year.	Number of members in lower house.	Ratio of members to population.	Population on which ratio is based.
United Kingdom	1901	670	61,878	41,458,721
English members	1901	495	65,712	32,527,843
Scotch members	1901	72	62,112	4,472,103
Irish members	1901	103	43,289	4,458,775
Austria	1900	516	50,679	26,150,708
Belgium	1900	108	40,322	6,693,548
Denmark	1906	114	22,853	2,605,268
France	1906	584	67,212	39,252,245
Germany	1905	397	155,546	60,641,278
Greece	1907	235	11,198	2,631,952
Hungary	1900	453	42,504	19,254,559
Italy	1901	508	63,927	32,475,253
Netherlands	1908	100	58,252	5,825,198
Norway	1900	123	19,211	2,240,032
Portugal	1900	148	36,507	5,423,132
Spain	1900	406	45,857	18,618,086
Sweden	1908	230	23,606	5,429,600
Switzerland	1908	167	21,313	3,559,349

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask just one more question, and then I will not bother the gentleman again, for he has been very kind and patient. I understood the gentleman to say that he thought it advisable that each State should maintain as far as possible its present representation. Is it not the theory of our Constitution with reference to the House of Representatives that Members of this body represent the people rather than the States as entities, and should not the first consideration be a proper proportionate representation of the people of the country at large, having reference to certain areas and sections, rather than to the States as geographical subdivisions of the Nation?

Mr. HOUSTON. Without answering the gentleman's question, I can say that in order that the thing may be accomplished that he suggests should be accomplished, it is more easy to accomplish it by Representatives that are thoroughly acquainted with every part and section of the country, and every class of her people, and are for this reason better able to represent her entire citizenship.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish we could have order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the frequent confusion in the House while it is undertaking to do business like that which now prevails strikes me as the very strongest argument that could possibly be made against an increase in its numerical size. Although I voted in the last Congress for an increase in membership to 433, and will probably vote here to-day for the same increase, it is a matter of great importance to the House and the country that the question of determining the numerical size of its membership be considered with deliberation. The House of Representatives is supposed to be the real representative branch of the Federal Legislature. It is supposed to faithfully reflect the will and the matured convictions of the people of the United States, and the House ought to be large enough in numbers to be a real representative body on the one hand, and on the other hand it ought not to be so large and unwieldy as to be incapable of effectively discharging its constitutional functions. This country is vast in area, diversified in climate and in interests, and from the nature of things the legislative results of the House should be the composite will of all sections of the country in relation to matters of general legislation. The districts ought not to be so large territorially, nor so large in population, that the Representative will be unable to keep in touch with the feeling and thought of his constituents.

If districts are too large, either in area or population, he can not be in the highest sense a real representative of those whose commission he carries to this body. But a man may be a representative in the highest sense in a body that is so large that he is unable and incapable of wielding any considerable influence at all. The Committee on the Census concluded that, in view of the growth of the country in population, a membership of 433 would probably be as near an ideal membership under all the circumstances as could be adopted. The average district in the country on such a basis will contain 17,695 more population than the average district contained when the apportionment was made under the Twelfth Census. It is a sort of compromise. The increase in the House is not in proportion to the increase in population, but it is substantially 50 per cent of the increase in population. A large body, it is said, is more subject to the domination and control of parliamentary cliques and machines, and there is some force in that suggestion, of course. This body is already so large that it is necessary for it to transact its business principally through the agency of committees, which it always will do. If its size is reduced so that every question may be discussed and deliberated upon the floor, it will lose its representative character and will depart from the spirit and purpose of a representative body under the Federal Constitution. We will have to do the business of the House through the agencies of committees, and we ought to do it that way.

If conditions in the House have assumed such an aspect that the independence of the Members may be menaced through the instrumentality of parliamentary machines or cliques, I think the remedy will come in a reform of the parliamentary procedure in the House. In this Congress the majority party has adopted a new method for the appointment of standing committees. That method is on trial. I do not know what it will result in or how efficient it may be to preserve the independence of the individual Members, but in my judgment the effect of the departure will be to convert the control of the House from an autocracy into an oligarchy. My judgment is, Mr. Chairman, that in the course of time it will be discovered that a majority of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means will constitute the parliamentary machine of this body, as arbitrary and as despotic as it is possible for it to be under the old method. The large States in the Union will elect the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and each member of that committee will feel under obligations first to take care of and provide for his colleagues from his own State. I have heard some criticism of the action of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee in making assignments on standing committees in this Congress. It has been pointed out that the party Representatives in every State that has a member on the Committee on Ways and Means have been well provided for in the distribution of good committee assignments, and Representatives in the smaller States who are not fortunate enough to have a member of the great Committee on Ways and Means have to satisfy themselves with what is left. In addition to the power of appointing committees, the Ways and Means Committee is one of great influence in the affairs of the House.

In my judgment, if the majority desired to try a new experiment in the way of taking from the Speaker the power of appointing standing committees, separating the political and the parliamentary power that the rules formerly reposed in the Speaker of the House, it would have been infinitely better to have selected a committee on selection of two or three members, under limitations providing that no member of the committee on selection should be a member of any standing committee. It should be a device simply to separate or divide the parliamentary power the Speaker must necessarily have and the political power, because it requires a combination of the two to enable the Speaker of the House of Representatives to build up a machine that will dominate House action and caucus action as well. I predict, Mr. Chairman, that the method now on trial, adopted by the majority party, will result in a dismal failure in the course of a comparatively few years. There are a good many ways by which the procedure in the House may be modified and accommodated to large membership without taking from the presiding officer the large parliamentary power that he must have. In a government by political parties the country holds the majority party absolutely responsible for the performance in good faith of the pledges it made to the voters, and the country will receive and accept no apology or excuse for its failure; and the parliamentary machinery of the House must be arbitrary in a large degree. There must be parliamentary machinery enough to enable the majority to keep faith with the country, and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that under existing conditions there is not one iota more of parliamentry power in the Speaker than is absolutely necessary for him to have.

But the division of the political and parliamentary power, proper, is another proposition. I will not discuss it further to-day.

There is an element that enters into the consideration of this bill, Mr. Chairman, that my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], said was a controlling one, and that is to provide a House large enough in membership so that no State will lose a Representative. I am free to admit, supporting the 433 membership as I do, that if it were not for that element there would be comparatively little sentiment in the House for the increase in the membership above 391. Ten years ago, before the apportionment was made, the numerical size of the House was 357, and the Committee on the Census reported a bill under the Twelfth Census retaining the old membership of 357, but the sentiment in favor of increasing the number high enough to take care of all the States was strong enough in the House to defeat the committee bill and agree to a substitute fixing the membership at 386.

Now, just analyze that element for a moment. I would like to feel that this increased membership can be supported upon higher grounds than that, and I do feel that there are perhaps adequate reasons why we can stand by a 433 membership above the proposition—simply to take care of the States. As I said, I supported this bill, calling for the 433 membership, in the last Congress. I confess I did it with some degree of misgiving. I did it with the understanding that we would incorporate in the bill, and we did incorporate in the bill, a provision that under subsequent censuses the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, after ascertaining the Representative population of the country, should divide the aggregate population by the arbitrary number of 433, and using the resulting quotient as the ratio of population to membership and then dividing the Representative population of each State by that ratio, and giving each State one Representative for each full ratio of population and an additional one for each major fraction thereof.

The two were coupled together. I had a good deal of misgiving in relation to the future. Following the Eleventh Census the membership of the House was increased so that no State would lose a Representative. Following the Twelfth Census the membership of the House was increased, so that no State would lose a Representative, and now, Mr. Chairman, we are proposing to increase the membership of the House 42, and the distinguished chairman of the committee says that the mere fact that no State will lose a Representative is complete justification for our action. Where, Mr. Chairman, is the increase in membership going to stop?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman states my position stronger than I stated it. I said that was one of the controlling reasons.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I accept the modification. I did not aim to misstate the gentleman's attitude on the question. In the bill that passed last winter we provided for the future; we made the legislation prospective, just as we make all legislation.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] said he thought that policy was wrong. I can not see anything out of the way in the policy of now providing for the future. We are required by the Constitution to take a census of population every 10 years, and yet each of our census laws is entitled, for instance, "An act to provide for the Twelfth and subsequent censuses" or "to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses." It has been the custom of Congress for a number of decades to provide for the taking of the census not only of the immediate census in contemplation, but all future censuses. The census act that we passed in the last Congress for a decennial enumeration of population provides for future censuses as well. I do not see any objection at all to Congress at this time providing that after the Fourteenth Decennial Census the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall proceed to apportion Representatives among the States according to the formula that was embodied in the provision of the bill which was passed at the last Congress and for which practically all the Democratic Members voted.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman will admit, will he not, that this act, if we pass it as the gentleman suggests, would not be binding upon Congress 10 years afterwards?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course I admit that. No act that Congress can pass now will necessarily be binding upon Congress 10 years hence, or 5 years hence, for that matter. Congress has no power to pass irrepealable legislation, like the laws of the Medes and Persians. All our laws are subject, in the future, to modification or repeal when the welfare of the country may seem to require it, and a provision of this kind must of course fall within the same rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then this would simply be a suggestion to the Congress 10 years hence as to what they ought to do?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would be more than a suggestion. It would require the repeal of a positive law to do otherwise, and if we have that statute on the books 10 years hence and a proposition were made in the Congress to repeal it with a view of enlarging the membership of the House, there would be such an expression of opposition sentiment throughout the length and breadth of the land that no party would dare to undertake it. Its moral influence would be tremendous.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does not the gentleman believe that the Members of Congress elected 10 years hence would be better judges of what the people would then need than we are now?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The difficulty would be that they would be in the same condition then as we are now. In the making of the law, how many of us are looking at the situation in our own States? That is the question, Mr. Chairman, which I hope Congress will avoid now by making this provision as to the future.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield.

Mr. MANN. The suggestion was just made that if this law were passed now, it would not be binding upon Congress, and the gentleman stated that it would not be binding upon Congress. Is it not a fact that it would be binding upon Congress unless it was repealed, either directly or indirectly?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As long as it remains in force on the statute books it is binding on Congress.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would be binding on Congress and upon the country, and that is the impression which I intended to convey when I answered the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL]. It will continue to be a law until it is repealed, and if we embody that amendment in the apportionment made this year by this Congress, when the next census is taken, in the absence of legislation, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will proceed at once to apportion Representatives among the States in accordance with the formula which the law will contain. It is no surrender of legislative power to the head of a department. We prescribe what the ratio shall be. We prescribe in effect what the membership and what the numerical size of the House shall be under subsequent censuses, and the duty that will be imposed upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is not a discretion, but it is just a ministerial duty to make the arithmetical calculations involved in the apportionment.

I say, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is one of great importance, and in my judgment, if it shall be incorporated in this bill, it will stand and continue to be the law of this country for decades and possibly for generations.

The gentleman from Tennessee referred to the act of 1850. That was altogether a different provision. In 1850 Congress fixed the membership of the House at 233, and it provided that the Secretary of the Interior, after the enumeration of population had been made, should proceed to apportion 233 Representatives among the States according to the method outlined in that law.

The difficulty with that law was that it set aside the plain, simple, old-fashioned major-fraction method, the one that the gentleman so heartily approved in opening this debate.

The amendment that I shall propose to the bill retains the major-fraction principle.

The apportionment under the census of 1850 was made by the Secretary of the Interior according to that law, and it continued in force, and the apportionment of 1860 was made in a way in accordance with that law; but under that method of apportioning Representatives it was discovered that five or six States had major fractions unrepresented, and to cure what Congress thought was an injustice a special act was passed which increased the membership by giving those States Representatives for the major fractions.

There will be no such question under the proposition that will be presented to the House for consideration in connection with this bill. It preserves the major-fraction rule. It will give to every State Representatives for the full numerical ratio and a Representative for each major fraction.

In 1870, after the Civil War, when questions were before the country respecting the right of representation on the part of some of the insurrectionary States, the act of 1850 was repealed. Conditions then were exceptional. The probabilities are that if it had not been for the Civil War we would be operating under the act of 1850 to-day. Let me ask Members of this House if it is not true that the almost unanimous sentiment of the country to-day is against an increase in the membership above 391?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not hear the beginning of the gentleman's statement, and I do not know whether he stated what the effect of the act of 1850 was on the apportionment of 1860.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The apportionment of 1860 was made under the act of 1850, but in working out the problem of distribution it left four or five States with major fractions that were without representation, and Congress by a supplemental act gave each of those States a Representative on account of their major fractions.

Mr. SHERLEY. Did it have the effect of reducing the representation of any State?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, yes; you can not have an arbitrary number without reducing the representation of some States. The only way to maintain the representation of the States in each decade is by increasing the total number, because the distribution of population throughout the country is very unequal.

Mr. SHERLEY. It might be that in fixing an arbitrary number a number might be fixed large enough to take care of the increase of the next 10 years. I was not suggesting any argument against the gentleman's proposition, because I favor it very strongly, but I wanted to get at the facts as to how it worked in the one instance when it was tried.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The purpose of the act of 1850 was to fix the membership for the future at 233, and the Constitution requires Representatives to be apportioned among the States according to population. Naturally some States would lose and some States would gain at the expense of others.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not touch upon my question. In fixing an arbitrary number, if you fix the ratio small enough and the total large enough it is possible to guarantee that in 10 years no State would lose any of its membership, and I was simply asking what was the fact as to whether there was a loss or not in the apportionment of 1860.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think not in 1860; because the apportionment under the census of 1860 was made in 1861 or 1862 after some six or seven States had withdrawn from the Union and the membership of 233 was apportioned among the rest of the States.

Mr. SHERLEY. So it really never had a trial?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; that is the real truth about it.

Now, I feel that the importance of this proposition can not be overestimated. I feel that legislation upon this line at this time may be depended upon as permanent legislation. Its moral influence will be so strong as to relieve the future from these troublesome problems that confront us, and in a large measure induce our action respecting the numerical size of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to ask if the committee has considered the question as to the effect of those States whose legislatures are now in session, whether or not, under the provisions of section 4 of this bill, the legislature can now redistrict the State and put in a proviso that it shall only become operative when Congress enacts and the President approves a measure of this kind? Would that be proper redistricting legislation at this time?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think so. Several States have already done so. The Legislature of Indiana redistricted that State for congressional purposes without any conditions on a basis of 13 Representatives. It will require a House of 433 to enable the State to maintain this membership, but it anticipated the wisdom of Congress in fixing the total membership at 433 and redistricted the State accordingly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I understand that the State of North Dakota passed such an act and the governor vetoed it, did he not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. The governor had a right to veto an act of that kind, but if he had not vetoed it, I think it would have been a valid act. Mr. Chairman, there is another amendment that I propose to submit, and that is in section 4 of the bill. In section 4, line 17, the clause "by the legislatures thereof" was not contained in the bill as it passed the House about two months ago.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of those Members who are apprehensive that a larger House might be beyond control in a parliamentary way that there are not 100 Members now present, and yet the confusion is such that gentlemen can hardly be heard at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that it might be very much worse if you had 200 disorderly Members.

Mr. KENDALL. Yes; but the gentleman has a right to presume that a large part of the membership will be absent, as it is now.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the ratio, while it may be the same, will leave a very much larger membership present.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, section 4 of the bill makes provision for a change of membership, and provides that additional Representatives shall be elected from States at large if there is no local provision otherwise, and where there is no change in the representation Members shall be elected from the districts as they are at the present time until the States change the districts. The section provides:

SEC. 4. That in case of an increase in the number of Representatives in any State under this apportionment such additional Representative or Representatives shall be selected by the State at large and the other Representatives by the districts now prescribed by law until such State shall be redistricted by the legislature thereof in the manner herein prescribed; and if there be no change in the number of Representatives from a State, the Representatives thereof shall be elected from the districts now prescribed by law until such State shall be redistricted as herein prescribed.

Now, the words "by the legislature thereof" were not in the bill as it passed the last Congress. They were put in by the committee, but the House struck them out. They are incorporated in this bill. What is its effect? In the discussion of the campaign publicity bill some days ago, when reference was made to the question of primary elections and things of that kind, gentlemen on the other side said, "Leave those questions to the States." I think under the act of 1901 this clause was in the bill. Up to that time there had been no other method established by any State in the Union for the redistricting, except by the legislature thereof. Since then a number of reforms have been accomplished; a number of States in the Union have established the institution of initiative and referendum. Some States are so equipped with the lawmaking machinery that they can legislate; they can redistrict their territory for congressional purposes without the aid or assistance of the legislature. Vofers may initiate propositions, and they may refer them to the people. This provision, if it has any effect at all, will prevent those States from exercising that great function of redistricting their States for congressional purposes by the initiative and referendum altogether.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Where a legislature is elected under an unfair gerrymander, as is the case in Missouri, would it not be fair for the people to have a chance to vote on a fair and equitable apportionment scheme?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the proposition I am just coming to. There is a temptation in all the States for the party in power to take a little advantage in constituting congressional districts, a little party advantage. I do not believe, as a rule, any real permanent advantage ever came to a party for doing an unfair thing under the name of redistricting for perpetrating a gerrymander, but it happens sometimes, and we all have faith in the people. Representatives of States that have the initiative and referendum, are you willing to say that the people of your States may have the final determination of all legislation excepting the creation of congressional districts, a class of legislation that is more liable to be biased by party advantage than any other legislation? I stand here, Mr. Chairman, in this respect as the champion of the referendum, in the States that have established that institution [applause], and if politicians in the State legislatures make districts to suit their own particular ambitions or to enable their parties to secure an unfair advantage, should not the people of those States have the right to pass upon those acts of the legislature?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I understood that the gentleman is discussing section 4 of the present bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Now, with the exception of the last paragraph of that section, will the gentleman please tell us what difference there is in that bill, the one now presented, subdivision 4, and the act of January 16, 1901?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I said a moment ago there is absolutely none. The act of 1901 embodied this provision, but I said that up to that time there was not a State in the Union that had the institution of the referendum. There was not a State in the Union that had any other method of doing that business than by the legislature. Take the State of Missouri. Several years ago in the State of Missouri when the distinguished Gov. Folk was in the gubernatorial chair a legislature that I understand was altogether friendly to him made a law providing that if the legislature should fail to redistrict the State of Missouri for legislative and congressional purposes, the governor of the State should have the power to do it. That law is on the statute books to-day. There is a Democratic legislature now and a Republican governor. Has the State of Missouri the right by legislation to say how her districts shall be be made?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to state that it is practically the same with the subdivision as the act of 1901.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is not the same. It is the same in letter, but altogether different in spirit and purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Wherein is it different?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because, I undertook to explain to the gentleman the difference, that there was not a State in the Union, and never had been up to that time, that had any other method than to make the redistricting acts by the legislature, so that it would not interfere with the right of a single State. Since 1901, the gentleman knows, many States have changed their method, and the proposition now is to say to the States, "You shall not exercise that power as you think wise, but you must exercise it as Congress says you shall."

Mr. RAKER. One more question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, I have answered the gentleman sufficiently, and if he can not see the difference between the provision in 1901 and this provision, considering the conditions and circumstances, I despair of convincing him.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, the gentleman need not despair for me. I have compared the bill, and I am asking a question, Why does the gentleman insert the word "select," in line 14, in this subdivision, instead of electing your Representatives? What is the object of this important change?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. I did not prepare this bill. This is the Houston bill. This is the bill that the committee reported. The word "select" may have been used before, but it does not make any difference.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, which he undoubtedly made without proper investigation, to the effect that the legislature of Missouri had enacted a law providing for the redistricting or districting of the State into congressional districts by the governor We have no such law, and there is no such law on the statute books.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I, of course, am glad to hear the gentleman's views, but I have heard from a good many men from the State of Missouri who held a different view of the question.

Mr. HAMLIN. Has the gentleman examined the statutes? They are available.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not, but I just used that as a matter of illustration——

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman is a good lawyer, and if he wants to state a fact why did not he examine the statutes for himself?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I may be a little bit careless in stating things in the way of argument, but I merely used that law for the purpose of illustration. The point I am undertaking to make is that if any State should do in relation to congressional districts what the legislature, as the gentleman has said, has done in relation to legislative districts, this law will prevent them from doing it. You are State-rights people. Are you in favor of giving authority to Congress to interfere with the power of your State legislatures to handle by proper means legislative matters that are purely local? Are you willing to go on record in favor of a proposition of an act of Congress that will limit the power of the State legislatures to redistrict their States for congressional purposes? If Congress has the power to do this, it has the power to say what kind of districts you shall make. That may be the next step in legislation, depending upon exigencies and party conditions.

Mr. HAMLIN. Answering the gentleman's interrogatory, I am willing to let this law contain the same provision in that regard that the law passed by the Republicans in 1872, in 1882, in 1891, and 1901 contained. I am willing to stand by that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, that is the only argument there is in favor of it—that the provision was in an act of Congress at a time when, by all history and conditions and public sentiment, there was no possibility of its interfering with any legislation of a State. The gentleman says, because it occurred under those circumstances, that he is willing to stand by it now when it will overthrow the cherished institutions of a great many States of the Union. If he is willing to stand by the provision on that kind of an argument, I have no criticism to make.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL], who has been standing on his feet some time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Something was said about the law of Missouri and the question of the governor redistricting the State. I will say to my friend now that I have a copy of the law that has been frequently referred to in this House upon that subject, and it plainly applies to the redistricting of the State for electoral purposes and not for congressional purposes. I have a copy of it here.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I notice this: When this measure was up for consideration in the last Congress this question came up in the committee and the Missouri situation was discussed, and every Member, I think, on the other side of the House stood together; they stood in solid phalanx for this provision. It looked like there was some fear lurking in this little clause. I can not believe that the whole Democratic Party is so hostile to the institution of referendum that they are opposed to submitting to the voters of their several States the right to say whether they are ready to perpetrate an unjust and unfair gerrymander. I can hardly believe that the whole Democratic Party occupies such an attitude as that. Then, what is the reason——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I frankly say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not looked into this provision, and I never saw the bill until a few moments ago. It has just been reported in. But I represent one of the States where we have the initiative and referendum, adopted last fall, and I am very heartily in favor of it. I would like to ask whether the gentleman has looked into the matter sufficiently to say, in the event that a legislature does enact a reapportionment law that the people of the State look upon as unfair and they determine to refer it to the voters, can not the voters pass upon it and determine whether or not it is a good law, and, if they reject it, let the legislature pass a fair and just law? And the legislature would have to pass a law some time or other in conformity with this, the will of the people. In other words, the initiative would not apply to this matter, but merely to the referendum. The action of the people would be merely a veto on a bad gerrymander.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand it may. The initiative applies to all kinds of legislation where they do not have it in modified form—a mild type of it. When the act of Congress says it shall be done by the legislature thereof, that makes the legislature the supreme power.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. To initiate?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; to make the law. No power shall overthrow that—the referendum or anything else.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me ask you this question: Suppose the constitution of the States provide that all those legislative acts may be referred. Now, would it not have the effect——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That involves the question of whether the Congress has jurisdiction over the subject, and if it has, its laws are supreme.

If it has authority to legislate, its laws are higher than initiatives and acts of the legislatures, and constitutions in the bargain.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not seem to be able to make myself clear. My impression is—or that is my first thought about it—that it would be merely a veto power that the referendum would have.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me say to my good friend from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] that there is one easy way out of it, and that is by striking out the provision. Then you will not lose any sleep, and you can square yourself with your constituents when you go home by saying to them that you voted against the provision that it seemed might at least take from them the power to say whether your legislature had done an unfair thing in the dividing of the State into congressional districts.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If I thought the gentleman's construction was correct, I certainly would vote with him.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is danger of it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana this question: Suppose any State should in its constitution provide for the initiative and referendum, or suppose it would in its constitution provide that the redistricting for congressional purposes should be made by the governor, or by a commission of 3, or 5, or 11, where, in the Constitution of the United States is there anything conferring upon Congress the authority to overturn those State constitutional provisions and dictate to the State the manner in which it shall be redistricted?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is some reference to the right of Congress to provide the manner, and some other things, in which Representatives of the House may be chosen.

Now I want to conclude in a minute.

Mr. OLMSTED. Shall choose the Representatives, but not make the districts in which they are to be chosen. The Constitution does confer upon Congress powers to regulate "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives." If that gives Congress authority to dictate how districts shall be created it gives Congress itself authority to divide the States into districts.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman has stated that since 1901 several States have adopted the referendum, but has urged that against the reason for the inclusion of these words in section 4, "or by the legislature thereof." I desire to ask the gentleman if he can cite any State which has the referendum in which the question must not originally be referred by the legislature to the people before the people have a right to vote upon it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know what the State provisions are, but I am simply contending that the States shall have the right to do this if they see fit to do so; and this provision, if it is enforced at all, will prevent the States from doing it. The States may desire to do it, and it may seem desirable. And now, let the States have the right in their own way to do these things and not undertake to control them by congressional legislation.

Mr. SMALL. Now, another question: In those States which have the initiative, is it not up to the legislature finally to confirm or approve it before it shall become a law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; that is not necessarily so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. People may initiate in States and have a provision referred, and if it is agreed to by the voters it is a law on proclamation of the governor, and I think it is irrepealable in some States by even the legislature.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The legislature can not even repeal a law made in that way.

Mr. SMALL. And the initiative may be put in force without any subsequent act of the legislature?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, surely. The people can make laws while they are farming and carrying on the various activities of industrial life without going to the expense of having a legislature in session; and I think, if they see fit, they should make legislation fixing the boundaries of congressional districts.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado for a question.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. What is the amendment that the gentleman from Indiana suggests ought to be made?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Just to strike out the language "by the legislature thereof," in line 17, on page 4. That is all.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now, let me suggest to the gentleman, would it not be better for this amendment to be made by the legislature of the State, and that would include the authority by initiative or referendum, or by the legislature in the States where they do not have initiative and referendum?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, that is a question that we might consider. I am going to support this amendment and give the House an opportunity to vote on it, on a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; I will yield for a question. Then I must conclude.

Mr. RAKER. Do I understand that in the gentleman's State he has the initiative and referendum now?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no.

Mr. RAKER. And do I understand that you are afraid in your State that if it is given to the legislature to redistrict your people will not have the opportunity to provide by the initiative and referendum for this apportionment of which you are so heartily in favor? Is that right?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no. The State of Indiana does not happen to have the initiative and referendum, but I happen to be one of the lawmakers for California and for all the States of the Union. This provision here happens to be one of general legislation, one of general policy.

Mr. RAKER. I understand the gentleman is heartily in favor of the initiative and referendum?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am heartily in favor of allowing the States, under reasonable limitations, to do what they please, and I am against any act of Congress that will take from the States their power over a matter of this importance. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not answer the questions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I expect to move to recommit the bill at the proper time with instructions to amend by incorporating section 3, that one making provision for the future, and the amendment I have just discussed.

Now I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that anything which may be said here and now can prevent the proposed increase in the membership of this House. However, I wish to utter my sincere and earnest protest because I believe that it is bad public economy; that it will prove harmful to the House, decreasing its efficiency as a legislative body, and that it means a loss of rights, privileges, and power to every Member.

PUBLIC ECONOMY.

At the opening of this session of Congress the great party now in power in this Chamber announced to the country that it had voluntarily lopped off useless employees and thus had effected a saving to the taxpayers of the country of $182,000. This announcement, I am convinced, was received by the people of the country with real satisfaction; not so much because of the amount of money saved, but because it suggested the new public spirit that is passing over the land. It suggested that the old sordid, selfish, and narrow practice was a thing of the past, and that the party now in power would move upon the higher basic principle of subordinating private gain and personal advantage to the public good.

THE REAL TEST.

May I remind gentlemen upon that side of the center aisle that it is not the first step that counts most, however important it may be in itself. It is the next and the next and the next, and so on to the end. It is an old proverb and true that it is not safe to praise the day until the night has come. Perhaps it is not safer to praise a political party until its course has been run. Sometimes it happens that when an evil spirit is driven out it returns accompanied by other evil spirits, and then the last state is worse than the first. No political party can save $1 to-day of the people's money, then waste that dollar to-morrow and throw two good dollars after it, and expect praise for public economy. It was comparatively easy after all to lop off the salaries of employees, but the real test comes to us in this apportionment measure. Are we willing to risk our political lives in the interests of good public service? The real test is the personal test. I fear, however, that we will not stand this test. Personal self-interest is the controlling factor back of this proposed increase of membership. We might as well admit it and be honest with each other and the public.

CONSISTENCY VERSUS SELF-INTEREST.

Gentlemen, you have claimed that you propose to lop off the salaries of needless employees. I call your attention to the fact that this harmful increase of membership involves an increase of salaries to the amount of $315,000, or $33,000 more than the sum you claim you will save in the salaries of employees. If that saving was a virtuous act, why not be consistent and save this larger amount also? Is your self-interest in the way? I call your attention to the further fact that when you reckon the allowances for stationery and the mileage of these 42 additional Members once or twice a session, depending upon the frequency of extra sessions, and also the salaries of secretaries, you have reached a sum over $400,000, or more than twice the amount that you claim to save in lopping off the salaries of employees.

Now, if that was a praiseworthy act, then this is doubly so. Why not be consistent?

But that is not all. When you stop to reckon the cost of printing incident to the RECORD, incident to the circulation of speeches, incident to the circulation of documents; when you count the cost of the extra allowance for seeds and for bulletins for 42 more Members, and the use of the franking privilege; when you reckon the cost of providing for 42 rooms in the Office Building, with fixtures and furniture and supplies, and the extra employees necessary to take care of this increased membership; and, finally, when you estimate the increased appropriations that must be made—for these 42 additional Members will ask for their proportionate share in the public-building bills, in the river and harbor bills, and in many other public bills—you will find that half a million dollars is the minimum of tax burden you have imposed upon the country for all the years to come to meet your own selfish interests. [Applause.]

Again I say to you, if that first saving was a virtuous act, you have now a chance to more than treble it in quality and quantity.

HARM TO THE HOUSE.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is a more serious objection than the mere matter of money expense. I believe that it will tend directly to decrease the efficiency of this House as a legislative agency in the public service. [Applause.] Writers upon legislative institutions now claim that the Senate is the superior legislative body in this country. I regret to say I believe that is true. They say it is due to the flexibility of the Senate rules, to the longer tenure of Senators, but especially to the reduced membership of the Senate as compared with the House.

If that be true, it is not the fault of the framers of our Constitution, because that instrument gave equal power to each branch of this Congress. It is the fault of those who have gone before us. They let their self-interest, their political ends, interfere, just as Members now propose to permit their political ends to interfere with doing justice to those who are to come after us.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON. Gladly.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not the experience of the gentleman that the less numerous branch of every legislative body is the one most generally extravagant with the people's money? And is it not further true that the appropriations made by Congress are always swelled by the other branch less numerous than this?

Mr. NELSON. No; that is not quite true. This House initiates appropriation bills and the other branch generally has to swell them in order to get what that body thinks proper and necessary. But we are not discussing that subject. We are discussing the difference between 391 and 433 Members in this body.

Mr. JAMES. I was merely suggesting that as an answer to the gentleman's position on the subject of economy. Is not the truth about it this, that that body which is most numerous and nearest the people always guards more carefully the public money, and that body farthest removed and least frequently elected is most extravagant with the people's money?

Mr. NELSON. That is due not to the number of Members in each body, but to the fact that the Senators are removed from the people by being elected by the State legislatures. [Applause.]

But to return to the point I was about to make when the gentleman from Kentucky interrupted. The amount of power in each legislative branch is equal under the Constitution. For the sake of illustration, let us assume that the power of each branch of the Congress may be represented as 100 legislative units. There are 92 Members of the Senate. It follows that each Senator represents about 1.2 units of legislative power; but with 391 Members in this House now, our power is so subdivided that each Member has less than 25 per cent of the power of a Senator. In other words, the power of each Senator is four times as great as the power of each Representative.

The Senator has, in fact, four times the opportunity of a Member in debate, four times the opportunity for offering amendments, four times the opportunity for service upon important committees, four times the opportunity of taking part in legislation upon the floor, and his vote counts four times as much in the enactment or defeat of legislation. And yet the committee proposes further to subdivide power of representation in this House by increasing its membership by 42, an increase of over 10 per cent. But gentlemen may say that the power remains in the House, however subdivided it may be among a numerous membership. This is technically true, but writers on legislative institutions assert that a legislative body, as a whole, in standing, dignity, power, and influence, is directly proportioned to the standing, dignity, power, and influence of its individual Members. This seems to me to be quite true, because I believe that a great legislative body can no more be constructed out of four or five hundred Lilliputian legislators than you can create a great world power out of a hundred million pigmy men and women. I will state the effect in this exact form: As we increase the membership we decrease the Member.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly I yield.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of legislation by the initiative and referendum?

Mr. NELSON. I am.

Mr. SIMS. Then, if the gentleman is in favor of legislation by all the people, how does he square that by his argument for a reduced number in the legislative body?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, the claim that increase of membership makes the House more representative is sham, and the gentleman knows it as well as any of us. It is self-interest which is the real controlling motive here. This talk about getting nearer the people by increasing the membership is as meaningless as it is misleading and wholly devoid of real merit. The real purpose and motive that is back of this proposed increase was admitted by the chairman of the Committee on Census [Mr. HOUSTON]. He said it was the controlling motive, and it was also admitted by the ranking Republican member [Mr. CRUMPACKER] when he said that, looking to the future, he proposed to offer an amendment that would make it more difficult hereafter for self-interest to control the action of Members in fixing the membership of the House.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the gentleman to say that an increased number of legislators would reduce the power and dignity of the body and would weaken it.

Mr. NELSON. In the use of the initiative and referendum the gentleman knows that the people will vote only on one or a very few propositions, and that they will have a long time to consider them. The gentleman knows that a reduced membership is more efficient than a great, big, unwieldy body of four or five hundred men.

Mr. SIMS. What does the gentleman mean by "efficiency"?

Mr. NELSON. I mean by that, attending to the business of the country properly. But my objection, Mr. Chairman, goes further. In this increase I see a loss to every Member and to his constituency in representation. I appeal to every Member within the sound of my voice, if he has proper self-interest, if he has a proper self-respect, to vote against this surrender of his rights, powers, and privileges. If he has not, I ask him to consider his constituency and his successors in years to come.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. NELSON. I will yield.

Mr. CARLIN. I understood the gentleman to say that a smaller number of men would constitute a better legislative body than a large one. If that be true, to carry out the gentleman's argument to the last analysis, would not the gentleman reduce the number below 391?

Mr. NELSON. With great pleasure; I would gladly vote for that proposition.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman would vote to reduce it to 191?

Mr. NELSON. I think about 200 or 250 would be a good working House of Representatives.

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman's argument is good, that a smaller number is better than a larger number, why not reduce it to 100?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's logic would reduce it to 1.

Mr. CARLIN. The logic of the gentleman from Wisconsin would reduce it to 1, not mine.

Mr. NELSON. To reverse it, if the gentleman's logic is right, a million is preferable to 250. [Applause.]

Mr. CARLIN. Well, do not let us reverse anybody's logic; let us take it as the gentleman stated it, that a smaller number is better than a larger number.

Mr. NELSON. I am talking about a reasonable thing and not something extreme either way. I am opposed to diminishing the number so that it would be lessened in efficiency, and I am opposed to increasing it, for the same reason.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman thinks that about 250 would be the proper number?

Mr. NELSON. I would vote for that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's position is that he is against the number of 433?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it is a choice between 391 and 433, and I am in favor of 391, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment at the proper place in the bill to that effect.

Now, I call the attention of the House to this fact, that we have striven for reforms in this body; we have sought to make it a more efficient legislative body; we have sought to restore the rights, privileges, and the prerogatives of the Members of this body——

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman thinks a membership of 250 is about what this House ought to be, why not offer his amendment for that instead of for 391?

Mr. NELSON. Because I am trying to attain that which is possible. I know that an amendment to fix the number at 250 would strike directly at the self-interest of too many Members, and I might possibly get the 391.

Mr. CARLIN. Does the gentleman think it possible to do so?

Mr. NELSON. I fondly hope so.

Mr. CARLIN. That does not answer the question. Does the gentleman think it possible?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, if you upon the Democratic side would rise to the occasion—you are responsible, if anybody shall be responsible, for this increased membership of the House.

Mr. CARLIN. We are going to rise to the occasion. That is what I am trying to tell the gentleman now.

Mr. NELSON. The country will hold the Democratic Party responsible for this increase in the burden of taxation placed upon the people, for the destruction of the efficiency of this House, and for the reduction of the individual rights of Members.

Mr. CARLIN. Does not the gentleman recall that the last House, a Republican House, voted for a membership of 433, and was he not a Member of that body?

Mr. NELSON. Only a fraction of the Republican Party voted in that way.

Mr. CARLIN. But it was a Republican House, and it passed that bill.

Mr. NELSON. Ah, by Democratic votes. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman can not put the responsibility upon the minority, although we are glad in this instance to take the responsibility.

Mr. NELSON. But now you are in control, and you will be responsible.

Mr. CARLIN. We expect to be responsible for many years to come.

Mr. MANN. Great expectations!

RIGHTS OF MEMBERS SURRENDERED.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, we have striven to improve the efficiency of this House; we have striven to restore the rights and privileges of Members. Now we are taking a step that tends directly to destroy all of the good that we have accomplished. The present honored Speaker of this House is entitled to great credit, not only for having labored for the efficiency of the House as a legislative body but for restoring the rights and privileges to the membership of this body. With many on this side he labored to change the rules of the House to accomplish these desirable improvements; but now I fear that his eyes are fixed upon Missouri more than upon the United States.

What was our complaint? We complained of too much centralization of power in the hands of the few. An increase of 42 Members must necessarily, if the work of the country is to be done, tend to centralize power in the few or the one. We have complained that the Hall of the House is too large, and we have taken steps to remedy that evil; but if we now increase the membership we destroy our own purpose and we make the House too cramped to accommodate this increased membership.

We have complained of too much speech making in this Chamber, but an addition of 42 Members must necessarily tend to aggravate the talk evil. We have complained of lack of time to do the work of the country. Surely an addition of 42 Members, with increased roll calls and in other ways of wasting time, must directly tend to intensify that evil. We have complained of lack of individual recognition. The increase of membership must further destroy the opportunity of individual recognition in this House. We have complained of lack of committee assignments upon working committees. The increased membership must further tend to diminish every Member's opportunity for good committee assignments. The leaders have complained time and again of a growing lack of interest in the routine business of the House. An increase of membership, lessening each Member's proportion of the work, must directly tend to diminish individual interest in the routine of legislation. Writers in the press and in the magazines say that the great men, the Reeds, the McKinleys, the Clays, the Calhouns, the Websters, are no longer here.

If that be true, will this increase of membership, further diminishing our rights, privileges, and powers, induce Members of great talent and ability to serve in this House? Surely not. I most earnestly protest against this increase as an outrage upon the rights of Members and their privileges. [Applause.]

THE WISCONSIN SPIRIT.

It is not only economically bad, but it can not be defended upon any moral basis. Wisconsin is one of the States that will lose a Member if this proposed increase is not passed. Why should we not vote solidly for it? Self-interest would dictate that we should. We are against it because we know that the Wisconsin spirit would condemn us if we did. We would be sham representatives of old Wisconsin if we voted otherwise. Wisconsin not only preaches the doctrine of subordination of private gain and personal advantage to public good, but Wisconsin puts it into practice, and it is the Wisconsin spirit that is permeating the Nation to-day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NELSON. May I have more time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. NELSON. I thank both gentlemen, but I shall conclude presently. Is this proposition morally right? Gentlemen can easily see that if a "slush fund" was provided by private subscription with which to continue Members in this House it would be reprehensible, but here it is proposed virtually to provide an insurance fund at the public expense to maintain Members in this House. If a private jack pot is wrong is a public jack pot right?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. What is a jack pot?

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman knows; he lives in Missouri, and it was in Missouri that the jack pot was worked off. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The gentleman has no right to assume that I know. I was asking the question what it is. I asked for the benefit of my friend from Illinois who applauded.

Mr. NELSON. I know the gentleman knows so much that he knows what a jack pot is.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That is an assumption.

Mr. CARLIN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin know about a jack pot?

Mr. NELSON. We do not have the real jack pot in Wisconsin, but there has been of late too much use of money. I desire to say to the gentleman that if he cares to read the best corrupt-practices act ever enacted anywhere I want him to read the act that is about to be placed upon the statute books of Wisconsin. [Applause.]

Mr. CARLIN. Does the gentleman speak for the State of Wisconsin? Can the gentleman tell what acts they are going to put upon the statute books?

Mr. NELSON. I know their ability, desire, and pledge to do so. I have read the bill drafted, and I speak with knowledge so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CARLIN. I am glad to know the gentleman can do that.

Mr. KOPP. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON. I will.

Mr. KOPP. I am interested in knowing just why 433 was agreed upon. Can the gentleman explain that?

Mr. NELSON. I think that everybody knows it was to prevent a loss to some States of Members in this House, and that is the controlling reason why so many now intend to vote for this proposed increase in representation.

But I must move on. I wish to remind gentlemen that we are sworn to faithfully discharge the duties of our office, and I believe that we can not keep that obligation if we permit our private interests or personal advantage to influence us against the public good. I believe that the right spirit can be defined in this way. It is said by the Highest Authority that "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." May we not paraphrase that by saying, Greater love hath no man for his country than he who risks his life, if need be, for the public good, and may we not reverse it and say, Less love hath no man for his country than he who prostitutes the public service, as proposed in this bill, for private, personal, and political ends?

Mr. Chairman, to my mind it is perfectly clear that economically this proposed increase means an extravagant waste of the public funds; morally it seems a clear violation of our constitutional obligations in spirit if not in letter, and politically it appears to be in veiled form indirect treason to the best interests of our common country. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], a member of the committee.

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] 10 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that I will be understood as being entirely sincere in confessing the embarrassment a new Member must feel, exaggerated in my case by the attitude I am compelled, apparently, to take this afternoon. It is not an attitude of opposition to the bill, because it heartily meets my favor, but an attitude which may seem to older Members as rather forward in a gentleman as new as myself—a didactic or schoolmaster attitude. With this sincere apology I trust I shall not be misunderstood.

There are two views evidently manifest here to-day. They are views that must become manifest whenever the subject of the number of the membership of the House comes up. The membership here has two functions. There is the first function of representing the people, which requires numbers. There is again the second, the function of deliberating. It may seem a rash statement to make, but I think that the latter function has been nearly completely lost in this House, lost almost since the time of the war; and I want to suggest that in other countries with parliamentary experience as extensive as ours, a method seems to have been found which reconciles the circumstance of numbers sufficiently large to be representative with the equally important need for deliberative character in parliamentary work. What does deliberation mean? It does not mean oratory. No one, I am sure, will be so indulgent as to suggest that what is taking place this afternoon is "deliberation." It means consultation, not contentious and, perhaps, vainglorious speech. It requires an effective opportunity for each Member, at a time when the legislation is in its plastic state or its formative stages to contribute to its formation such knowledge or suggestion as he may have. That manifestly can not be well done in a body even as large as 100. It can not be done at all in a body as large as 400. Now, when I speak of the method adopted by other parliaments, understand me as speaking of absolutely every important country of Europe, except Great Britain. They have secured there not only the representative function by having a membership sufficiently large to be actually democratic—and I only stop to suggest the relation of large membership to democracy—but have safeguarded the deliberative function as well. At the opening of a session the President of the lower house of the German Parliament puts in a hat 397 names, corresponding to the membership of that body.

The first 40 taken out constitute section 1; the second, section 2; the third, section 3; and so on until the whole membership of the body has been covered. The operations of section 1 may be taken as illustrative of the operations of them all. It repairs to a room of its own, selects a chairman and a secretary. All general bills are referred to the sections in a prescribed order and are considered by all the sections, at the same time, in their different rooms. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is absent, the ladies and our constituents are absent, and so a great deal of "punk" is taken out of the discussion. [Laughter and applause.] The discussion of the measure, therefore, becomes meet and relevant, suggestive and consultative rather than oratorical; and all the points made are taken down by the secretary. When they are through with the consideration of the measure a reporter or spokesman is selected by the section. He is usually the man who has studied and obtained special knowledge of the particular subject, and in a body large enough to be representative there is apt to be a man specially qualified with regard to the particular subject. The spokesman reports to the Speaker of the House the fact that the section has concluded its consideration of the measure. When a majority of the reporters have so reported a meeting of the reporters of all the sections is called by the Speaker, which meeting is known as the central section. The reporters of the central section compare their reports, eliminate the mere chaff, reduce to a common method of expression the many various ways of stating a provision, and make a complete analysis of the arguments in relation to the bill, when a report is made by the reporters in common to the House itself. The measure then goes on the calendar of that body to receive such treatment as the general parliamentary rules may prescribe for its final disposition.

Now, the features of these deliberative divisions are these: Every member in such a parliament has an effectual opportunity at some time during the progress of a measure and while it is plastic and formative to contribute an amendment or suggestion; an effective opportunity to deliberate; for the real deliberation takes place in those sections as they sit coincidentally upon a particular measure. That is one of the virtues.

Another virtue is that the law of the survival of the fittest has an application to the Members without regard to whether they are new Members or old; there is a process of selection securing the talent most apposite to the measure. If it so happens that the new Member belonging to a particular section shows, let us fancy, particular knowledge about parcels post or a compensation bill, that he knows more of that subject than the others and will be best able to handle it in a competent manner, he is selected as the reporter for that measure and submits the report of his section to the central section. If, again, it transpires that in the central section he displays the same superiority, he is selected as the common reporter for the central section, representative of the whole deliberative body. In that way, in utter disregard of the mere accidents of the distribution of committee appointments, the man most competent, the person most representative of the views of the majority of the deliberative body, is selected to steer the measure before the House when it reaches that stage.

A characteristic illustration of its operation may be seen in the instance of a very distinguished man, the late prime minister of France. As every member belongs to some section and has an opportunity to participate in the consideration of every measure referred to it, it eventuated in his case, with regard to a notable measure, that he was considered the most competent master of the subject in his section. He was accordingly selected by his section as the spokesman for it. In the central section again, the same fact developed. He was again the man selected to steer the measure through the turbulent House of Deputies of France. He was next heard of throughout the world as Briand, the prime minister of France, although belonging to an extremely minor party, with very radical feelings and opinions, and in a country that respects property as much as we do here. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COVINGTON. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. HOUSTON. The time is all promised.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] to give the gentleman half my time, whatever it is.

THE FUNCTION OF DELIBERATION.

Mr. LEWIS. It never could have been intended that the membership of the House should completely delegate to a mere fraction of itself the exclusive power to deliberate on its measures. That is, however, the fact. When a committee has concluded with a measure and the form it has given it is before the House, that form is commonly too rigid to receive amendment. The amendment proposed may be good, it may be insufficient in form, but capable of being made good, it matters little, it might as well be wholly bad for any real chance it may have for adoption. It is a matter of surprise, often of chagrin, to our constituents to find us voting down amendments on the floor which seem to be along the lines of our known views. There are reasons for such action, which a short experience renders plain enough. First, excluded from participation in the deliberations of the committee on the measure the average Member does not know the measure as thoroughly as he should. Second, under such circumstances he naturally presumes the committee's work to be thorough enough. Third, he feels that the House may not wisely reform the measure, and that the amendment may not consist with the rest of the measure. Added to these reasons are the appeals made in the name of the chairman of the committee—a kind of subparty potentate. One or the other or all of these reasons usually act, and so the measure is usually crystallized in the form it leaves the committee. With rare exceptions its plasticity does not survive its formative life in the committee room, and its reformation in the House becomes impossible for want of a workable deliberative function there.

AYE-AND-NAY VOTERS.

The absence of a real prerogative of deliberation in the Member is a most serious infirmity in any parliamentary body; it reduces the Members to mere aye-and-nay voters on referendums from the committees. But in our system, with a popular House designed to give legislative voice to the demands of the people and a nonrepresentative body to impose vetoes on its work, the loss of real deliberative power is a matter of grave and fundamental concern. Many consequences flow from it, none of them good, and not the least evil or the least certain of the evils, is a radical departure of character in the Member himself. Denied the opportunity to actively participate in the formation and determination of legislation, his energies seek other fields. He can attend to his "fences" if denied occupation in attending to the real needs of his people, and this diversion of character and function as a fact has become so accepted that a "hard-working Representative" is now commonly recognized as the more active seed and pamphlet distributor, the digger for jobs and for favors for his voting friends. The great honor and the great opportunity for public service designed in the Constitution has degenerated into a mere job.

EVOLUTION OF PROCEDURE—REAL FUNCTION OF COMMITTEE.

The rightful purpose of a committee is to investigate and determine particular conditions of facts. It may be likened to a grand jury and has the same inquisitorial talents and efficiency. To ascertain facts and circumstances not within the common knowledge of Members and to report its findings is a highly useful function and one that no one could wish to impair—a function sufficiently extensive and important, even legitimately confined, when we realize that it covers the whole field of "private" legislation, including every measure in which an appropriation is the principal object. This field requires acquaintance with particular facts and unstable conditions, so minute and so multiplied that the aggregate membership can not encompass them and must act in scouting parties rather than as a whole. Of its efficiency as a tribunal for acquiring facts and determining them I have heard of no general complaint. This is its natural function, and it performs it reasonably well. How stands the matter with regard to general lawmaking? I mean by "general lawmaking" those subjects with which the common knowledge of the House and the will of its Members are competent to deal. There are such subjects; they concern the general welfare; opinions upon them are determined by general knowledge, whether of reading or experience. The House, if sufficiently large in numbers to be representative, will have competent knowledge of them and will exercise a judgment broader in its vision and a constructive disposition wiser in its outlines than any mere committee can be expected to do. "In a multitude of counselors there is wisdom" with respect to such subjects, and though not so numerous they are by far the most important coming before this body. What has been the record of the committee system? Diverted from its true function and wrongly applied to general legislation, dethroning the deliberative function of the House, its results may be summarized as—

(a) Nonrepresentative knowledge of the subject and a fractional view in forming the measure.

(b) Indifference to legislation and insufficient attention.

(c) Particular susceptibility to obstructive influence, from its weakness of numbers and dependence on chairman. No journal and insufficient publicity of conduct of its members.

(d) "Packed" committees and legislation delayed a generation, and then only partial solutions, and another generation required for adequate solution.

Just as surely as the House has lost the power to deliberate, so has the committee method shown itself to be subversive and ineffectual when wrongly applied to general legislation. Is there a remedy which will relieve the committee of its abnormal duties and restore the proud power of deliberation to the membership of this House?

DELIBERATIVE SECTIONS OR DIVISIONS.

The evolution of parliamentary agencies has been usually twofold. The committee agency has already been discussed. The second agency is the deliberative division, variously called in other countries the sections, bureaus, or groups, and designed to overcome the difficulties of deliberating in bodies sufficiently large to be representative. Both agencies have developed, like the two arms of our bodies, in corresponding degrees in nearly all countries except Great Britain and our own, and are in actual use in Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Hungary, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Russia, Spain, and Switzerland, and perhaps others. To prevent packing, the divisions are always constituted by lot. At the opening of the session the presiding officer draws from a box containing identification numbers for the whole membership, say 40 names, which will constitute section 1. The next 40 drawn will constitute section 2, and so forth, until the whole membership has been assigned in sections. Each section selects its chairman and secretary and keeps a journal showing the attendance of members, their votes, and so forth. The sections assemble daily in their rooms for examination and discussion of the subjects of general legislation before the House, in an order determined upon, and minutes are taken of the points discussed and of amendments and suggestions. When a conclusion has been reached a reporter (spokesman) is selected, who makes a printed report to the presiding officer, who, when a majority of the sections have so concluded, calls a meeting of the central section, composed of the reporters of the several sections, which reports the measure to the house, after having fully analyzed it, eliminated the chaff in the reports from the sections, and stated the real points in controversy, appointing a common reporter to present the subject. Rules are provided to facilitate consideration of the measures referred to the sections, and agencies provided for determining the order of precedence of measures before the sections. I append brief, and necessarily incomplete, summaries of the institution as practiced in a number of countries.

FEATURES OF DELIBERATIVE DIVISIONS.

(a) Real deliberation of entire membership on general legislation.

(b) Effective opportunity in each Member to participate in formation of measure while it is plastic.

(c) Full consideration of amendments while measure is in its formative stages.

(d) Discussions in sections more relevant, and mental attitude of Members more receptive. Chaff eliminated in central section.

(e) Member gets more minute acquaintance with the features of the measure; and resulting discussions in the House are in closer relation to the real controversy.

(f) More thorough thrashing out of arguments pro and con in the sections, and a final analysis of all in the reports.

(g) The survival, or natural selection, of the fittest, and utilization of the best knowledge and talent in the House, irrespective of the accidents of new membership or committee preferences.

(h) Elimination of packing of committees, or obstruction of progressive legislation in committees. Real publicity in sections and journal of its proceedings.

(i) Sections fully responsive to intelligent public demands; representative, and therefore, broader views in formation of measures.

ADAPTATION TO UNITED STATES.

There are manifestly some slight differences which would invite modifications of the institution when applied to this body. The most obvious only can be dealt with now. The political constitution of the sections would have to harmonize with the political character of the majority here, and this could be accomplished by the simple device of having two boxes to draw from, representing respectively the major and minor parties. If the membership were 433 and the majority were 83, then each would have, as near as might be, the same relative number in each section. By drawing from the boxes in each section in proportion to ratio of party representation, both parties would be secured their numerical rights in the constitution of the sections, and the will of the majority be always in a position to act.

JURISDICTION OF SECTIONS.

Broadly speaking, the deliberations of the sections should extend to all matters in which principles and general knowledge are the necessary qualifications for judgment. This embraces nearly all legislative subjects which affect the relations of citizens to each other, and are defined by the law writers as substantive and remedial rights. Their determination make drafts upon the common sentiment and intelligence only, and do not require the inquisitorial and fact-hunting processes of a committee. This policy would refer all private measures and, perhaps, all appropriation bills to the committees, and leave to the sections those much less numerous but much more important mandates of legislation, which determine the rights of the people from age to age. Jurisdictional questions would, of course, arise. It might be a matter of doubt with some whether the question of fortifying the Panama Canal should go to committee as carrying an appropriation or to the sections as determining a serious question of national policy. But these questions arise now, and are even more complex when determining to which committee a bill shall go.

ORDER OF PRIORITY—IN SECTIONS.

Methods for ascertaining the precedence of measures for consideration before the sections are, of course, matters of the first importance, and should be adapted here, as in other countries, to the real conditions of legislative necessity. There are doubtless some subjects which should have a formal or dogmatic precedence, to be defined by rule, though I shall not stop to name them now. Generally speaking, in our system the order of priority of specific measures should be determined by a resolution of the House at the beginning of each Congress. This would mean the party caucus, and its operation ought to result in eradicating the abuses of filibustering of such recent and deleterious occurrence here. There are many ways in which the majority could make its selection of subjects for precedence of treatment, and it is accomplished abroad upon demand from a majority of the sections. The President's message, when the House is of his party, or the party platform when not, would be charts of guidance; and popular demands, acting on the majority, in cases of more recent occasion, would naturally determine the really momentous consideration of the disposition of parliamentary time.

I shall not enter into a discussion of numerous minor matters related to the main proposition—how many should constitute a section; how many a quorum for a section; how long each day the sections should deliberate; whether they ought to be reconstituted each month, as abroad, to secure wider acquaintance of Members and to prevent the development of concentrative control, as in our committees. These are matters of importance, but yet of a detail too extensive for the present state of the discussion. I have introduced a resolution (H. Res. 108) asking the Committee on Rules to investigate the subject in general and report to the next session a plan of organization which will restore to the House a real deliberative character and guarantee each Member his prerogative, an opportunity to participate in the formulation of its bills and resolutions. Its report should give us the desired information on a subject as to which our notions and practices appear to be provincial and at odds with the prevailing examples of the world. The growth and adaptation of the deliberative divisions in so many countries show the need to be universal and the institution the natural means of securing representative numbers and deliberative character, the fundamental essentials of parliamentary government.

CONCLUSIONS.

Deliberation must be restored to the membership. The House of Representatives must become what it was designed to be. It can not longer remain an agency unable to deliberate even when it wants to, under the control of obsolete and misused committees, where standpatism can pigeonhole and strangle, in suffocation rooms, legislation necessary to place the people's Government in effective relation with new and abnormal social conditions.

I know there are those who do not trust the people, do not trust even their Representatives here. Indeed, they do not want legislation at all, and think the Government should have but two functions—police to quell the violence and firemen to extinguish the flames that may imperil their property—and since both of these most useful agencies are already provided, they secretly wish that legislatures and Congress should only meet to appropriate their salaries and then adjourn. There is another class entirely honest, often mere doctrinaires, which gives itself the highly complimentary name of conservative—a conservatism, as has been said, "that is afraid to brush down the cobwebs lest the ceiling may fall."

I know the potency of inertia in public bodies and habit in individuals. I do not denounce either, but I refuse to sacrifice all progress and the future on their altars. They have surely had their day since the war, and now the cords that have bound us to their inertia are breaking from the sheer force of our growing organism. This Government, after all, is not a mere eighteenth century script, incapable of adjusting itself to modern conditions. A great transition has been achieved and will have its own. In the words of one justly celebrated:

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM.

We have come upon a new constructive age, an age of reconstruction [which] calls for high gifts and men of indomitable purpose.

We have begun to get a complete vision of our problems and of the policies that must solve them.

Many of the old formulas of our business and of our politics have been outgrown.

Responsible business and genuine representation of the people in government is our program.

We are cutting away anomalies, not institutions.

We are no longer in the temper of attack. We are ready for remedy and adjustment.

We have ceased to be divided into alarmists and defenders of society and begun to redivide ourselves into workable groups.

There are tories in both parties, but there are also liberals in still greater numbers, and the two kinds are now rapidly shifting themselves about and drawing together.

Parties are re-forming while labels remain unaltered.

Whichever party proves most fit to conceive and put through a wise, progressive program will become the liberal party of the Nation.

The real powers of the Chamber have been taken from its Members, because of the impracticability of their exerting them, acting as an entirety, and have been swallowed up by the committees; the Member as such has been extinguished, and hence the haste and struggle for positions on the committees which have controlled all the potencies of the House.

What do the people think of this, Mr. Chairman? Well, sir, they believe that the old organization and procedure of the House has been subversive of their rights and such as to prevent consideration of popular measures. I do not invent the term "morgue" as applied to the committees. The rule giving exclusive cognizance to the committees over the initiatory and formative stages of legislation has vested them with complete control of the "passes" over the whole territory of public legislation, and it commonly requires something akin to a revolution to lead a popular measure through their defenses. Hence the anomalous condition that the United States, far in advance of other nations in its private enterprises, lags far in the rear in progressive legislation. It is a generation since bills for the establishment of a parcels post have been introduced in the House. So far as I can learn this subject has never been permitted to come before the House for either decisive or deliberative consideration. In the occupation of railroading over 80,000 employees are injured and 4,000 killed each year. Compensation laws have been passed to indemnify them in the countries of Europe from Spain to the Isles of Greece. Yet here no action has been taken, because a committee refused to consider or report on the bill sent it, and a special committee appointed a year ago to investigate the subject has not so far held a meeting.

Mr. Chairman, I consider the logic of the deliberative division sound, but I should not have been bold enough to present it were it not recommended by the whole current of parliamentary procedure of the prominent nations of the world, and I feel that this is the occasion to work a reform of the methods of the House. We have a warrant—yes, even a mandate—from the people. It was their disgust with the old system, with the cliques that had absorbed in themselves the power of legislation and deprived their Representatives of their constitutional prerogatives, that largely produced the recent political revolution. Gentlemen, we are to be judged by what we fail to do as well as by the quality of what we may do. The people want tariff reform, but that is not all they want. They want this House so organized that the wisdom of measures introduced by their Representatives can be considered by this body, so organized as to promote consideration of legislation in their interests and promotive of the common welfare.

APPENDIX.

NOTES FROM "RULES AND PROCEDURE OF FOREIGN PARLIAMENTS," BY DICKINSON, 1890.

AUSTRIA.

[Page 350.]

In the Reichsrath the nine sections are chosen by lot at the beginning of each session in as nearly equal numbers as possible by the bureau of the House, and new members are added in the same way. Each section elects a chairman, vice chairman, and two secretaries.

Committees are formed for previous deliberation on the orders of the day, either by the sections of the House, the whole House, or both together. In the first case, each section elects one or more members of the Chamber at large, and is not confined in its choice to its own members.

HUNGARY.

[Page 354.]

Besides the judicial committees the House is divided by lot immediately after its constitution into nine sections (p. 355). The sections and committees elect out of their own body, by an absolute majority, a permanent president and secretary. The sections or committees can not refuse to consider any bills which have been laid before them by the Government. As soon as the sections have finished their discussion they nominate a reporter for every subject, hand over to him the minutes relating to it, and give notice thereof to the president of the House through their own president.

[Page 356.]

When this notification has been given on the part of five sections the president of the House informs the reporters to form a central committee, and also informs the remaining section. The chair of this central committee is occupied by the president of the House or one of the vice presidents appointed by him, but without the power of voting.

Having heard the opinions of the various reporters, the central committee appoints a reporter, whose duty it is to support the views of the committee in the House.

The report of the central committee, having been printed and circulated, is placed on the order of the day within at least three days. The House can refer the matter back to the central committee or to the section for a fresh discussion, and in this case the sections can nominate fresh reporters.

BELGIUM.

[Page 359.]

The Assembly is divided by lot into six sections, consisting of 22 members each, which are renewed every month in the same manner.

Each section, after having named its president, vice president, and secretary, examines the proposals and amendments which are sent to it, following the order indicated by the Chamber, and at the conclusion of its labors nominates a reporter, who is elected by an absolute majority of votes.

When two-thirds of the sections have terminated the inquiry, the reporters named by them give notice to the president, who assembles them under his own presidency in a central section, after having warned the sections which are still in arrears. The central section, by an absolute majority, appoints one of its members to make the report to the Assembly. This report contains, in addition to the analysis of the deliberation of the sections and of the central section, the resolutions which have been agreed to. It is printed and circulated at least two days before the discussion in the General Assembly, unless the Chamber decides otherwise. The Chamber chooses for the duration of each section two prominent committees, etc.

[Page 360.]

Every month each section names one of its members to form the committee of petitions.

FRANCE.

[Page 363.]

The 11 sections or bureaus into which the Chamber of Deputies is divided by lot are rechosen every month in the same manner. They regulate their business according to the orders of the day as fixed by the Chamber and choose their own presidents and secretaries by ballot. No vote, however, is valid except at least a third of their members are present.

At the time of the committal of a bill or proposal to the sections for their consideration the Chamber can, on demand of one of its members, decide that the nomination of the members of the committee shall be made by "scrutin de liste," either in the whole House or in the bureaus.

At the commencement of each session the sections nominate for the entire year a committee of 11 members to superintend the accounts of the Chamber. At each renewal of the sections four monthly committees are named, viz, one known by the title of the "commission d'initiative," and consisting of 22 members, to which every bill emanating from a deputy is referred by the Chamber, and which is charged to report as to whether it shall be taken into consideration, etc.

[Page 365.]

The Senate is divided into nine sections, which are chosen every month by lot, and their functions are the same as those of the lower Chamber. Contrary, however, to the rule in that Chamber, the sections of the Senate have no quorum, and they can vote even if a majority of their members is not present.

GERMANY.

[Page 366.]

Besides the permanent election committee, six other committees are chosen from the sections, for the consideration of the business, etc. All the sections choose equal numbers of their members for a committee by written votes, and an absolute majority is necessary. The chancellor must be informed of their meetings (p. 368) and of the questions which are under discussion. The committees and sections issue regulations about their orders of the day, and the president has the right to fix the days for the sitting of the section.

ITALY.

[Page 369.]

The Italian Chamber of Deputies is divided by lot into nine sections or bureaus, which are renewed every two months in the same way. Each section nominates its president, vice president, and secretary by an absolute majority, and to insure the validity of its proceedings at least nine deputies must always be present.

Every section examines the motions and amendments that are sent to it in the order indicated by the president. At the conclusion of the examination it nominates a reporter. When two-thirds of the sections have nominated their reporters, the latter assemble in the central section, state the opinions of each section, and discuss together the proposals to be made to the Chamber. At the termination of the discussion they nominate by an absolute majority a reporter, who makes a report to the House, which must be printed and distributed at least 24 hours before the public debate takes place, unless otherwise ordered by the Chamber, etc.

[Page 370.]

The Chamber also nominates three prominent committees, etc. The nominations of these committees are made by secret ballot, unless the Chamber decides otherwise.

[Page 371.]

After the nomination of its officers, the Senate (a very numerous body) is similarly divided by lot into five bureaus, renewed every two months. Out of these is formed a central bureau, which in its term nominates a reporter to present its reports to the House.

All bills and motions presented to the senate are referred to its sections, or to committees specially chosen for the purpose.

JAPAN.

[Page 371.]

And in order to engage in the examination of matters falling within its province, the several sections from among the members of the House respectively elect an equal number of members to the committee. The term of membership of the standing committee lasts during a single session only.

NETHERLANDS.

[Page 372.]

The upper and lower Chambers of the States-General are each divided by lot into five sections, which are renewed every one or two months in the same manner. The lots are drawn in a public sitting by the president, who, after having called out each member's name separately, draws out of a box a ticket, which indicates the number of the section to which the respective member is to belong. Each section then elects a chairman and vice chairman, and their names are communicated to the president.

The central section is composed of the president of the Chamber and the chairmen of the different sections, sittings being also attended by the reporter. One of their number is especially elected to preside, etc.

All the bills sent by the King to the Chamber, after having been printed and circulated, are forwarded to the section. Those bills the debates on which have not yet begun at the renewal of the section are referred to the new one, and bills which are closely connected with others that were formerly sent to the Chamber may be referred to the same sections which have to deal with the previous one. The central section arranges the order in which the different bills are to be deliberated upon and informs each member, as soon as possible, of its decision, but this does not prevent any member from bringing in a motion for the purpose of amending a resolution of the central body. Should the central section consider a consultation with one or more members necessary respecting the order of the work to be done in the sections, the member or members must be communicated with through the president.

[Page 374.]

Two whole days are usually allowed to elapse between the circulation of a bill and its consideration by the sections, unless the central section is of opinion that the matter is urgent. The chairmen of the sections arrange together, if necessary, the order of debate in the sections so as to give each member an opportunity of explaining his views. Each section appoints one of its own members to act as reporter on the bills, but no member is obliged to report on more than two bills unless a new bill should be in close connection with the former one. Each member is at liberty, provided he is present at the meeting of the section, to bring forward memoranda, written or signed by himself, containing his views on the bill or some amendment of it. These notes are read and then handed to the reporter, who delivers them to the committee of reporters.

As soon as the debate in all the sections is closed, the committee of reporters is assembled, the recorder also being summoned. The committee elects one of its own members or the recorder as its general reporter. The reporters communicate to each other every question which has been discussed in the different sections, and consider also how they can best explain the principle of each bill, so as to frame their report to the House in accordance with these considerations. Should it then appear that in one or several of the sections important points have been discussed, which in others have been passed over, the committee can request the president of the Chamber to assemble these sections in order to deliberate together on these particular points. In this case the deliberations and resolutions of the committee of reporters on these points are suspended until after the further deliberation of the section.

NOTE.—Committees selected by sections.

[Page 375.]

In the case of financial bills the committee of reporters frequently presents a provisional report, and is at liberty to take a similar course with other bills if it should appear necessary to do so.

[Page 376.]

The report of the committee of reporters is laid on the table at the House, and is read by the reporter whenever the Chamber requires it.

SPAIN.

[Page 378.]

Each Chamber is divided into seven sections, which discuss separately the bills or any other subjects which may be presented to them, and decide as to whether or not they shall be further proceeded with in the House. The sections of the Senate are reconstituted every two months, while those of the lower House are nominated for the whole session, but are required to select a fresh president and vice president and two fresh secretaries every month. As soon as a measure has been fully considered by each of the sections, a committee of seven members, one from each section, is chosen to lay their opinion before the Cortes.

RUSSIA.

In the Russian Duma the institution of sections for deliberative purposes obtains, but the particulars are not available.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP].

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the chairman of this committee for his very great courtesy in allowing me this time, when there are so many others who wish to be heard who champion his side of the argument.

At the outset I wish to say that I am opposed to his position and intend to vote against the bill. I wish also to commend him for his very frank statements at the beginning of his remarks, and I wish to indorse much of what he has said in that argument as it applies to the fairness with which the committee sought to frame this bill. I do not know but that the method is all right. I only object in the main to the size of the House of Representatives as it is to be made under the operations of this bill. He was very frank when he said that the chief actuating cause or motive which fixed the number of Representatives at 433 was that no State under such a division or representation should lose a single Member. This is borne out by the statement in the report, briefly contained in three or four lines, as follows:

Under this apportionment no State will lose a Member. One of the controlling reasons in fixing the membership of the House at 433 is the fact that this number is the lowest number that will prevent any State from losing a Representative.

I could add to that by quoting the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], whose position at this time is strangely mystifying to me, to say the least, because I remember in the last Congress he was one of the warmest advocates we had on this floor in favor of a bill that was identically, I believe, the same as the present one.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], in his statement, frankly confesses that according to his view there would hardly be any division of sentiment upon this floor if we were to vote according to our own honest convictions. That sentiment would be strongly against the bill. As to the size of representation in the House of Representatives, he said the controlling motive was conceded by all to be that not a single State in the Union should lose any number of its Representatives.

But another thing that rather surprised me was his desire to foist upon a succeeding Congress, 10 years in advance, the checking of any future similar legislation, and that it should be governed or controlled or guided in any way by the precedent that we here to-day are to establish. It seems to me, gentlemen of the House, that we could show our good faith no better to succeeding Congresses in having our intentions now evidenced by our actions than by refusing to pass this bill and limiting the number down to at least 400 Members. It seems to me that, in effect, we are appealing to the country and saying, "Overlook our act to-day. We know it is unwise, but we are going to fix it in such a way that in consequence of an amendment that is to be tacked onto this bill our successors can not enlarge the size of the House any more."

Now, I think that 10 years hence human nature will be very largely what it is to-day. It has been universally acknowledged that no act of Congress to-day can bind our successors 10 years hence so as to restrict their action. And although the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has ventured the statement that it is law, and will be a law until repealed, there are plenty of reasons which can be advanced for repealing such a law by a future Congress that may be guided, and will be guided, I will say, by the same selfish motive that actuates us here to-day.

Where is this going to end if the controlling motive to-day, as we all concede, is that no State shall lose its present number of Representatives? What is going to follow 10 years hence, or 20 years hence, or even 30 years hence? We all know that some of the States of the Union have a less population now than they had 10 years ago. Are the Representatives of States that are going ahead and doubling their population to be required to consent in future decades to a reapportionment which will add to the number of Representatives in this House simply to keep up without diminution the number of Representatives from those States that are falling behind in the procession after we set this precedent? It seems to me that it is an entirely wrong basis on which to act.

I differ with the gentleman who has charge of this bill in his assertion that the people of this country want this bill to be passed, and are only waiting for it to pass. I believe, gentlemen, there is an overwhelming majority of the people of the United States against further increasing the membership in the House of Representatives. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe if we should submit that question to a vote to-day there is hardly a State in the Union where there would not be a two-thirds majority registered against it, and in some cases a much larger proportion.

To my friends on the Democratic side of the House I wish to say that, starting in with the splendid record we have made for economy by lopping off many useless employees, at an annual saving of some $180,000, and making provison, as I understand, for further economies—I can only suggest that by one act of ours, if we will take that step, we can say to the country that we have saved, not for this year only but for each year of the ensuing decade, at least half a million dollars extra in the expense that will be involved by adding 41 Members to this body.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SHARP. I do.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has figured out the amount of difference for salaries that will be occasioned by this proposed increase of membership? Will it not be $350,000?

Mr. SHARP. I think so.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And I would also ask the gentleman, Will there not have to be additional office buildings, too?

Mr. SHARP. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And will it not require the expenditure of millions of dollars to erect and equip those buildings?

Mr. SHARP. I do not think it will be that much, but the amount will be large.

I went into this question somewhat at the last session of Congress, and I hope I will not be as lonesome at this session as I was then, when I happened to be one of only two Members that voted against it.

Mr. GRAHAM. How far would the gentleman follow his logic as to economy? If we are to economize by preventing an increase of the present membership, would he follow that line of argument and reduce the present membership to, say, 300 for the sake of economy?

Mr. SHARP. I do not know but I would be willing to say 300, although it seems to me——

Mr. GRAHAM. Why not 200?

Mr. SHARP. There is an arbitrary line beyond which we should not, with reason, go. We must fix it at some limit; but I will say that it is a remarkable coincidence, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] pointed out awhile ago, that the least possible number was selected that would maintain the same representation that each State now enjoys—that is, by not reducing the representation of any State. That very action shows that in considering this question the committee was largely governed by the desire to make the representation just as small as possible, consistent with keeping, at least, the present representation of every State.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is not this a case where efficiency is so much more desirable than economy that the mere question of economy ought to be subsidiary?

Mr. SHARP. I fully agree with the gentleman, and I have been wondering why so many Members defend a larger representation. It is a question of efficiency. It is a question of quality and not of quantity, and the gentleman's question answers his own argument.

It seems to me, in conclusion, for my time is brief, that the Democratic Party, carrying on its splendid work of economy so well begun, could make a most favorable impression on the country by refusing now to increase the size of this House. Let its action be a landmark in the history of this country that the Democratic Congress that came into power in 1911, the Sixty-second Congress, again turned back to a precedent established 70 years ago, by which in 1840 the number of Representatives was reduced, the work of increasing the membership halted, and that number not increased for 30 years thereafter. I appeal to you, who are familiar with the history of those times, to bear witness to the fact that in those Congresses, 1840, 1850 to 1860, we had some of the ablest men who ever sat in this Chamber. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I seldom agree with gentlemen on the other side of the House, but upon this occasion I heartily concur with the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. SHARP].

Were I to consult only selfish interests I would probably be in favor of the bill as it is reported to the House. If the House retains its present number of Representatives, California will gain 2 additional Members. If the membership is increased by 42, as provided in the pending bill, the State of California will be entitled to 3 additional Members. But I feel that this is a question broader than the selfish interest of any State or congressional district. [Applause.] In determining a question of such vital importance, touching as it does the very dignity and reputation of what we are pleased to term the "greatest legislative body in the world," we should be influenced by the highest and most patriotic motives.

I do not believe there is a Member on either side of this Chamber who would contend for one moment that the present House of Representatives should be enlarged, were it not for the fact that by retaining the membership at its present number certain States whose populations are dwindling would lose a part of their representation. I regret that the pending measure does not contain the amendment embodied in the bill reported at the last session by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. That amendment, which is again to be offered, provided in substance that as soon as the Fourteenth Decennial Census should be completed, 10 years hence, and after each subsequent census, the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor should ascertain the population of all the States and each State separately, which aggregate population should be divided by the number 430, and that the quotient of such division should be the ratio of apportionment of Representatives among the several States.

In other words, although the Census Committee at the last session reported in favor of an increase of 42 Members, by the terms of the amendment just cited an attempt was made, as far as it is possible for one Congress to bind a future Congress, to prevent increases in the future. This was a plain acknowledgment of the unwisdom of increasing the House, but, owing to the keen interest manifested by certain Members in retaining their seats, the committee voted that the reform should commence 10 years hence. The Republican caucus at that time refused to indorse the committee's report and voted to retain the House at its present membership.

For one I am in favor of beginning the reform now, and for that reason shall cast my vote in favor of retaining the present membership.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. HOUSTON] has been very frank in his statements. When he was asked by a Member as to whether he believed the same considerations would govern 10 years from now, he declared that it was his opinion that they would, and that a ratio would be established then that would not deprive any State of any of its representation. By pursuing such a policy the Capitol will eventually have to be enlarged.

I do not believe there has ever been a session of Congress—at least not during the seven years I have been a Member of this House—where there has been as much confusion as has existed during the present session. I am not partisan enough to charge that it is because the House is Democratic, but I have taken at random a number of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS of this session for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the confusion that frequently exists and has existed at the present session. I read from the RECORD of April 13, where Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, said:

> Mr. Speaker, there is nobody over here that can hear a word said by the gentlemen who have the floor.
> The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will cease conversation, so that Members can hear this discussion. The Chair would like to hear it himself.

Even the Chair was unable to hear what was transpiring on the floor.

On the same date my colleague from California [Mr. RAKER], who represents a district in which are located large lumber mills, likewise complained of the confusion. I know that he is accustomed to campaign among these mills, but even he, able to discuss campaign issues amidst the buzzing of saws, is unable to make himself heard and is forced to appeal to the Chair. Let us again read from the RECORD:

> Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether there is any possibility of gentlemen on this side having an opportunity to hear what is going on in this Hall.

He could hear in a sawmill, but he could not hear in the House of Representatives. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any information relating to oratory in a boiler factory?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have not, but I am frank to admit that there are times when it would be easier to make oneself heard in a boiler factory than in the House of Representatives.

Mr. AUSTIN. We can all hear the gentleman from California quite well.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Well, the gentleman from California has a heavy voice, which everyone has not.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. For a question.

Mr. KENDALL. Does the gentleman know how many Members of the House were present on these occasions when he has read from the RECORD?

Mr. KNOWLAND. This was at the opening of this Congress when a great many new Members were here, and the gentleman knows from past experience that for the first two or three weeks new Members are pretty apt to be present. After that they are not always as anxious.

Mr. KENDALL. I think it is the experience of everybody here that usually the number present is the smallest when the disorder is the greatest.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Why, the gentleman from Iowa himself this morning was compelled to call for order during this discussion. [Applause.]

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I did that to illustrate the fact that there were only a few people present in the House, and yet the disorder was such that it was difficult to hear. The gentleman from California can be heard, because he always has something of interest to say and the House will listen.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I now hold in my hand the RECORD of April 14. The ex-Speaker of the House [Mr. CANNON], who now sits at my left, is even moved to complain, as the following colloquy between the present Speaker and himself will show:

> Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion I am unable to hear what the Clerk is reading. It is not the fault of the Clerk. What is he reading?
> The SPEAKER. He is supposed to be reading the Journal. The point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is sustained, and the House will be in order.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to confine myself solely to this session, because I might be considered as a partisan, so I want to quote the RECORD of the last session of Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but my time is limited. At the last session of Congress this occurred:

> The SPEAKER. The Sergeant at Arms will tell gentlemen to be seated. The Sergeant at Arms will take the mace and see that gentlemen are seated. The Clerk will call the roll.

This was in the closing days of the last session of Congress. Mr. Chairman, I could quote numerous other examples from the RECORD if time would permit. It is needless to do so in order to illustrate my point, that in enlarging the House you will tend to make it less and less a deliberative body. We should hesitate before we add 42 to the present overlarge membership.

Some gentlemen have referred to other legislative bodies where there is a much larger representation. The British Parliament was cited. It is true that that body has 670 members, but the fact should be borne in mind that the British Parliament only requires 40 members to transact general business and in the transaction of private business only 20 members. There are only seats in the British Parliament for one-quarter of the membership of that body. The members serve without pay, which is another consideration. While the question of expense is an important consideration, it is not by any means the most material.

In that connection I have had occasion to go into this somewhat in detail. As has already been stated, the additional amount for salaries would be $315,000.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. And the amount of mileage will be $35,000, estimated. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. While the gentleman is in a streak of economy I would suggest it might be well to introduce a bill here to cut down our salaries to, say, $4,000 a year or $3,500 a year.

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; I frankly say I would not do that, and do not believe the country would desire it.

Mr. KENDALL. Oh, let the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] have the credit of introducing that, as he has suggested it first.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Well, the gentleman from California is speaking of maintaining this body and the cost of it, and one item is the cost of the salaries.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not the gentleman from Missouri introduce the bill?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Why does not the gentleman from Illinois introduce such a bill?

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman from Missouri originated the idea.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I call for order. I can not hear the gentlemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer this question of salaries to the Democratic caucus and note the riot it would create.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The gentleman has no power to refer anything to a Democratic caucus.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Clerk hire would amount to $63,000 and stationery $5,250. The franking privilege, estimated, would cost the Government an additional $250,000. Now, it would require an addition to the House Office Building, and I have asked the Superintendent of the Capitol to give me an estimate as to the cost of adding 42 or 50 rooms, and he tells me that the cost would be about $125,000, which makes a total of about $793,250.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Then there is the question of the distribution of free seeds.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Oh, there are many other things that could be added that would easily bring this up to a million dollars. I do not think, however, that this should be the main consideration. It is important, however, and particularly in these times of reform, when our colleagues on the other side of the aisle are pretending to cut down expenses.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What would they do to increase the size of the Office Building—raise the building?

Mr. KNOWLAND. In order to enlarge the House Office Building, they would erect new offices above the court, but not on the outside of the building. When the building was originally erected it was constructed so that it could be added to.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It will cost $800 for every room for furniture.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have not taken into consideration the furnishing at all. When you go into this matter you will find it has many ramifications that would tend to add materially to the cost.

I want to say in conclusion that I believe for one that the time has come when we should call a halt in increasing the membership of this House. We are all desirous of retaining the good name of this body, we are all anxious that the House of Representatives shall maintain a reputation as a deliberative assembly, but if to-day, and 10 years hence, we increase the membership, this House in time will become so large and unwieldy as to interfere with the proper exercise of its constitutional functions. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I recognize that this bill will pass and that there will be at least 433 Members in this House for the coming 10 years. I shall not discuss whether it is wise to pass the bill or not, because I want to be entirely practical for the 10 minutes that I am going to talk.

When I came into the House I helped fix the membership of the House at 293. That was fixed by an act of 1873, and I recollect the contest at that time. There was a decided sentiment in the House that the increase should not be made, but it required that number to prevent the membership of any State being decreased, and at each succeeding tenth year it has been increased by exactly the same number as would prevent a decrease in the representation from any one State. On one occasion the House refused to make the increase, but the Senate amended the bill, because a little State with two Senators and one Representative has just as much power as a great State with 30 or 37 or 38 Members, with but 2 Senators.

I am not going to discuss as to whether we can amend this bill and hold the membership at 391, the present number. We can not. Now, what can we do; what ought we to do? That leads me to say that never in the history of the country, save alone in 1840, has the membership been decreased. It was at that time decreased from 240 to 233. When 1850 came, with its census, a new piece of legislation was put upon the statute books, namely, that the membership should be in the future fixed at, say, 233, and the apportionment was fixed in 1860 by the Secretary of the Interior dividing 233 into the population; but when 1870 came the Civil War abolished the three-fifths representation as to those who were servile, and from that time to the present, each 10 years, that legislation being obsolete, we have increased, and now we will increase to 433, because it takes that number to give every State its present representation.

Now, I believe that 433 is as large as this House ought ever to be. Gentlemen say we can not bind future Congresses. That is true; but, practically, we do bind future Congresses, because when the population is determined, automatically, from a ministerial standpoint, 430, as our bill proposed, or 433—I do not care which—will be the divisor that will fix the representation from each State. It will be in the power, even after that action was taken by Congress, to increase the representation; but, in the absence of a great public sentiment that would move the Congress to increase it, the legislation would not be enacted, because it must pass the House and Senate and receive the approval of the President. Now, I ask gentlemen to recollect that our Constitution provides that a majority shall be a quorum to do business. That takes half of 433 and one more to do business. In the Committee of the Whole we have provided that 100 shall be a quorum. We could provide 50 or 25 should be a quorum by the rules of the House, but when we legislate it requires a quorum of the whole House, and the larger the number the greater the difficulty in keeping a quorum. Now, when will we stop? Never, so long as we fail to adopt an amendment—which I hope will be offered upon that side of the House—fixing the membership for the future at 430 or 433. I shall not be here 10 years from now. I have no personal interest in this matter. It is only the interest I have for 92,000,000 of people and the greatest good to the people. We have successfully so far, through peace and war, preserved a representative government of the people and by the people. It is useless to talk about what they do in Germany and what they do in France and what the mother country does with her six hundred and odd members and with her quorum of 40 to do business. Our conditions are different. Gentlemen say that we can regulate it by the size of the Hall. I do not believe that. It will not make a particle of difference in the acoustic properties of the Hall, because when the House is quiet, as it is now, the acoustic properties of this Hall are better than any legislative hall, as I am informed, on earth. And when we are not quiet we can not hear ourselves talk. Now, I would keep the body as small as we now have it, if I could, or say that it shall not be beyond 430 or 433, because as you increase the size of a legislative body you decrease the responsibility. You decrease the independence of the average Member; you increase the power of the caucus. That distributes the responsibility and avoids the responsibility. "The Speaker would not let me do so and so; the leader of the House would not let me do so and so; the great committees would not let me do so and so." Oh, I have seen men, whose names I will not mention, of more ability than I, hide time and again. I have seen men in this House who would go to the Speaker of the House and say: "For God's sake! can not you do something to save me from voting on a roll call upon that legislation? Why I will be damned if I vote for it, and I will be damned if I vote against it." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I hope, if I may be indulged for just one sentence, that this amendment may come from that side of the House. None of us know how population may increase or decrease. I do know that in the great Middle West and in the farther West and in the South settlement will increase. The Senate represents the States. Let us keep this body as forceful and strong and powerful as we can keep it, because we touch the people every two years and respond readily to an enduring public sentiment. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat reluctant to immediately follow our distinguished ex-Speaker [Mr. CANNON] and take a position opposite to the views he has so forcibly expressed. I only desire, however, to say a few words, and I would not say anything on the bill were it not for the fact that I have somewhat changed my views upon this subject since becoming a Member of this House two years ago; and I believe public sentiment has somewhat changed on the subject during the past few years.

When this bill was before the House at the last session the Republican caucus voted to permanently limit the membership of the House to the present number of 391, and most of you gentlemen on the other side are going to vote against this bill increasing the membership to 433. It was the Democratic vote that passed the bill last February, and it will be our vote that will pass it to-day. Our opposite position upon this bill is to a certain extent illustrative of the opposite principles of the two parties.

This House is, or should be, the popular branch of this Government. Our Government is, or should be, a representative form of government. Representative government has been having some severe tests in this country during the past few years, and the failure of representatives to faithfully represent the will of their constituents has made many good people doubt not the theoretical wisdom or justice, but the practicability of our form of government under modern conditions.

The opponents of this bill say that they are opposed to either increasing the membership of this House or reducing the size of the districts. One gentleman complained that in small districts the Representative would become merely an echo of the sentiment of the people. Well, I would like to know what we are here for, if it is not to echo the sentiment of the people who sent us here? I have always felt and acted upon the assumption that a Representative should represent. In view of the enormous growth of this country in population and development, in wealth and every other way, during the past 10 years, I believe it would be conducive to good government and the enactment of better laws, and that the Members of this House will more accurately reflect the will and welfare of their constituents by increasing the number of Representatives during the next 10 years over the membership of the House during the past 10 years somewhat in proportion to the increase in population. Under the last census the apportionment of population to each Representative was 194,182, while under the proposed membership the ratio for the next 10 years will be 211,877 to each Representative. This will be an increase in population for each Congressman of 17,695 more than he has heretofore represented; that is, the increase of 42 in the membership of the House by this bill is not as much proportionately as the increase in population of this country.

With the vastly increased duties that are imposed upon Members of this House nowadays, and under the existing political and economic conditions in this country at this time, I do not believe the ordinary Representative can properly represent his constituency or suitably look after the interests and personally attend to the requirements of over a quarter of a million people. I am looked upon as a pretty industrious worker, and I know from my own experience that it is utterly impossible to do full justice to the 800,000 people of Colorado whom I have the honor, in part, to represent upon the floor of this House. I believe the people of our State would be much better served by four Congressmen than by three, and that each should have his own district, and that there should not be a Congressman at Large. I confess that my judgment in this matter is probably influenced by local conditions. In fact, I will say that my judgment is always affected by what I think is for the welfare of my constituents. If the number of Representatives in this House is not increased, Colorado will not get another Representative. But it would not be necessary to increase the number of the membership by 42 Members or one-half that number to give Colorado another Congressman. Our State has gained 48 per cent in population during the past 10 years. But I believe the increased membership of the House will be beneficial to the entire country. It will bring the Members in closer contact with their constituents. The safety of the Republic lies in the responsiveness of the Representatives to the will of the people who elect them. And a man will be closer in touch and more responsive and will nearer reflect the sentiment of the present than he would a very much larger constituency. We do not represent the States like the Senators do; we are the immediate representatives of the people themselves. And I have noticed that the people and the press who represent corporate interests—the trusts and big business of this country—both in the Nation and throughout the States, are always opposed to increasing the membership, both in Congress and in the legislatures. They do not want the Representatives nearer to their constituents. The smaller the legislative body they have to deal with the better it suits them. I think that history will bear out the statement that 75 per cent of the extravagant appropriations, nefarious legislation, and obstruction to good legislation is brought about through the smaller branch of the National and State Legislatures. I am in favor of the democratic idea of the rule of the people, and that when a Representative can not represent the will of his constituents he should retire.

Some one has said that in a smaller district a Member can perpetuate himself in office more easily. The only way that can be true would be by faithful service to his constituents. If he betrays them in a small district, they will know it quicker and will turn him out much sooner, while in a larger district he may, through party manipulations, be able to misrepresent the people's best interests for many years.

I believe this bill is in line with the spirit of the times, that Representatives should be brought nearer and more directly accountable to the people and be more readily reached when they cease to reflect the will of those who elect them. It is the failure of Representatives to represent and their brazen defiance of the public welfare that is bringing about the enactment of the initiative and referendum and recall amendments to the State constitutions throughout this country, and I hail the day when every State will enact such constitutional amendments. It seems to me that no one who desires to honestly reflect the consensus of opinion of his constituents should oppose those amendments or be afraid of their operation. When our fathers founded this Government 30,000 constituents were entitled to one Member in this House; while now, with twenty times the amount of work that the Representatives in those days had, even under this enlarged membership, Congressmen will hereafter be required to represent more than seven times as many people and probably a hundred times as much property interests as did the Members of this House in early days.

I realize that there is very great complaint against this House being and becoming more unwieldy. Usually during general debate it is impossible for anyone except those very near the speaker to hear the discussion. But the architects say the change in this room will help some, and I hope and believe the rules and procedure of this body will sometime be so modified that the proceedings may be conducted in a more orderly and deliberate manner. I do not think the confusion is caused so much by the numbers as by the customary methods and practice of the House. I make no pretension of knowing how to do it, but I hope the reform in the rules and customs of the House will preserve the independence of the Members and as far as possible give everyone a reasonable opportunity to be heard and contribute his ideas. Of course most of the work will always have to be performed by committees anyway, but the committees of this House are not and never will be as powerful or dangerous as they are in a smaller body.

I feel that we ought not to unduly increase the membership, and I am in favor of the Crumpacker amendment, which was a part of the bill as this House passed it before and which, I believe, would have a very strong tendency to prevent an undue increase 10 years hence.

While it is not conclusive at all, yet the fact is worthy of consideration, that no civilized nation in the world has as large a constituency for each representative as has this country. In the 15 principal other nations of the earth to-day the representatives in their highest legislative bodies represent an average of from 20,000 to 60,000 people.

Under this apportionment no State will lose a Member. Twenty-one States will retain their present number of Representatives, and the increase of 42 Members will be divided among the remaining 25 States.

A very vigorous objection is made to this increase in membership on account of the increase in the cost to the Government of the additional Members and their clerks and other expenses, and we are taunted with being inconsistent in our efforts to reduce the expenditures of the Government.

I fully appreciate the fact that the increased expense is a very important matter to be considered. But I have thought over that feature a good deal and have come to the conclusion that the people are perfectly willing to pay a fair salary and the necessary official expenses of Representatives, if they honestly represent; but that they are not willing to pay anything for misrepresentation or for a lot of useless jobs and ornamental officials who perform no needed service.

I believe if the increased membership will bring about more direct representation, better-considered legislation, and conduce to better government that the people will not object to the small increase in the cost to the country. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised at some of the arguments put forth here in opposition to this bill. I would rather vote to increase the membership of this House to 500 than to reduce it to 300. There has been but one bill that I know of where the ratio of population to the Member was not increased.

Here is a bill now that not only increases the membership of the House to 433, but also increases the population to the Member, or it will result in having a population in each district so represented about 30,000 larger than it was by the last apportionment. Shall the people not be considered with reference to numbers? Why have we got a representative body here at all unless it is to represent the people according to population? The Senate represents the States, but the representation in this House is based on population. Why should not numbers count, especially considering the fact that the men who framed the Constitution provided a ratio of not exceeding, perhaps, 35,000 or 40,000 population to the Member? Suppose it had been laid down that no increase of population should ever take place per Member. How many Members would we have now?

I call upon Members of this House not to undertake now by any such measure as the Crumpacker amendment to manacle the future. I would much rather vote for an amendment which should provide that no future apportionment should ever increase the number of people represented by a Member. This is not an executive body. In an executive body you need an executive head, a one-man power. This is a council. Wisdom is found in multitudes of counselors.

Now, I am somewhat like the Speaker—I mean the ex-Speaker; I am so used to calling him the Speaker that I have not got out of the habit yet. I am somewhat like him, I feel that I have not long to stay here, in the very nature of things, because I am now serving my eighth consecutive term; but I never want to see the day come when the apportionment of Representatives in this body does not take into consideration the people by numbers. The idea of saying that this great, virile, brainy American people can not devise ways and means by which all the bills that ought to be passed by the body will be passed! Do the Members of this House know that the House of Representatives passed more bills in the last Congress than used to be introduced in a Congress in former years?

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] talks about "efficiency." I do not know what he means by "efficiency." Have we not got time in which to consider legislation? Of the 24 months that constitute each term, we serve only about 10 months in this House. Usually we serve 7 months in the long session and 3 in the short session, and adjourn for the balance of the time and go home to look after our fences or to the mountains to cool off or to the seashore to bathe or, perhaps, to Europe. We can have a recess during July and August, when gentlemen can go to the seashore and cool off. We do not use profitably half the time that we have in this House. We can use more time and pass more bills if it is deemed wise to do so. We have the habit of so-called machine-like action. We have the idea that we have got to adjourn before hot weather and before the business that has been intrusted to us has been attended to. I am surprised to hear gentlemen complaining here about the inefficiency of this House. If you want to increase the efficiency of the House, increase its numbers so that more efficient minds can come here to help do the business of the House.

Kentucky has been referred to a time or two. Does not the representation of Kentucky warrant us in the belief that an increase of its members would be both a State and national benefit?

Now, my friends, the population of the great cities is increasing out of all proportion to the increase of population in the country districts; and if you are going to limit the number of Representatives, the day will come when the great cities will have the balance of power in this body, as they have in other countries. Small legislative bodies are more easily controlled wrongfully, either by passion or pelf. It is easier to corruptly control a small body than a larger one.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SIMS. Show me the city to-day that would not increase its representation——

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee undertake to say that the representation from the great cities in this House is not as able and honest as the representation of the country districts?

Mr. SIMS. I did not mean any reflection and would not make any reflection upon the Representatives who come from our great cities. But the gentleman knows, and we all know, that we are constrained by the wishes and desires of those who elect us—who send us here. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. I think the city of Chicago has as able and honest Representatives in this House as have ever been sent here from any country districts.

But you know and I know, my friends, that the foreign element of our population is increasing in greater ratio in the cities than in the country and that the negroes are flocking to the cities. If I had the power to redistrict the States, I would put all the big districts in the cities and the little ones in the country among the agricultural classes, the landowning classes, the classes that have made our institutions what they are and that will have to maintain them if they are to be maintained. Where do revolutions arise? My friends, where does the only Socialist in this House hail from? Does he come from a country district? I mean no reflection on him. He is a man of brains, ability, and patriotism. I know of some people who tremble at the increase of socialism, which is confined largely to the cities.

Let us not reduce the representation of the agricultural sections of this country. If we fix the number in the next House at 391, it will mean to take representation from those States that I think, judged by everything that goes to make good legislators, will average higher than those of the great cities. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be voted down. I am surprised that any Democrat should want to vote for such an amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, it is proposed to increase the membership of the House from 391 to 433, and the sole question to be determined is the advisability of such action. I recognize that there are no partisan considerations to govern the membership of the House on this proposition, and I am very glad that that fact is so evident here, because to my mind the question is one of supreme importance and should be considered strictly on its merits and with a full realization of its ultimate effect.

I want to say now that, so far as I am concerned, I am unalterably opposed to the passage of the bill as reported by the committee. [Applause.] I am opposed to a further increase in the membership under any pretext whatsoever. I say that knowing at the same time that the passage of the bill would possibly be to my personal advantage, for I come from the State of Iowa, which, if the present membership were maintained, would lose one Member. In the State of Iowa we have a Republican legislature, and if the present membership should be maintained, or a lower membership established, undoubtedly a Republican legislature would redistrict the State so that I should not have the privilege of further continuing my very pleasant association with you after my present term. It may be that other gentlemen here would be affected in the same way. But I believe, gentlemen, that the question of increasing the membership of this House is so important, so vital, that you men on either side ought to consider it from a broad standpoint. I believe there is only one question that you ought to ask yourselves in deciding upon this bill, and that is, What is the proper number of men to compose this legislative body? Any other consideration must naturally fall back for its support upon the individual self-interest of the Member or party expediency. After you have determined how many men should compose this legislative body, the next question would be to apportion those members among the States according to the number of inhabitants, in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. I do not believe it is proper at this time to consider the question whether one State or two States or half a dozen States will lose Members. I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that up to 1890 there have been only two apportionment laws that did not decrease the membership from some of the States. Are we prepared to say now that the membership of this House is less patriotic or less free from bias than the membership of former Congresses? Are we going before the people to say that we are so enamored of our jobs here, so anxious to represent the dear people, and so fearful that some of us will be eliminated politically that we can not look upon this question in a broad way and decide it upon grounds of national welfare? I say this House is too big now. We can not maintain order, and when we stand up and address the Speaker, instead of being recognized and being permitted to present matters concerning our respective constituents and the country, the first question is: "For what purpose does the gentleman rise?" And if it is not in accordance with the program laid down, if it is not in accordance with the very technical rules that have been adopted and must be adopted, we can not gain recognition in this House. Why, you know, and everyone knows, that complaints have been made frequently that the great Senate of the United States has increased its power at the expense of the House of Representatives; and I want to say now that if you increase the membership of the House, you, by that very act, decrease the individual power and effectiveness of every Member of the House. [Applause.]

I have been amused rather than instructed by some of the arguments that have been presented in behalf of this bill. What is their plea? Have they suggested even one good substantial reason for the increase? The fact that the number 433 has been selected as being the least number which will prevent any State from losing a Member discloses the true purpose and object of the bill. And in an attempt to justify such action, some gentlemen have urged that we should have a smaller number of constituents, so that we may keep in closer touch with them; and yet they have increased the number of constituents per Member over 12,000. It has seemed to me that the sponsors of this bill have come on the floor of this House in the frame of mind trying to apologize for their action. Instead of presenting some logical reason, instead of having some views to present to this House why we should increase the membership to 433, they have come here and tried to explain that such action will do no harm.

Mr. Chairman, my idea is that the absence of a good reason for doing a thing is a splendid reason for not doing it. When and where are we going to stop? There always will be inequalities in population among the several States. In the course of events it must be so. I predict that 10 years from now another bill bearing the same earmarks and supported by the same fallacious arguments and providing for a similar increase will be reported to this House. And if such is the case, and if the membership at that time fails to rise above personal or party consideration, we will witness another increase similar to the one now proposed.

Mr. Chairman, this great House of Representatives is, and should be, the citadel of the people's rights. It is not enough that representatives of the people should be here; they should be able to accomplish something after they get here. And we all know that owing to the size of this House at the present time the opportunity for the individual Members to present matters of public importance is limited. Some gentlemen upon the other side have attempted to make of this bill a partisan matter. I can not hope, nor do I wish, the party to which I belong to escape its full responsibility, should this bill pass; but it is to be observed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who has charge of the time on the Republican side, is in favor of the bill, and we know that the House during the last session passed a similar bill. It is not a partisan question, but, upon the other hand, it is a high constitutional question; a question that concerns the powers and capabilities of this great legislative body. To my mind the time has come to pause and consider well a step which may result in rendering less efficient, less democratic, less responsive, this great body of the people's representatives. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, there are two propositions on which we are all agreed. We do not favor too large a House. All agree to that. We do not favor too large constituencies. On that too, we are agreed.

There is a golden mean. What must fix that mean? Why the common sense of the men who deal with the problem, which I may say, is incapable of anything like a mathematical fixation. Gentlemen on one side ask with an air of finality: How large a House do you favor? In reply, we may ask: How small a House would you have? It is impossible for these questions to be answered with anything like precision. Neither the absolute maximum, nor minimum, can be prescribed with any sense of satisfaction. The only answer that can be given is that the bodies which are charged with the solution of this problem must work out that solution in the exercise of that common sense which is such a prime attribute of the American character.

Some gentlemen who have argued the pending proposition seem to think that other gentlemen who favor an increase in the membership of the House can not take a large view of the situation. I have sought to take the large view, and such consideration as I have been able to give to the question suggests an increase in our membership, as a necessary and inevitable incident of our growth.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] says that no argument has been advanced in favor of a larger House. May I ask him what argument has been advanced in favor of a smaller House of so sound and logical a character as to drive us to the conclusion that a smaller House is a thing to be desired in the interests of good government? I might ask my friend who advocates the retention of the membership of the House at 433, what magic is there in that particular number, and how it is, and by what process have the gentlemen who hold that view arrived at the conclusion that for all time to come, without reference to the development of our country, and the increase of its population, the number of the popular branch should be irrevocably fixed at 433?

Mr. Chairman, if there was any force in the argument for a small membership, then in the past, the gentlemen who insisted that our membership should be 233, were manifestly right. All the weight of the argument was with them, and to-day the limit of membership for this body should be 233, that being the number fixed upon by our predecessors upon the theory that the cause of good legislation would be promoted by a legislative body of that particular size.

I wish to say that in my own experience, and I think I may add, in the experience of other Members of this body, it has not been observed that the smaller body is to be relied upon for economy, good legislation, and superiority of legislative wisdom. I was a member for a long time of the lower branch of the general assembly of my State, and in a position to compare its work with that of the senate which was a much smaller body. The work of the house of delegates did not suffer in the comparison.

On the contrary, we all know that in the several States the particular branch which has at all times stood in the way of progress, reform, and a really popular government, has been the senate. Some gentlemen have asserted that there is a sentiment to-day in the country that we should not increase our membership. I agree that such a sentiment measurably exists.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Has it not been true always that the small body in all legislative bodies has been the body that stood in the way of progress and reform?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, that was the precise statement that I made. I said that in my observation, and experience, and I believe in the observation, and experience of every Member of this body, it has always been the smaller body that has blocked the way of progress and reform. Is there a Member of this House who is willing to assert that the body at the other end of the Capitol has been in the forefront of progress, of wise and wholesome legislation, of reform and economy, in comparison with the attitude of this body?

As I was in the act of saying, some Members claim that there is a sentiment in the country that we should not increase the membership of this House. I do not deny it. There has always been that reactionary sentiment on the part of a proportion of the public, who fancy that by reducing the size of your representative body, you will enlarge the aggregate of wisdom in that body.

Mr. COOPER. Does not the gentleman think that the manner of electing Senators, their tenure of office, the fact that Members of the Senate are elected for six years and by State legislatures, that only one-third of the body goes out each two years, that all of these make the Senate much more conservative and much more indifferent to public opinion than is the House of Representatives?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is more than conservative, it is often reactionary in its attitude to public progress. [Applause on Democratic side].

Mr. COOPER. But suppose Senators of the United States were elected for two years only, to go out each two years, and by a direct vote of the people, then would not the Senate be more efficient and responsive to public opinion?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, more responsive I will admit but merely by reason of its being a smaller body, it would not be more efficient than a larger one. I say that the statement that the smaller body is productive of better results, is contrary to the observation of every man who has watched the practical course of legislation.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, I have not the time. Of course I mean no discourtesy to my friend in declining to yield further, but my time is too limited to admit of interruptions. I was proceeding to say that we ought to keep prominently before us the fact, that as we enlarge our constituencies, we make it more and more impossible for the individual Representative to come into that personal relationship with his constituents, which is necessary to enable him to be a truly popular and effective Representative.

What was the size of the constituencies of our forefathers, who are so often cited as paragons of wisdom, exemplars of statesmanship, to their degenerate descendants of these latter days? Many of them represented constituencies containing not over thirty, or forty thousand people. Perchance that was the reason why those gentlemen were able to render more efficient legislative service, if such was the case, than the Representative of to-day is able to afford.

They were relieved from those demands upon their time which are imposed upon a Member who represents one of our great modern constituencies. Those gentlemen, therefore, were truly popular Representatives in the popular branch of this Government.

We acclaim ourselves as an exemplar of popular government, and denominate this the popular branch of our Government. Contrast for a moment the size of the constituencies that we represent, with that of the constituencies represented by the Members of the popular branch of the Parliaments of the great countries of Europe. In Great Britain, a Member of Parliament represents a population of something like 60,000. In the other great countries he represents a constituency of much less than that number. Yet we claim that we are the most truly representative popular government in the world, when one Member of our House, not infrequently represents five times as many people as are represented by a Member of the British Parliament. As if that disparity was not sufficient, it is now proposed to increase it, by limiting the size of this body to 433 Members, without regard to the increase of our population in the coming centuries.

It is asserted that if we increase our constituencies, and decrease our membership, the work of this House will become more efficient. I deny, Mr. Chairman, that such a result will follow that action. A word in regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. That is a futile amendment, it is an unnecessary amendment, it is an impotent amendment, it is an arrogant amendment, because we undertake to say to the future Congresses, that we have determined forever what shall be the limit of the size of this body, and that they shall not deal with their problems in their own way, as we are dealing with present problems in our way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield me one minute more.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is said that this amendment would be a check upon the future Congress in that it would be necessary for that Congress to repeal the present act, before it enlarged the membership of the House. It would not be necessary, Mr. Chairman, for that body to formally repeal the act.

The mere enactment of an apportionment bill giving a larger apportionment would itself, by implication be a sufficient and efficient repeal of the limiting act. So that as a restriction upon a future Congress the proposed amendment is as futile as it is unnecessary. Such an attempt to control the future body is an assumption on our part of superior wisdom. The intimation of superiority of capacity conveyed in this effort to forestall and limit, the action of a future Congress would be resented by that body, just as we would resent to-day, the effort of some Congress prior to the Civil War to say to us that we should not increase the membership of this body beyond 233, or 333, or any other limit, that in their wisdom they wrought out as the appropriate one for all time to come.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill without amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how much time remains to this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. HOUSTON. And how much has the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. The other side has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the Chair when this debate began?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that debate began at a quarter past 12.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then the four hours will be up at a quarter past 4.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair will state to the gentleman that a little time is lost as we go along in debate in yielding. We have just lost a minute. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this point to ask leave that all Members who have spoken on this matter be allowed to extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that can not be done in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to see this bill pass in a shape which would guarantee to us a smaller House of Representatives. I would be satisfied with the number we now have in order to insure more effective business here. I may add that surely this is an unselfish proposition on my part, for the reason that my own State would be hit harder than any other State in the Union. The States which would lose membership at all would lose but 1 Member if we had 391, while Missouri would lose 2, but I would still favor the proposition in question in order to be sure of a change in the apportionment in my State, which we are not quite certain of, if the number of 16 Representatives from Missouri remains the same. I have the honor of representing a district with a population of 467,000 people; in other words, more than two—in fact, two and a half—congressional districts. That is the result of the action of the legislature controlled by the party which is now in power in this House. They crowded all the Republicans whom they could find in and about St. Louis into one congressional district, so that at the last election my majority reached the enormous total of over 25,000. Now, I am willing to give up about 20,000 of that for the purpose of insuring the election of more Representatives from that State [applause on the Republican side], and also for the purpose of preventing in the future the disfranchisement to which the people of my State are now subjected under Democratic rule in that State. Over 200,000 of the people, Mr. Chairman, are practically disfranchised in my district.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. What does the gentleman mean by their being disfranchised?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Because it takes more than twice the number of people to elect a Representative in my district than it does in the district represented by the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Does not the gentleman represent them? Are you not representing them pretty well?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am not so immodest as to admit that proposition. I would like to have a colleague here to help me represent them.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion? The suggestion the gentleman from Missouri just made to his colleague answers the argument in favor of this bill. He said:

Does not the gentleman represent just as many as two representing the same district?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I did not say that. The gentleman is putting that in my mouth.

Mr. JAMES. He denies it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the words "by the legislature thereof," in line 17, on page 4, of this bill, may be stricken out.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not yield.

Mr. RAKER. Just one question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not yield.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is proper——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is out order, as the gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAKER. Then I will sit down if he declines to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will be seated, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] will proceed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, when the last apportionment bill was passed, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Indiana, there was no such thing in the United States as an initiative or a referendum. But since that time a large number of States have adopted that method of legislating.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Would not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] yield me a minute, so that I may ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not for that purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] yield for a minute?

Mr. HOUSTON. I can not do so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 11 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to one point which it seems to me has not been very much emphasized in this debate, and that is the concurrent action of the Census Committee of the last and the present Congress on this question. The committee in the last House had exhaustive hearings and thoroughly considered this question, and reported unanimously in favor of increasing the membership to 433. At that time the Republicans controlled the House. Now the Democrats control it, and a new committee has given thorough consideration to the question; and remember that this committee is composed almost entirely of new Members. I believe there are only three or four Members of the present Committee on the Census who were members of it at the last session.

And yet this comparatively new committee, and many of them new Members of Congress, has again brought in a bill with a unanimous report recommending that the membership of the House be increased to 433. In my judgment that is a very material question to be considered in passing upon this bill, and so strongly persuasive that only the very strongest reasons should be permitted to set it aside—certainly stronger reasons than have been offered thus far in this debate. In my experience as a Member of this House, and particularly in the early days of my service here, when I was in some doubt, as I occasionally was, as to whether I should support a bill reported favorably by the committee, I frequently received the fatherly admonition of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the ex-Speaker, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and other leaders on this side of the House that I ought to stand by the committee, and that it was the safest course to follow. And I became so accustomed to receiving and taking that sort of advice that I formed the habit of doing so, and it has become so firmly fixed as a rule of conduct with me that I am loath to depart from it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Why does not the gentleman stand by the caucus?

Mr. LANGLEY. Why did you not have a caucus this time as you had before? You forced a caucus then; why did you not try it again?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Because you would not stand for it. There was no use in calling a caucus.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL]?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not mind yielding if the gentleman will make his question intelligible and material to the issue and loud enough so that I can hear it above the confusion in the vicinity of the gentleman's desk.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I ask you why you did not stand by the caucus? Do you not understand that?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to the gentleman, as I have said before in this House in answer to the same question, that I did not think you gentlemen should have called a caucus upon such a question as that, thus seeking to bind some of us to vote against our views and our pledges. And when you proceeded to consider that question I saw the Republican caucus was seeking to bind me upon a proposition that I fully understood and proposed to exercise my own judgment upon, and with regard to which I was already committed, and so I withdrew from the caucus.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman is bragging about his regularity in standing by the committee, and it seems to me he should stand by the caucus.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman should not take my time on an incidental matter like that. But I will say to the gentleman that our committee had already agreed upon a unanimous report before the caucus was called. You permitted us to have extensive hearings and to present a unanimous report to this House recommending an increase to 433, and then you sought to reverse our action and to make us stultify ourselves, and I for one did not propose to be put in such an attitude, by a party caucus, and I would do the same thing again under the same circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that the caucus bolted the action of the Committee on the Census, which brought in a unanimous report? [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. That is unquestionably true, as my friend from Tennessee says. They were the bolters, and I refused to follow their example.

Now, reference has been made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and by others in this debate to the fact that Congress in adopting preceding apportionment laws has increased every time, except one, the membership of the House so as to prevent any State from losing, and the statement has usually been made in criticism of the proposition to again increase the number. It is true that the membership of the House has been increased almost every time, and with the result stated, but I call attention to the fact that in each instance it was merely keeping step with the increase of population in the United States and with the growth of the country generally. As a matter of fact, this bill, although it increases the membership of the House by 42, leaves it so that each Member will represent about 18,000 or 20,000 more people than they now represent.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that the argument as to the larger number of Representatives in propertion to the population that they have in the most popular branch of the legislature of other countries is not pertinent to the issue, because conditions are entirely different in this country and we can not follow their plan of representation. No one has contended that we ought to do so literally, but while I dislike to take issue with the gentleman, whose age, experience, and ability so greatly overshadow mine, I insist that it is legitimate argument to call attention to the systems in other countries in discussing this bill and that the experience of these countries is worthy of our consideration. The unit of representation in this House is greater than it is in any other country in the world. The German Reichstag comes nearer to our ratio than does any other country, and yet each of us represents now about 38,000 more than does a member of the German body; and in Great Britain the representation in Parliament is very nearly twice the membership of this House, and yet the population represented is less than half of ours. I could give other instances where the difference is equally as pronounced. Conditions in many respects are different, it is true, but it is certainly material to this discussion to show that a much smaller unit of representation has worked satisfactorily in these other countries.

The argument that has been made here, that gentlemen can not get a fair hearing upon this floor because of the size of the House, has already been sufficiently answered. It is not due so much to the size of the House, as has been exhibited here to-day, as it is to the noise that a few Members make, and oftentimes it is because of interruptions such as I have just had here, when gentlemen not entitled to the floor have, in attempting to make themselves heard, prevented the Speaker from being heard. [Laughter.] My observation has been during the time I have served here that there is no difficulty about a gentleman getting a hearing if he has anything worth saying that the House cares to listen to. [Laughter.] In my own experience I have never had any difficulty [laughter] when I was saying anything the House wanted to hear. I have sometimes found, however—and so have most of you—that the House did not care to hear me. For example, the other day when I was undertaking to discuss the question of protection to lumber my voice was drowned by cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" because the majority had already made up their minds to vote down my amendments to the Canadian reciprocity treaty, when I was seeking to protect lumber from Canadian competition, and therefore they did not give me a hearing, or at least only a very brief one. [Laughter.] I want to say, further, that so long as we have the impartial presiding officers that we have now and have had heretofore there is no difficulty about any Member getting a hearing in this House if he wants a hearing and undertakes in the proper way to get it.

Certain gentlemen, and especially the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], have referred to the fact that perhaps some of us who are favoring this increase in the membership of the House are doing so because of some local or personal interest. If the gentlemen mean that a Member ought not to favor something here because his State or his district wants him to do it, and further, if they mean by that that they themselves will favor what the people in the country generally favor, or what some other section of the country favors, rather than something that is of local interest to their own constituents or to the people of their own States, then they have reached a plane of perfection to which but few Members of this House have attained. [Laughter and applause.] I do not mean to say that the gentleman from California would vote for an increase in membership if it so happened that by reason of that increase his tenure of office in his present exalted position would be rendered more secure. [Laughter.] I do not mean to say that because he says that he would not. But, as a matter of curiosity, I would like to see a situation arise where his continuance as a Member of this House might be endangered by no increase just to see how he would vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] favors a deliberative body, and we hope to see him elected as United States Senator from the State of California. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, we in Kentucky are so much concerned about the senatorship from that State just now that we do not bother our minds very much about the senatorship in California. [Laughter.]

I am frank to say, gentlemen, that so far as I am personally concerned, one of the reasons why I am going to vote for the increase of membership in the House is that if the membership were left at 391, the State of Kentucky would lose one Representative in this body and one vote in the electoral college, and I do not wish to see that happen. And another reason is that the State of Virginia would lose one, and other Southern States would lose; and I am not in favor of any legislation, apportionment or otherwise, that will reduce the representation of the great South in the Congress of the United States or in the electoral college. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Just one more word, with the indulgence of the Chair. I want to say further that, barring the question of politics and the very undesirable views that they have on certain questions, I believe that no harm, and perhaps considerable good, would come to the country if we had here a few more of the broad-minded, big-hearted men like those which the South sends to the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has exhausted his time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

[Mr. MURRAY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, in coming to close the debate upon this bill I desire to say I have listened attentively to the various arguments made here to-day against the passage of this bill, and they are practically threefold. The first argument made is that the House is large enough; the second one is that it is not a deliberative body, which is practically the first. The third one is that as a matter of reform, to save the people's money, we should hold the representation at what it now is.

Our friend from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON], always lucid in discussion, urged economy as a reason why the representation should not be increased, and he pointed to our side and said, "You saved $180,000 by cutting off useless jobs." That is true. That is real Democratic reform, cutting off our servants; but we are not going to start a reform by cutting off the servants of the American people in this body. [Applause.] When it comes to useless servants to ourselves, useless employees, so far as we are concerned, we can save money to the people, but we are unwilling to depart from that Democratic teaching of a representative government lodged close to the people by pretending that we are going to reform by lessening the rights of the American people to representation upon this floor. [Applause.]

What is your argument about reform? Where does the Treasury get its most deadly blow? In the body most numerous? Oh, no. In the body fresh from the people? No; but where? In that body less numerous and farthest removed from the people. You say that we are not a deliberative body. Why, gentlemen, we passed every bill that even a Republican President wanted in the last session of Congress, and another body to which the bills went was so deliberative that it never passed the bills and forced upon the country the expense of an extra session of Congress, in which we are now assembled. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The truth of it is, the larger the body of men the harder they are to control. Not by the Speaker, no; but by the system, by the trusts, and by the monopolies of the country. [Applause.] I believe that when you have a body large enough, that body in which the people are fairly and truly represented, you have got a body where greed can not place its corroding touch and fasten its iron chains of control. [Applause.]

The idea of saying that a small body is wiser than a large body is an old doctrine upon which thrones have been built and monarchies sustained. It is the argument of the crown and the scepter. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. I always yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania with pleasure.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is not now trying pretty hard to get into a body with a much smaller representation? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JAMES. That is true; but that only shows that my advocacy of this measure is impartial and unselfish. [Applause.] It shows that I am discussing it from a patriotic and an American standpoint. Now let us see. Where in your State legislatures do the powers that thwart the will of the people take their stand? In the body that is most numerous in membership? No. Why? Because it is harder to handle. Where do they go? They go to the least numerous branch and there they take their stand. Where do men that want to get great appropriations of money go? They go to the least numerous branch of the legislature, and there they make their stand, not only to filch the Treasury but to get laws placed upon the statute book that they want and to oppose laws in favor of the people.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] suggested that if you enlarge the number of this body you decrease the independence of the Member. That may be true, and I pray to God it is, but it increases the independence of the American people to make themselves felt and to make themselves heard. [Applause.]

Now, the argument that this body is too large, upon the basis that a man can not be heard and that he can not get attention, is an assault upon your good order. How can that be remedied? How many Members of Congress have gone over the country and, if you wanted to speak and did not have a larger crowd than you have here, felt mad about it? How many of you have spoken to five and ten thousand and prided yourself upon it, and yet you come here and say you can not be heard by 391 men—men filtered from the 90,000,000 of the American people, men of intelligence, men of honor, and men of good order. Yet you indict yourselves by saying that you can not be heard here upon this floor. I will tell you a remedy for that. Let a rule be made in this House that no Member shall speak to another one upon the floor. That will stop it. Let a rule be made giving the Speaker the right when a Member is guilty of such discourtesy to his fellows to call him by name and put his name in the RECORD, and you will have good order here; but because you have lax rules, because you do not enforce the rules you have, you urge that as a reason why the American people should be denied the right to representation to which they are justly and fairly and honestly entitled. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, so far as the expenses of this Government are concerned, in my judgment, if the other end of this Capitol were represented by a body of like numbers with this one, fresh from the people, the result would be that you would save more than Aldrich said ought to be saved per year—$300,000,000 of the people's money. I tell you that when you announce the doctrine that in order to get deliberation you are going to deny the people representation, you announce a doctrine that is un-American. We have had too much deliberation in certain legislative branches of this Government. What the American people demand is proper deliberation and action upon the measures they want written into the laws. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] stated that he was in favor of an amendment limiting the number of Members of Congress, that 10 years from now the number should not be greater than 433. I think we are wise, but I do not think we are quite wise enough to legislate for a decade that has not come. You may claim that you are exceeding wise, but let those men 10 years ahead of you, with the development of our great resources, with the development of our great country, with the increase of our inhabitants, with the myriad of problems which will confront them in the decade of the future, let them go unhampered, unmanacled, unshackled, aye, even unadvised by a Congress that has been dead for 10 long years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate is exhausted. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the 3d day of March, 1913, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 433 Members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows:

Alabama, 10.	Nebraska, 6.
Arkansas, 7.	Nevada, 1.
California, 11.	New Hampshire, 2.
Colorado, 4.	New Jersey, 12.
Connecticut, 5.	New York, 43.
Delaware, 1.	North Carolina, 10.
Florida, 4.	North Dakota, 3.
Georgia, 12.	Ohio, 22.
Idaho, 2.	Oklahoma, 8.
Illinois, 27.	Oregon, 3.
Indiana, 13.	Pennsylvania, 36.
Iowa, 11.	Rhode Island, 3.
Kansas, 8.	South Carolina, 7.
Kentucky, 11.	South Dakota, 3.
Louisiana, 8.	Tennessee, 10.
Maine, 4.	Texas, 18.
Maryland, 6.	Utah, 2.
Massachusetts, 16.	Vermont, 2.
Michigan, 13.	Virginia, 10.
Minnesota, 10.	Washington, 5.
Mississippi, 8.	West Virginia, 6.
Missouri, 16.	Wisconsin, 11.
Montana, 2.	Wyoming, 1.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That after the 3d day of March, 1913, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 391 Members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows:

"Alabama, 9.	" Nebraska, 5.
"Arkansas, 7.	" Nevada, 1.
" California, 10.	" New Hampshire, 2.
" Colorado, 3.	" New Jersey, 11.
" Connecticut, 5.	" New York, 39.
" Delaware, 1.	" North Carolina, 9.
" Florida, 3.	" North Dakota, 2.
" Georgia, 11.	" Ohio, 20.
" Idaho, 1.	" Oklahoma, 7.
" Illinois, 24.	" Oregon, 3.
" Indiana, 12.	" Pennsylvania, 33.
" Iowa, 10.	" Rhode Island, 2.
" Kansas, 7.	" South Carolina, 7.
" Kentucky, 10.	" South Dakota, 2.
" Louisiana, 7.	" Tennessee, 9.
" Maine, 3.	" Texas, 17.
" Maryland, 6.	" Utah, 2.
" Massachusetts, 14.	" Vermont, 2.
" Michigan, 12.	" Virginia, 9.
" Minnesota, 9.	" Washington, 5.
" Mississippi, 8.	" West Virginia, 5.
" Missouri, 14.	" Wisconsin, 10.
" Montana, 2.	" Wyoming, 1."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, this simply provides for the retention of the present membership of the House. We have discussed that question pro and con so fully that I do not wish to consume any further time. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment brings the real issue before the House as to the apportionment of the representation for the next 10 years. I do not desire to make a lengthy argument on this question. The case has been fully presented to the House. There are two sides to it. One is the side as to whether the smaller legislative body can pass legislation better considered and act with more deliberation and wisdom than a larger number of Representatives. The other is the question of economy. Now, I say that if all other things are equal, of course the question of economy is one that the House should carefully consider, and undoubtedly decide the case on the question of economy, but I do not think that that is a material issue here. The real issue is as to whether or not as this great country of ours expands in population this House shall go on progressing along the lines of the expansion of population in the country, or whether we shall have a fixed unit, limiting the membership of this House and enlarging our constituencies. We all know that there is a very materially increasing sentiment in the United States that is moving away from the idea of a strictly representative Government toward a form of democracy in the way of an initiative and referendum in several of the States. Now, why does that sentiment grow; what is the cause of it? It has not arisen without a cause. The growth of that sentiment has arisen from the fact that the people of the United States do not believe that their present representative bodies are sufficiently responsive to the will of the people of the United States. Can there be any other reason? Now, in the face of that growing sentiment in the country, that growing demand for a more representative body, you propose to say that you will call a halt as the country grows, lessen the representation, and increase the size of the constituency that every man on this floor represents and remove the Member of Congress further and further away from the rank and file of the people whose will he is supposed to enact into law. I believe that if we intend to continue the representative form of government of this country this popular branch of the Congress of the United States must have a constituency sufficiently small to enable a Representative of the people to know the people whom he represents. [Applause.] You know as well as I that to-day, even with the present basis of representation, it is difficult for a Member of Congress to even know the men who are locally prominent in his district much less know all the people of his district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama has well said there are two sides to this question. I think, however, he does not state them correctly, and that the real question here, as far as this particular motion is concerned, is whether the House of Representatives can come nearer to performing its constitutional functions if its membership is fixed at 391 than though it were fixed at 433. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, but what we can go to an extreme in either direction. We ought to be representative of the entire people of the country, and no man will deny but what we can increase the size of this body to such an extent that we lose all deliberation and make it absolutely necessary that we should surrender our individual prerogatives and rights and the rights and prerogatives of the body and of the country to some smaller governing body. Is there a man here now who does not really feel that we are already too large to perform the duties that are given to us in the House of Representatives properly and fairly to all the people? I have heard men ever since I have been a Member of this body complain of the fact that the House of Representatives had surrendered its constitutional rights and its constitutional prerogatives. The larger you make the body when you have exceeded a certain limit—and I believe we have passed it now—the more necessary and imperative is it that some body, caucus, committee, Speaker, or some one, or some select body of men, should mark out the course that we must take. We know that right now, on account of the size of the House of Representatives, we are unable here—where individual Members should have the right to be heard and offer amendments and discuss important questions—to give sufficient attention, so that we can turn out of this body well-framed, well-considered, and well-defined legislation in which the entire country is interested. I want to say, if we could eliminate from this discussion the one fact that somebody is afraid his State will lose in representation in this body, there would be no doubt that instead of keeping the number at 391 we would cut it down to a less number. After all, that is a bogy man—this loss of representation. It will be based upon the population of the different States, and there will be in reality no loss. It is just the same in a State like mine, for instance, where if it remains at 391 we would lose one, and if we increase membership to 443 we have no change, that we should retain what we have and allow other States to be increased, as it is to allow the other States to remain as they are and decrease ours. I do not believe, if we could get every man here to vote as he really feels and not as he fears, that there would be any doubt but what the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin would prevail here by a unanimous vote. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on this amendment. I am opposed to increasing the size of this House. Every Member of the Sixty-first Congress sat day after day and night after night, and every Member who serves during the Sixty-second Congress will spend day after day and night after night in this Hall doing—what? Deliberating? No. Legislating? No. They will be waiting until the Sergeant at Arms can secure and bring in the attendance of a quorum.

It is true that the British House of Commons has 670 members. It is also true that 40 constitute a quorum to do business; but it is still further true that when the point of no quorum is made and there are less than 40 there, they simply lay aside the bill under discussion and take up another one and go right on with their business. Here we must stop all business until we can get in a majority of the entire membership, as required by the Constitution.

Now, it was a very interesting speech which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] made, in which he discussed Germany's parliamentary body. I was sorry that time cut him off. I think he was going to propose that we do here as they do there—divide the body into sections, let each section consider a bill separately, and then the delegates from the sections come in and sit together and pass or defeat a bill. Before you can divide this body into sections, or before you can legislate by delegates from sections in that way, you will have to change the Constitution of the United States, which requires the presence of a majority of all the Members elected to this body in order to do business.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will.

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman wholly misapprehended me. After the deliberative divisions have concluded considering the measures they go to the calendar for such consideration as they receive from the committees of this House.

Mr. OLMSTED. Very well; that is just the same thing. We send bills to the committees and they consider them and bring them in here, but the difference is that we have to have a quorum. We would have to have 217 Members present under this new bill. The larger the body the greater the difficulty in getting a quorum.

Now, I have heard a gentleman, a very distinguished Member, who recently sat upon that side of the House, say that he hoped the time would come when every Representative of a free people in this the greatest deliberative body on earth could rise in his place without asking permission of anybody, call up a bill in which his people are interested, and put it upon its passage for disposition by this great body. I have sat here and figured it out. There were more than 40,000 bills and resolutions introduced in the last House. If you allowed every Member a minute of free speech on every one of those bills, it would take 88 years to consider them. The more Members you have the more bills you will have, and as all have or are entitled to have an equal opportunity to speak, the more time will there be required for discussion on this floor.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will.

Mr. MURRAY. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether or not, in his opinion, the matter of the number of bills might not well be regulated by making a limit as to the introduction of bills, as in many of our State legislatures—Massachusetts, for instance?

Mr. OLMSTED. Then you have a restriction of the rights of the Representatives of the people, about which we hear so much.

Mr. MURRAY. But, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. OLMSTED. I can not yield unless I get further time.

There is a gentleman sitting at that desk now, an employee, a faithful employee, of this House, who came here when there were 233 Members and has been here ever since. Now, we are proposing to increase the membership to 433. The larger the membership the less of opportunity for discussion, the less the freedom of deliberation, the less the wisdom of the legislation which will be passed here. The larger the membership the fewer the Members that will control and direct the legislation in this body. That is the experience everywhere. It is the experience of every large legislative body anywhere on earth.

Mr. Chairman, this body has wider and freer powers of legislation than any other comparable parliamentary body on earth. In every one of the foreign Governments to which reference has been made legislation is controlled by the Crown. You could not in England introduce a public measure without the consent of the Crown. You could not in the Netherlands, for instance, do so. I was looking that up a little while ago. Your bill would be referred to the Crown before you could even introduce it in the House. You could not introduce all the private bills over there that come in here. The subjects of legislation are limited, and the powers of the members over legislation are limited. In the interest of free speech, free discussion, deliberation, and wisdom in legislation, I hope—but I know my hope will not come to fruition—that this amendment will prevail.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

This body, in its representative capacity, by a certain practice that has prevailed here for some years, has surrendered a part of its constitutional right and the constitutional rights of the people. It has been the habit and practice to hold caucuses of certain factions of this House—that is, the political parties, and by a majority of those in the dominating political machine to hold caucuses to determine the action of the House of Representatives; and you have in this session, and have had in the session before, the example of the lack of representation of very many districts throughout these United States by that very conduct.

We have now caucuses held by the majority of this House for the purpose of determining, by a majority of the Democratic Members of the House, what the legislation of this entire House of Representatives shall be; and I say that that is in violation of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] Nay, more, it is in violation of the letter of the Constitution of the United States.

I do not condemn the gentlemen on that side of the House any more than I would those on this side of the House for that same sort of practice. But I say now, while you are discussing the deliberative advantages of this body, that the larger you make it, the less it is representative. And that is shown by the very fact that you are putting through bills here now at this session, and there were bills put through in the last session, simply by a majority of a lesser body than the entire House of Representatives, and whenever you do that, you depart from the privilege of the people being represented by their respective districts.

There is only one way here by which you can determine the will of the people in general, and that is to have the membership of this House enjoy a representation upon this floor individually. I recognize that it is necessary, of course, to have political parties, and necessary to have deliberations of those parties at times by themselves in the nature of conferences. But whenever you undertake to tie down the membership by a lesser body than the entire body of this House you depart from the advantages of the people being represented in Congress. Not only that, you violate both the spirit and the letter of the Constitution.

The people are beginning to realize how the caucuses of the political factions are depriving them of their just representation in this House and in other official bodies. The caucus is simply the system of faction legislation instead of legislation by the Representatives of the people in common. Very many of the Members of this Congress, and also Members of the last Congress, have told me time and time again that they would not have voted the way they did on certain acts of Congress except for the fact that they had been bound by the act of a caucus which they had attended. By that statement they admitted that they violated their oaths of office; by that statement they admitted that they became traitors to their constituencies and to their country; by committing that act they opened the way for special interests to get a foothold in this House and to get control of it as they have on many previous occasions. This caucus domination that makes a minority of the Members of the House its master will not long last, for the people of to-day are intelligent enough to see that it is the real cause of factional legislation and the giving of special privileges. I would no more attend a private caucus—and no caucus is anything more than private, for there is no legal authority for a caucus of a faction of our membership—I repeat that I would no more attend a private or a party caucus of a faction of our membership to betray the people who sent me here to represent them on the floor of the House than I would join an enemy hostile to the country. Now, some who want to be political bosses have said that on account of the present size of the House caucus domination is necessary. If that is true, it will be still more dominated if it is still further increased, and by so doing the people will be less represented than they are now. So the larger you make this body the less representative it becomes. When I hear gentlemen speak of the fact that the increased membership will give additional representation I can not agree with that statement. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that we close debate on this section and all amendments to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this section and all amendments to it be closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn, and the vote will be taken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. NELSON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 134.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That if the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico shall become States in the Union before the apportionment of Representatives under the next decennial census they shall have one Representative each, and if one of such Territories shall so become a State, such State shall have one Representative, which Representative or Representatives shall be in addition to the number, 433, as provided in section 1 of this act, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this section are to that extent hereby repealed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 4, after line 2, by inserting as a new section, the following:

"That as soon as the Fourteenth and each subsequent decennial census of the population of the several States, as required by the Constitution, shall have been completed and returned to the Department of Commerce and Labor, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of said department to ascertain the aggregate population of all the States and of each State separately, excluding Indians not taxed; which aggregate population he shall divide by the number 430, and the product of such division, excluding any fraction of a unit that may happen to remain, shall be the ratio of apportionment of Representatives among the several States under such census; and the Secretary of said department shall then proceed to divide the total representative population of each State by the ratio as determined, and each State shall be assigned one Representative for each full ratio of population therein and an additional Representative for any fraction equal to or greater than a moiety of such ratio, but in no case shall a Representative be assigned for a fraction less than a moiety of such ratio; and each State shall have at least one Representative; and the aggregate number of Representatives so assigned to the States shall constitute the total membership of the House of Representatives under such census; and as soon as practicable after the Secretary of said department shall have ascertained the number of Representatives to which each State is entitled under any decennial census, in the manner herein provided, he shall make out and transmit to the House of Representatives a certificate of the number of Representatives so apportioned to each State, and he shall likewise make out and transmit without delay to the executive of each State a certificate of the number of Representatives apportioned to such State."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, before beginning my argument I would like to ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes. I shall probably not use that much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] asks unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered is in form the same as the law passed in 1850, and the same as the provision that was carried in the bill of last year, and the same as the amendment referred to to-day as the Crumpacker amendment. Its purpose is to provide a method, in the absence of future legislation, for determining the number of the membership of the House in each succeeding Congress.

Before I come to the amendment itself, I may be pardoned for just a word or two on the major proposition of the size of this body. In my humble judgment you do not necessarily make a body responsive to the people by increasing its size, nor do you necessarily make it responsive by decreasing its size. Only long experience and the evolution of legislative history can determine what is the proper size for the popular branch of the Government.

I am not one of those who believe that you are now going to make this body responsive to the people in any greater degree than it now is by increasing its Members. What makes Representatives responsive to their constituency is not the number of them, but their accountability to that constituency. [Applause.] The very fact that Members of this House are required every two years to give an account of their stewardship is what makes us responsive to the people of America and not the fact that we constitute 391 Members instead of ninety-odd Members. [Applause.] If the Senate of the United States be unresponsive, the thing that makes it so is not the fact that it is a small body, but the fact that it is elected for a long term by an indirect method, and is not directly answerable to the people.

Now, the practical proposition that we are confronted with here to-day is, What size will enable all views of all the people of the country to be here presented in the most orderly, efficient manner? Manifestly, if you have a very small number, you will not have all views presented. Manifestly, if you have a very great number, by virtue of that very size you will not be able to have those views presented. An experience of eight years in this House has taught me that the danger is not in not having this body properly responsive to the people, but in having it and its machinery so cumbersome that it is impossible to do the will of the people. [Applause.]

It has been said, and well said, that when you increase numbers you make it easier for a few men to control. A House of a thousand Members, with our constitutional provision in regard to a majority to constitute a quorum, would put into the hands of a limited number of men infinitely more power than is in the hands of any similar number now.

What has been the history of legislation in this country? Instead of the Committee of the Whole considering matters, instead of the House considering matters involving the details of legislation, you have seen those details more and more determined by the various committees of the House. You will hear, and you have heard, in conversation on the floor during the consideration of this bill, that we ought to follow the committee that has the matter in charge. What is the meaning of it? It means that we have a body so large that of necessity we have had to delegate to the committees the working out of the real details, and we have the power of veto or approval, but practically none of amendment.

Now, there is another fact that is apparent in this debate, and can not be ignored, and that fact is that the number arrived at and reported by the committee—the number 433—was arrived at by determining what number was necessary in order that no State might lose a Member. [Applause.] That is the fact, and no man can deny it. Other considerations may have affected individual men; but if size is what they want, but if the arguments of men who say that the only way to represent the people is to stand for a larger body are true, how do they reconcile themselves to the proposition that by this bill they have increased the number of people that each Member of the House is to represent? If we are to determine our responsibility by the fewness of the number we represent, then we ought to reduce the number of inhabitants to be represented by each Member of this House, and yet you have increased that number over what it has been heretofore, and that has happened every 10 years.

Now, all of us are human; we are no better than those who went before or those who will come after. I have offered this amendment in the hope that we can provide a method whereby the weaknesses of Members and their State pride will not be called so much into play.

Let no man misunderstand me. I listened to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] when he characterized this amendment both as arrogant, foolish, and impotent. In my judgment the characterization was not deserved. I realize, as he said, that it is not possible for this Congress to tie the hands of any other Congress. But that statement can be made as to any general law that we may pass that does not have in its terms a limitation for the life of this Congress. Of course, a subsequent Congress can repeal it. There is not a law of a general character that we pass that, so long as it remains on the statute book, is not both an advice and a limitation on a subsequent Congress. It can be repealed, and when the wisdom of a subsequent Congress determines it will be repealed. So 10 years from now, if the experience of the American people and the honest judgment of Congress determine that the body provided is too small, this amendment will be swept away, and you will have an increase in membership.

But this is what it will do. It will make the people pause; it will make it more difficult to increase the membership of this House. [Applause.] It will remove from the action of the Members the present pressure that comes by virtue of the individual cases and conditions in particular States. Less than 15 minutes ago a colleague said to me, "I would be willing to vote to reduce the representation of the House, but I am not willing to throw two of my colleagues into a fight as to who shall come here to Congress." I am not criticizing him. If I had any feeling, it was one of admiration for the man that he should have that kindly friendship for his colleagues. And yet it is that kind of feeling that necessarily controls us and has controlled this Congress in fixing this number at 433. It is to get away from that that I have offered this amendment.

Let me suggest to you another thing. The chief indictment of the American people brought against Members of Congress has not been that they represent too many people, but that they represent too few. [Applause.] What the people of America are demanding are statesmen that can rise to the magnitude of the entire country and legislate for 90,000,000 of people and not simply for one district. [Applause.] You are not going to make the people believe that you are any more their servant because you have decreased the boundary of your district or the number of your constituents. Much has been said about personal acquaintance. I represent a city of 230,000 people and a county outside with 60,000 people. The man does not live who can know all those people in a personal and individual way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. But, Mr. Chairman, it does not follow because you are unable to know the individual that therefore you are unable to represent the views of that constituency. I beg this House to stop and consider. Every man here knows that personal considerations have controlled us both in fixing the number and in our views on the subject. What now confronts us will confront a Congress 10 years from now unless we provide some other way. The gentleman from Virginia said, "Oh, you do not have to repeal this act; any act passed subsequent to it, inconsistent with it, would repeal it." That is true, but this is perhaps worthy of consideration. In the absence of a general rule for apportionment there comes an insistent and earnest demand for legislation every 10 years, and with that demand comes the exigency of particular localities and particular Members. But with a general rule that will take care of it, with people knowing in advance, they will realize that they must take their lot, whatever it may be, 10 years from now, according to this plan, and there will not be the insistent demand for legislation.

Believing this, I have offered this amendment. I have offered it because I want to see the House of Representatives a great deliberative body. I want to see it such a body that it will be able as a body to consider its business and not be relegated to the position of either approving or vetoing the work of its committees. I hope that the amendment may prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has made a statement that has been repeated several times on the floor of the House to-day to the effect, substantially, that if you increase the numbers of this body and make it larger you will make it easier to dominate and control. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to understand the reason or the philosophy of that statement. I can not see how this House, composed of 400 Members, will be more easily dominated and controlled than it would be if it were composed of 200. I do not understand that this body is more easily influenced and improperly controlled than another legislative body in this country not so large as this.

I take it that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is in favor of 433 Members, for, as I understand, he voted for that number in the last Congress, and, from what he says, he will vote for it again here. Yet he stands here and proposes to fix that number, or a less number, as the limit in the apportionment which shall be made 10 years hence. With what grace or consistency can he or any other man say that comes now advocating, as he must advocate by his vote, an increase of 42 Members, that the Congress chosen 10 years hence shall not know better how to apportion Representatives than we. Why should we arrogate to ourselves a wisdom greater than our day and generation? Can we know better what ought to be done 10 years hence than the Representatives of the people will who will be elected at that time? Can we know better what the wishes of those people will be? [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield at this time. I can not understand why it is that a larger body, one larger than this, can not transact business orderly. I have seen it demonstrated to-day, and I have seen it demonstrated time and again before, as every Member on this floor has, that the best order, the most careful deliberation, the most careful consideration, has been given to measures when every seat in this House was full, when the questions involved and interests at stake were so great that the Members felt it was their duty to come here and attend to business and look after the interests of their people. It is then that we have the most orderly proceeding; it is then that you have been able to hear what has been said by every man who spoke on the floor. Yet at other times, when there is scarcely a quorum present, in Committee of the Whole, when only 100 are required to constitute a quorum, we have had the greatest disorder, the greatest confusion, and it is most difficult to consider a measure fairly and well.

Mr. Chairman, I object as a matter of principle to this Congress attempting to do something to forestall the action of a Congress elected 10 years from now. We can not tell what the conditions will be then. We do wrong to attempt to do that. The futility of the action, the utter inability to do what we would attempt to do, proves it is unnecessary and useless. Furthermore, I believe as firmly as I believe anything that the framers of the Constitution intended when they provided that Congress should apportion the Representatives among the States after each decennial census that the Congress, the people's Representatives, should make this apportionment. They intended that those men, elected from the people, fresh from the people, fully aware of their wishes and knowing the then existing conditions, should make the apportionment of Representatives, and to attempt to delegate it to another agency or to any other power is an evasion in spirit at least of the Constitution. [Applause.]

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to a distinction to which the gentleman from Kentucky has not adverted. It is perfectly true that the ordinary legislative act of one Congress is as susceptible of repeal by a subsequent Congress, just as this particular effort to forestall the action of a subsequent Congress may be repealed. But there is this very obvious, and manifest distinction, between the ordinary legislative act, and the enactment of the amendment of our friend from Kentucky. When we legislate with reference to existing conditions, it is in discharge of a present duty. It is a mere incident of that legislation that it furnishes a rule of action until it is repealed by a subsequent legislature. It is not enacted with the main intent of binding the future body. Now it is our duty to fix the size of the House for the next 10 years to come. It is not a part of our duty under the Constitution when we pass the apportionment act for the period which it contemplates, to go further and fix the size of this body for all the coming years. When we seek to do this, we exceed our duty, and undertake the discharge of a task which is not imposed upon us. I may illustrate the proposition in this way. We establish rules for the government of this body. This is a part of our present duty. If we undertake to prescribe that the rules of this body, shall be the rules of the next House of Representatives we will undertake to do precisely what is proposed to be done by this amendment, namely to forestall another House, and impose a limit on its action. This has been attempted, and failed, just as the effort has heretofore been made to fix the limit of membership in this body.

The gentleman from Kentucky says, and justly, that what determines the size of a legislative body, is the evolution of thought, the change of conditions, and the present features of the problem when the solution of that problem is approached. That is perfectly true. In the evolution of our Government, and the inevitable change of conditions in the time to come, may we not safely leave to the men of that other day, the determination of the numerical limit of membership of this House?

With respect to the size of the body, I wish to say in response to the gentleman from Kentucky, that I yield to no one, in my desire to see that this House shall continue to be the greatest parliamentary body of the world. But I do not agree to the proposition that when we increase our membership, we will diminish our ability to deliberate. I maintain Mr. Chairman as a result of observation and experience, that from time to time we can increase the membership of this body to keep step with the expanding population of the country without reducing our effective capacity for legislative work. We are to-day a long way from the limit that this body may attain, and still be a workable, deliberate, and efficient Chamber. Look for a moment at the great deliberative bodies of other progressive nations, which enjoy popular government, England, France, Italy, Austria, and Hungary.

The membership in the popular branch of the legislative departments of these Governments, is numerically much in excess of the membership of this House, yet no one has risen to say that those bodies have failed either in representative ability, or capacity to deal in a deliberative way with the problems that confront them. Therefore, I say, we need not excite ourselves, or exert ourselves to forestall the future, and to tie the hands of future Representatives in a future House. We need concern ourselves solely with the discharge of the present duty imposed upon us by the Constitution.

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that looking to the future, the men of that day will be able to discharge their constitutional duty, as well as we are able to discharge ours in the present. Indeed with their heritage of experience, they ought to be able to discharge it, in comparison with us, with greater efficiency.

The gentleman from Kentucky suggests that the personal equation has operated in the construction and support of the present bill. Doubtless that is true, to some extent. But the personal equation in some form is always with us, and in the present instance it has not operated to the prejudice of the public interests. The present bill rests upon sound considerations of public policy apart from, and unrelated to the personal equation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All debate on this amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I beg your indulgence for a few moments. It is known to the membership of this House who have served here for a long time that I seldom trespass upon the patience of this body. I would not do so on this occasion did I not believe that we are, if we should adopt this proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, doing a thing in the nature of an attempt to surrender the rightful power that belongs to the House of Representatives, to delegate the power to apportion the representation in this House to one of the executive branches of the Government. It is true that it is futile to do this in the light of the fact that a future Congress could repeal the law if this amendment was carried in it. But, Mr. Chairman, it is as far as we can go under the Constitution in an attempt to rid this House of that responsibility and of that duty, and to confer that duty and that responsibility upon an executive branch of the Government, which means that a future House of Representatives, dealing with this great constitutional power of apportionment, is sought to be bound by this provision, suggestively, at least, and to surrender that duty and that power to an executive department to be performed by some little expert mathematician or fifteen-hundred-dollar clerk down in the Census Bureau 10 years hence. [Applause.]

The Constitution of the United States intended that the Congress should consider this matter; intended that the Congress should take the conditions that obtain in the country into consideration; that the Congress should make the figures; that the Congress should intelligently comprehend the then existing conditions and make the apportionment according to the best judgment of the Congress.

There is another reason why I am opposed to it. It is a cast-off, worn-out garment; it is a tried and condemned experiment. In 1850 such a provision was inserted in the law. The next Congress, charged with this duty of apportionment, repudiated that suggestion [applause], repudiated any binding force of that law, and increased the House of Representatives by a membership of eight.

And there is another reason why I object to it. It is not only a worn-out, cast-off Democratic garment put into a law in 1850 and afterwards rejected by Congress, but that old worn-out experiment was brought out into the sunlight in the last Congress by a distinguished Republican, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. And I think it wise enough that this thing, of no real force, of doubtful propriety, and that may subject us to the criticism of really favoring a small House of Representatives, without the manhood to stand up here now and say so, ought, for all these reasons, and for the reasons that have been better and more amply stated than I can state them, to be rejected. [Prolonged applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment is much more serious than gentlemen who are opposing it seem to realize. I think if this amendment is adopted we shall be bound absolutely hand and foot, practically, 10 years from now. It will come about in this way: As the law is now, when the census is taken we have got to legislate before Representatives can be apportioned. There is no legislative apportionment until we create it. With this amendment we are not going to repeal it before the census is taken. Nobody will ever think of that, so that there is no probability of repealing it until after the question arises as to apportionment. The census will first have been taken. Then, as soon as the census is taken, the Cabinet officer who is directed in this amendment to do so, certifies the number of Representatives for each State under the law. Then all that the Senate has got to do is not to act; all that the House has got to do is not to act; and thus by simple nonaction we have got it fastened on us for all time to come.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is an able man. He saw beyond the moment on that, I think, and——

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to say that I frankly stated to the committee the facts about that. There is no doubt or concealment about that.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman is always frank and able. His idea now is to put it into the hands of a Cabinet officer to apportion the representation and determine the number of presidential electors for each State.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I will state that the idea is to establish a rule, and the Cabinet officer will then be simply a ministerial officer to carry out the rule. He has no discretion.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; but the apportionment will take place by reason of his certificate.

Mr. SHERLEY. We every day give to executive officers infinitely more power than it is proposed to give to this Cabinet officer here. Take, for example, the railroad rate law, where——

Mr. SIMS. Under that law no authority or power comparable to what is proposed here is given to anybody.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SIMS. At the present time the rule of the Senate has been to accept what the House does in this regard. Now, the House by this amendment does something which the Senate will accept for all time, probably, and something which it will perhaps never agree to repeal; so that by passing this amendment we tie our hands fast, and what is enacted now will never be repealed, I very much fear.

Mr. MANN. I am within 20 feet of the gentleman, and yet I can not hear him. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. I can not talk louder. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I knew it. The fault is in the size of the House.

Mr. SIMS. I knew it was not the fault of the size of my mouth. [Laughter, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CULLOP. If this amendment were adopted, would it not practically turn over the apportionment of the House of Representatives to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; under the census, as he would find it.

Mr. CULLOP. Because he would have charge of the taking of the census and could make a House as he saw fit?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Mr. Chairman, I demand order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will suspend until there is order. Gentlemen, you can not force a vote, except under the rules of the committee. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to speak for five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has stated frankly his real object and purpose. Do you gentlemen indorse his purposes? If so, why not vote for the 391 amendment now? If this amendment is adopted, the apportionment will take place and the presidential electors will be apportioned by the Census Office; and without any action to the contrary, this will necessarily take effect, because otherwise the law will have to be repealed, and to that repeal the smaller body will have to consent. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I held the opinion that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] holds, and the opinion that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] holds, and the opinion that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] holds, that in numbers there is greater security, I would move to increase the 433 Members now to 500 or 600 or 700. [Applause on the Republican side.] By this bill you increase the number to 433, and each Representative will represent 211,000 people, as against less than 200,000 now.

Oh, I am sometimes amused and sometimes surprised to see how gentlemen whom I know to be able take positions that are not defensible because of a fear, perchance, that the bill may not pass at 433.

It is absolutely certain the membership will be fixed at 433. I am not surprised, however, that the gentlemen from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], as a makeweight, oppose this amendment for fear that an outrage may be committed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in executing the law if the amendment is adopted.

But when I find the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is frightened in the premises I feel like climbing a tree. [Laughter.] Now, in every session of Congress, by the enactment of laws, at least 100 times in every session we clothe one of the executive departments, or the President, with power to perform a ministerial act, as in this case. If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor should refuse to perform it, on the one hand, or should attempt to perform it without the authority of law, he would be subject to impeachment. In my judgment there is not a man within the sound of my voice who believes the country would be benefited by a further increase in the number of Representatives. "Oh," said the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], "I am afraid of the referendum that is coming, because the people have not been represented properly." Then make 25,000 the representative unit and fill up this Hall so full that Members can not get in, like the hall of the British House of Commons, in order that the people may be properly represented. [Applause.] You may say that is expensive. Ah! In a country of 92,000,000 of people the expense would be insignificant, provided it gave us better legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], which practically turns over the apportionment of the United States for representation in Congress into the hands of one man, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I am not astonished at the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] when he desires to control the apportionment of 10 years hence for legislative purposes in the national Congress. He knows full well the purport and effect of this amendment if it should pass. He knows the benefit to his party and the injury that would ensue to ours. He is fully conscious of it. Pass this amendment and the manipulation that we had in 1910 in the taking of the national census will be a mere bagatelle in comparison with what it would be if this amendment should become a part of the law. Ten years from now it will be manipulated as a machine, so that it will return the right kind of membership to suit the politics of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That would be the effect of it, and let no man deceive himself about its meaning. It will deny representation to portions of the Union which are entitled to it, it will give representation to portions of the Union that are no entiled to it. For such a purpose it had its origin, and for such a purpose it will be enforced.

What does this amendment mean? A curtailment of the representation of the people in the House of Representatives of the national Congress according to the desire of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. One gentleman has said that not enough people get the ear of their Congressman. True that is, and it is further true that sometimes too many of the wrong kind of people get his ear for the good of the whole people, and I fear the adoption of this amendment would augment that number. Increase the number of people upon whom representation is based, and a less number of people will have the ear of their Representative in Congress who ought to have it, and more will have it who ought not to have it. No doubt the special interests would rejoice at its adoption because it would give them a better chance to control legislation in this body, and multiply their opportunities to exploit the people. If this amendment is adopted it will practically turn over the apportionment for this House to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, giving him power, in a large sense, to manipulate representation and control the legislation on the floor of this House. For this reason I am opposed to the amendment, and I hope the membership of this House will vote it down. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn, and the question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 80, noes 111.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That in each State entitled under this apportionment to more than one Representative, the Representatives to the Sixty-third and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of a contiguous and compact territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants. The said districts shall be equal to the number of Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no district electing more than one Representative.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "inhabitants," in line 8, page 4, add the following: "And that there shall not be when formed a difference in population of more than 20,000 inhabitants, based on the most recent United States census, between the congressional districts in any given State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I want to charge, and charge advisedly, that no State legislature in any of the 46 States of this Union has more openly and brazenly violated the supreme law of the land or more ruthlessly trampled decency and fairness under foot than did the Democratic legislature in Kentucky in their redistricting law passed on May 26, 1900, aided by the redistricting acts of March, 1898.

Mr. Chairman, section 3 of this apportionment bill under discussion provides:

That in each State entitled under this apportionment to more than one Representative, the Representatives to the Sixty-third and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of a contiguous and compact territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants. The said districts shall be equal to the number of Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no district electing more than one Representative.

To this section I have offered the following amendment:

After the word "inhabitants," in line 8, page 4, add the following: "And that there shall not be, when formed, a difference in population of more than 20,000 inhabitants, based on the most recent United States census, between the congressional districts in any given State."

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment I have offered will pass this House. The matter of leaving to the various State legislatures the power to divide each State into congressional districts—composed of contiguous and compact territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants—is all right, provided the various State legislatures carry out faithfully and conscientiously that provision of the Federal law.

Away back yonder at the foundation of our Government there was much discussion as to what should be the proper basis of apportioning representatives in political assemblies. Should they be based on social position or wealth or profession, or should population alone be the determining element?

Our forefathers at the beginning of our Government wisely determined that our representation should not be based on wealth or social position. They said, in the Declaration of Independence, that "all men are created equal"; so it is not hard to understand that our forefathers, in determining how the first House of Representatives should be organized and what representation each State should have, set it down as the organic law of the land that it should be based on population, and that each State should have as many Members in Congress as its population entitled it to, 30,000 inhabitants being then the basis of representation. They provided also that the census be taken every 10 years that this equality of representation might be maintained.

Our population increased. It soon became evident that if the basis of population was not increased far above 30,000 the House of Representatives would become so large that it would be unwieldy. So by the act of June 25, 1842, it was provided:

That from and after the 3d day of March, 1843, the House of Representatives shall be composed of Members elected agreeably to a ratio of 1 Representative for every 70,680 persons in each State.

And a little later on it was provided that the Members of Congress from each State shall—be elected by districts composed of a contiguous and compact territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants.

Upon the shoulders of the various State legislatures falls the duty every 10 years of dividing their various States into congressional districts, "composed of contiguous and compact territory," so as to contain "as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants."

As I have said, that provision of the Federal law is all right so far as it goes, and it would be forever all right if the various State legislatures, whose duty it is to divide their State into Representative districts every 10 years, would honestly and faithfully carry out its provisions; but if the various State legislatures, as has been done in the State of Kentucky, refuse to carry out its provision, then it ought to be amended in such a way as to make it obligatory upon the various States to insure, at least, something akin to fair and decent representation, whether the districts be in Kentucky or California or whether they be safely Republican or reliably Democratic. A square deal is what we want. The people have not had that in the various States of this Union. We have not had that in the State of Kentucky.

The Federal law requiring the State Legislature of Kentucky to redistrict, in the year 1900, that State into 11 congressional districts, "composed of a contiguous and compact territory and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants," was reviolated with as much nonchalance and supreme unconcern as though the members of that legislature did not care a fiddler's damn for the law of the land and less for the oath they had taken to faithfully perform their duty.

The basis of representation in 1900 was about 194,000 inhabitants to each congressional district. The population of Kentucky in 1900 was 2,147,174 and entitled us to 11 Representatives.

It was the duty of the Kentucky Legislature to divide that State into 11 congressional districts "containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants." Instead of the Kentucky State Legislature doing that it divided the State into 11 districts with a flagrantly unequal number of inhabitants, the sole purpose apparently being to increase Democratic and decrease Republican representation.

According to the census of 1900 the third congressional district in the State of Kentucky, a Democratic district, contained a population of 179,518 inhabitants, with 10 counties. The sixth congressional district, a Democratic district, contained 179,430 inhabitants and eight counties. The seventh congressional district, a Democratic district, contained a population, according to the census of 1900, of 151,453, with eight counties.

The eighth congressional district, a Democratic district, according to the census of 1900, contained a population of only 143,089, with 10 counties. The tenth district, a Republican district, according to the census of 1900, contained a population of 189,169 inhabitants, with 16 counties. The eleventh congressional district, the one I have the honor to represent, in 1900 had a population of 258,316 inhabitants, with 19 tremendous counties, and we have been so gerrymandered that it casts a Republican majority in presidential years of over 20,000 votes.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, taking the four Democratic districts, their average population, according to the census of 1900, was 163,372 people. My district contained 95,000 more inhabitants than the average population of these four Democratic districts. And it contained 115,000 more population than the eighth congressional district of Kentucky. The census of 1910 shows that the eighth congressional district has a population of only 148,313 and the eleventh district a population of 308,348, more than twice as many inhabitants as are in the eighth district. One Democrat equals more than two Republicans. The 1910 census shows that the seventh congressional district has a population of 151,051. The eleventh congressional district, therefore, has a population of 8,984 more inhabitants than both the seventh and eighth congressional districts combined.

I want to charge, and charge advisedly, that no State legislature in any of the 46 States of this Union has more openly and brazenly violated the supreme law of the land or more ruthlessly trampled decency and fairness under foot than did the Democratic Legislature in Kentucky in their redistricting law passed on May 26, 1890, aided by the redistricting acts of March 11 and 12, 1898, and the year 1900.

The eleventh congressional district, since its creation, has been safely and reliably Republican. In fact, it was the policy of the Democratic legislature that created it to place as many Republican counties in it as possible, so as not to endanger the Democratic districts being contiguous to its territory.

Notwithstanding the fact that in March, 1898, the eleventh congressional district was composed of 17 counties, with a population of 246,289, and the third congressional district was composed of 10 counties, with a population of 167,491, yet in order to make the more or less doubtful third congressional district more safely Democratic, the overwhelmingly Republican counties of Cumberland and Monroe, with a population of 22,615, were taken from the third district and added to the eleventh, and the little Democratic county of Metcalf, with a population of 9,988, was taken from the eleventh district and added to the third.

And just the day before this happened the big Republican county of Jackson, with a population of 10,561, had been taken from the eighth congressional district and added to the eleventh, although the eighth district at that time had a population of less than 143,000 inhabitants and only 11 counties, while the eleventh district already had a population of over 225,000 people and 17 counties. The eighth had been going Republican; something had to be done. And, as I have said, the eleventh district, according to the census of 1910, has more than twice as many inhabitants as the eighth district, and 8,388 inhabitants more than the seventh and eighth congressional districts combined. No one can read this history of the action of the Kentucky State Legislature and doubt its purpose to override the law and thwart the will of the people. And the reprehensible conduct of the Democratic Legislature of Kentucky toward the congressional districts of the State is not the only particular in which it has grievously sinned

Section 33 of the present constitution of Kentucky, which was adopted in 1891, provides that—

The first general assembly after the adoption of this constitution shall divide the State into 38 senatorial districts and 100 representative districts, as nearly equal in population as may be without dividing any county—

And that—every 10 years thereafter—

It shall—redistrict the State according to this rule—

And that—

not more than two counties shall be joined together to form a representative district.

What has the Legislature of Kentucky done to carry out these provisions? What say the facts? Let them speak; for they can do it more eloquently than any poor words of mine.

Kentucky now has a population of 2,289,905 people.

If honestly divided, each one of the 38 senatorial districts in the State would have 60,260 inhabitants, while each one of our 100 representative districts would have 22,899 inhabitants.

It would take too much time to take up all the districts in the State, legislative and senatorial, and point out the glaring discrepancies in population in each, but I will call your attention to enough of them to show that the members of the Democratic Legislature of Kentucky, in forming the present senatorial and legislative districts in the State, were not concerned about the law of the land or the oaths they had taken to obey it, but had in view only the increasing of Democratic and the decreasing of Republican representation.

For instance, the twenty-third State senatorial district (Democratic), composed of the counties of Gallatin, Owen, and Boone, has a population of only 28,365, when if fairly and honestly formed, it would have a population of 60,260 inhabitants. The thirty-third State senatorial district (Republican), composed of the counties of Martin, Johnson, Clay, Floyd, Harlan, Perry, Letcher, Pike, Knott, and Leslie, has a population of 145,075, when it ought to contain but 60,260. Why has the Democratic district above mentioned a population of only 28,365 and the Republican district a population of 145,075?

Why has the twenty-sixth State senatorial district (Democratic), composed of the counties of Grant, Pendleton, and Bracken, a population of only 32,874, while the seventeenth State senatorial district (Republican), composed of the counties of Laurel, Jackson, Rockcastle, Pulaski, Bell, Knox, and Whitley, has a population of 163,610, when the law says that all State senatorial districts, whether Democratic or Republican, should contain 60,260 inhabitants. One Democrat, in this apportionment, equals six Republicans.

This Republican State senatorial district I have just called your attention to now has 14,701 inhabitants more than the eighth congressional district and 12,559 inhabitants more than the seventh congressional district, both of which are safely Democratic. How eloquently these figures speak of the wanton abuse of power of those whose duty it is to make and uphold the law and deal out justice rather than violate the law and deal out injustice. But this is not all. If the Democratic Legislature of Kentucky has thrown decency to the winds and fairness to the dogs in dealing with the congressional and senatorial districts in the State, what can be said of its action in regard to the representative districts of the State? Again I call upon the facts to speak for themselves, contenting myself with the citing of a few shining examples. The census figures of 1910 show that Hancock County has a population of only 8,512. It is a Democratic county and is given one representative, while the Republican county of Bell, with a population of 28,447, has no representative at all, but has been thrown with the Republican counties of Harlan, Leslie, and Perry into the ninety-third State representative district (Republican), with a total population of 57,244, and that, too, in open violation of another plain provision of our State constitution to the effect that there can not be more than two counties placed in any representative district.

The thirteenth State representative district (Democratic) is composed of the county of Meade, with a population of only 9,783, while the ninety-eighth representative district (Republican) composed of the counties of Boyd and Lawrence, has a population of 43,511.

The county of Warren (Democratic), with a population of 30,597, has two State representatives, while the county of Whitley (Republican), with a population of 31,982, has no representative at all, but is combined with Knox, another Republican county, with a population of 22,116, to make one representative district, the population of the two Republican counties being 54,098.

I will not continue my remarks further along this line, but will ask leave to print as part of my remarks a list of the congressional, senatorial, and legislative districts of the State of Kentucky, with the counties in each and the population in each, as shown by the census of 1910, as well as a summary prepared and sent me by a friend in Kentucky, tending to show that Kentucky is a Republican State and conclusively showing that the mountain counties of Kentucky are not guilty of padding the election returns, as has been charged by the Democratic Party in the State:

A careful comparison of a few of the Republican counties with a like number of Democratic counties of the State as to their population in the last census and the total vote cast in the last presidential election will prove to all fair-minded men that if the Republican counties will get out their vote as well as the Democratic counties do theirs, the State will go largely Republican. Take, for example, Bell County, which is Republican, with a population of 28,447, and the total vote in the presidential election in 1908 was 3,855, or less than 14 per cent of the population. Henderson County, which is Democratic, with a population of 29,352, or 905 more population than Bell County, and the vote in the presidential election in 1908 was 6,451, or 2,596 more votes than Bell County. Bell County voted less than 14 per cent of her population, while Henderson County voted about 22 per cent of her population.

SUMMARIES OF OTHER COUNTIES.

Knox County (Republican), population 22,116; vote for President in 1908, 3,779.

Franklin County (Democratic), population 21,135; vote for President, 1908, 4,908.

Knox County has 981 more population than Franklin, while Franklin votes 1,129 more votes than Knox County.

Clay County (Republican), population 17,789; votes for President, 1908, 2,717.

Clark County (Democratic), population 17,787; votes for President, 1908, 4,456.

Clay County has 2 more population than Clark, while Clark County voted in presidential election 1,739 more votes than did Clay.

Cumberland County (Republican) has a population of 9,846, and voted in the presidential election, in 1908, 1,804 votes.

Carlisle County (Democratic) with a population of 9,048 cast 2,184 votes in the presidential election in 1908; with a population of 988 less than Cumberland, still they voted 380 more votes than Cumberland did.

Leslie County (Republican) with a population of 8,976 cast 1,501 votes in the 1908 presidential election, while Carroll County with a population of 8,110 cast 2,107 votes in 1908; with a population of 866 less than Leslie, still she casts 607 more votes than Leslie.

Laurel (Republican), population 19,872; total vote 1908, 3,807. Mason (Democratic), population 18,611; total vote 1908, 4,910.

Laurel has 1,261 more population. Mason 1,103 more votes than Laurel.

Jackson (Republican), population 10,734; total vote 1908, 2,090. Grant (Democratic), population 10,581; total vote 1908, 2,790.

Jackson has 153 more population, and Grant votes 700 more votes.

Adair (Republican), population 16,503; total vote 1908, 3,365. Fleming (Democratic), population 16,066; total vote 1908, 4,096.

Adair has 447 more population, while Fleming casts 731 more votes.

Clinton County (Republican), population 8,153; total vote 1908, 1,464. Trimble County (Democratic), population 6,512; total vote 1908, 1,710.

Clinton has 1,841 more population, while Trimble casts 246 more votes.

Monroe County (Republican), population 13,663; total vote 1908, 2,652. Owen County (Democratic), population 14,248; total vote 1908, 3,481.

Monroe has 586 less population; Owen casts 829 more votes.

Letcher County (Republican), population 10,623; total vote 1908, 1,645. Livingston County (Democratic), population 10,627; total vote 1908, 2,274.

Letcher has 4 less population; Livingston casts 629 more votes.

Harlan County (Republican), population 10,566; total votes 1908, 1,662. Boone County (Democratic), population 9,420; total votes 1908, 2,709.

Harlan has 1,146 more population, while Boone casts 1,047 more votes.

Perry County (Republican), population 11,255; total votes 1908, 2,099. Pendleton County (Democratic), population 11,985; total votes 1908, 2,891.

Perry has 730 less population, while Pendleton casts 792 more votes.

Owsley County (Republican), population 7,879; total votes 1908, 1,470. Oldham County (Democratic, population 7,248; total votes 1908, 1,933.

Owsley County has 731 more population; Oldham casts 463 more votes.

Russell County (Republican), population 10,861; total votes 1908, 2,090. Nicholas County (Democratic), population 10,601; total votes 1908, 2,857.

Russell County has 260 more population; Nicholas casts 767 more votes.

Whitley County (Republican), population 31,982; total votes 1908, 5,134. Warren County (Democratic), population 30,579; total votes 1908, 6,788.

Whitley has 1,403 more population, while Warren casts 1,654 more votes.

Casey County (Republican), population 15,479; total votes 1908, 3,102. Harrison County (Democratic), population 16,873; total votes 1908, 4,439.

Casey has 1,394 less population; Harrison casts 1,337 more votes.

The eleventh congressional district is composed of 19 counties which have a population of 308,543 and cast at the presidential election in 1908, 45,490 votes, or about 17.5 per cent of the population; the seventh congressional district is composed of 8 Democratic counties with a population of 151,051, and cast at the presidential election in 1908, 36,385 votes, a little over 24.5 per cent of the population, or a little over 7 per cent more than the eleventh district, which is Republican.

Also, I desire to submit, for further information, a comparison of 16 Democratic legislative districts with 16 Republican legislative districts, and 4 Democratic senatorial districts with 4 Republican senatorial districts. Why such gross inconsistencies in the population of these districts, the people of my district are demanding of the Democratic Party of Kentucky an explanation.

Why has the Democratic legislature, in open violation of the constitution of the State, put only 132,162 inhabitants in the four following senatorial districts, which are Democratic, and 448,341 inhabitants in the four following State senatorial districts which are Republican?

The following are State senatorial districts (Democratic), with population of each taken from the 1910 census:

Tenth district (Hancock, Breckinridge, and Meade Counties)	39,328
Twenty-third district (Boone, Gallatin, and Owen Counties)	28,363
Thirtieth district (Harrison, Nicholas, and Robertson Counties)	31,595
Sixty-sixth district (Bracken, Grant, and Pendleton Counties)	32,874
Total	132,162

While the following are State senatorial districts (Republican), with population of each taken from the 1910 census:

Seventh district (Butler, Muhlenberg, and Ohio Counties)	72,045
Tenth district (Bell, Jackson, Knox, Laurel, Pulaski, Rockcastle, and Whitley Counties)	163,610
Thirty-third district (Clay, Floyd, Johnson, Knott, Leslie, Letcher, Harlan, Martin, Perry, and Pike Counties)	145,075
Thirty-fifth district (Bath, Carter, Fleming, Menifee, and Rowan Counties)	67,611
Total	448,341

The following are Democratic representative districts, with population taken from the 1910 census:

Eighth district (Trigg County)	14,539
Ninth district (Caldwell County)	14,063
Seventeenth district (McLean County)	13,241
Thirty-second district (Larue County)	10,701
Thirty-ninth district (Hancock County)	8,512
Fifty-seventh district (Anderson County)	10,146
Fifty-ninth district (Woodford County)	12,571
Sixty-third district (Jessamine County)	12,613
Sixty-fourth district (Mercer County)	14,063
Sixty-fifth district (Boyle County)	14,668
Sixty-seventh district (Garrard County)	11,894
Seventy-first district (Simpson County)	11,460
Seventy-seventh district (Grant County)	10,581
Seventy-eighth district (Boone County)	9,420
Seventy-ninth district (Pendleton County)	11,985
Eighty-fifth district (Bracken County)	10,308
Total	190,765

The following are Republican representative districts, with population taken from the 1910 census:

Tenth district (Christian County)	38,845
Seventeenth district (Laurel and Rockcastle Counties)	34,345
Eighteenth district (Muhlenberg County)	28,598
Twenty-fifth district (Butler and Edmonson Counties)	26,274
Thirty-fifth district (Monroe and Metcalfe Counties)	24,116
Thirty-sixth district (Wayne and Clinton Counties)	25,671
Thirty-seventh district (Adair and Cumberland Counties)	26,319
Forty-third district (Casey and Russell Counties)	26,340
Sixty-eighth district (Whitley and Knox Counties)	54,008
Seventy-first district (Clay, Jackson, and Owsley Counties)	36,502
Ninety-second district (Breathitt, Lee, and Magoffin Counties)	40,725
Ninety-third district (Bell, Harlan, and Leslie Counties)	59,244
Ninety-sixth district (Johnson and Martin Counties)	24,773
Ninety-seventh district (Knox, Floyd, and Letcher Counties)	40,037
Ninety-eighth district (Boyd and Lawrence Counties)	43,511
One-hundredth district (Elliott and Carter Counties	31,780
Total	561,208

Why put only 190,765 inhabitants in the 16 Democratic districts and 561,208 inhabitants in the 16 Republican districts—nearly four times as many?

Kentucky congressional districts, 1910 census.

First district (Democratic):
Ballard	12,690
Caldwell	14,063
Calloway	19,867
Carlisle	9,048
Crittenden	13,296
Fulton	14,114
Graves	33,539
Hickman	11,750
Livingston	10,627
Lyon	9,423
McCracken	35,064
Marshall	15,771
Trigg	14,539
Total	213,791
Second district (Democratic):
Christian	38,845
Daviess	41,020
Hancock	8,512
Henderson	29,352
Hopkins	34,291
McLean	13,241
Union	19,886
Webster	20,974
Total	206,121
Third district (Democratic):
Allen	14,882
Butler	15,805
Barren	25,293
Edmonson	10,469
Logan	24,977
Metcalfe	10,453
Muhlenberg	28,598
Simpson	11,460
Todd	16,488
Warren	30,579
Total	189,004
Fourth district (Democratic):
Breckinridge	21,034
Bullitt	9,487
Grayson	19,958
Green	11,871
Hardin	22,696
Hart	18,173
Larue	10,701
Marion	16,330
Meade	9,783
Nelson	16,830
Ohio	27,642
Taylor	11,961
Washington	13,940
Total	210,406
Fifth district (Democratic):
Jefferson	262,920
Sixth district (Democratic):
Boone	9,420
Campbell	59,369
Carroll	8,110
Gallatin	4,697
Grant	10,581
Kenton	70,355
Pendleton	11,985
Trimble	6,512
Total	181,029
Seventh district (Democratic):
Bourbon	17,462
Fayette	47,715
Franklin	21,135
Henry	13,716
Oldham	7,248
Owen	14,248
Scott	16,956
Woodford	12,571
Total	151,051
Eighth district (Democratic):
Anderson	10,146
Boyle	14,668
Garrard	11,894
Jessamine	12,613
Lincoln	17,897
Madison	26,951
Mercer	14,063
Rockcastle	14,473
Shelby	18,041
Spencer	7,567
Total	148,313
Ninth district (Democratic):
Nicholas	10,601
Bracken	10,308
Bath	13,988
Boyd	23,444
Carter	21,966
Fleming	16,066
Greenup	18,475
Harrison	16,873
Total	308,348

Kentucky senatorial districts, 1910 census.

First district (Democratic):
Fulton	14,114
Graves	33,539
Hickman	11,750
Total	59,403
Second district (Democratic):
Ballard	12,690
Carlisle	9,048
McCracken	35,064
Marshall	15,771
Total	72,573
Third district (Democratic):
Calloway	19,867
Livingston	10,627
Lyon	9,423
Trigg	14,539
Total	54,456
Fourth district (Democratic):
Caldwell	14,063
Crittenden	13,296
Webster	20,974
Total	48,333
Fifth district (Democratic):
Henderson	29,352
Union	19,886
Total	49,238
Sixth district (Democratic):
Christian	38,845
Hopkins	34,291
Total	73,136
Seventh district (Republican):
Butler	15,805
Muhlenberg	28,598
Ohio	27,642
Total	72,045
Ninth district (Democratic)—Continued.
Lewis	16,887
Lawrence	20,067
Mason	18,611
Robertson	4,121
Rowan	9,438
Total	200,845
Tenth district (Republican):
Breathitt	17,540
Clark	17,987
Elliott	9,814
Estill	12,273
Floyd	18,623
Johnson	17,482
Knott	10,791
Lee	9,531
Martin	7,291
Magoffin	13,654
Montgomery	12,868
Morgan	16,259
Menefee	6,153
Pike	31,679
Powell	6,268
Wolfe	9,864
Total	218,077
Eleventh district (Republican):
Adair	16,503
Bell	28,447
Casey	15,479
Clay	17,789
Clinton	8,133
Cumberland	9,846
Harlan	10,566
Jackson	10,734
Knox	22,116
Letcher	10,623
Leslie	8,976
Laurel	19,872
Monroe	13,603
Owsley	7,979
Perry	11,255
Pulaski	35,986
Russell	10,861
Wayne	17,518
Whitley	31,982
Total	308,348
Eighth district (Democratic):
Daviess	41,020
McLean	13,241
Total	54,261
Ninth district (Democratic):
Logan	24,977
Simpson	11,460
Todd	16,488
Total	52,925
Tenth district (Democratic):
Breckinridge	21,034
Hancock	8,512
Meade	9,783
Total	39,329
Eleventh district (Republican):
Allen	14,882
Edmonson	10,469
Warren	30,579
Total	55,930
Twelfth district (Democratic):
Bullitt	9,487
Grayson	19,958
Hardin	22,696
Total	52,141
Thirteenth district (Republican):
Green	11,871
Hart	18,173
Larue	10,701
Total	40,745
Fourteenth district (Democratic):
Nelson	16,830
Shelby	18,041
Spencer	7,567
Total	42,438

Fifteenth district (Democratic):
- Marion 16,330
- Taylor 11,961
- Washington 13,940
- Total 42,231

Sixteenth district (Republican):
- Adair 16,503
- Clinton 8,153
- Cumberland 9,846
- Russell 10,861
- Wayne 17,518
- Total 62,881

Seventeenth district (Republican):
- Bell 28,447
- Jackson 10,734
- Knox 22,116
- Laurel 19,872
- Pulaski 35,986
- Rockcastle 14,473
- Whitley 31,982
- Total 163,610

Eighteenth district (Democratic):
- Boyle 14,668
- Casey 15,479
- Garrard 11,894
- Lincoln 17,897
- Total 59,938

Nineteenth district (Republican):
- Barren 25,293
- Metcalfe 10,453
- Monroe 13,663
- Total 49,409

Twentieth district (Democratic):
- Anderson 10,146
- Franklin 21,135
- Mercer 14,063
- Total 45,344

Twenty-first district (Democratic):
- Carroll 8,110
- Henry 13,716
- Oldham 7,248
- Trimble 6,512
- Total 35,586

Twenty-second district (Democratic):
- Jessamine 12,613
- Scott 16,956
- Woodford 12,571
- Total 42,140

Twenty-third district (Democratic):
- Boone 9,420
- Gallatin 4,697
- Owen 14,248
- Total 28,365

Twenty-fourth district (Republican):
- Kenton 70,355

Twenty-fifth district (Democratic):
- Campbell 59,369

Twenty-sixth district (Democratic):
- Bracken 10,308
- Grant 10,581
- Pendleton 11,985
- Total 32,874

Twenty-seventh district (Democratic):
- Fayette 47,715

Twenty-eighth district (Democratic):
- Bourbon 17,462
- Clark 17,987
- Montgomery 12,868
- Total 48,317

Twenty-ninth district (Republican):
- Estill 12,273
- Lee 9,531
- Madison 26,951
- Powell 6,268
- Total 55,023

Thirtieth district (Democratic):
- Harrison 16,873
- Nicholas 10,601
- Robertson 4,121
- Total 31,595

Thirty-first district (Republican):
- Lewis 16,887
- Mason 18,611
- Total 35,498

Thirty-second district (Democratic):
- Boyd 23,444
- Elliott 9,814
- Greenup 18,475
- Lawrence 20,067
- Total 71,800

Thirty-third district (Republican):
- Clay 17,789
- Floyd 18,623
- Johnson 17,482
- Knott 10,791
- Leslie 8,976
- Letcher 10,623
- Harlan 10,566
- Martin 7,291
- Perry 11,255
- Pike 31,679
- Total 145,075

Thirty-fourth district (Democratic):
- Breathitt 17,540
- Magoffin 13,654
- Morgan 16,259
- Owsley 7,979
- Wolfe 9,864
- Total 65,296

Thirty-fifth district (Republican):
- Bath 13,988
- Carter 21,966
- Fleming 16,066
- Menefee 6,153
- Rowan 9,438
- Total 67,611

Thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, and thirty-eighth districts (Democratic):
- Jefferson 262,920

Kentucky legislative districts, 1910 census.

First district (Independent):
- Hickman 11,750
- Fulton 14,114
- Total 25,864

Second district (Democratic):
- Ballard 12,690
- Carlisle 9,048
- Total 21,738

Third district (Democratic):
- Graves 33,539

Fourth district (Democratic):
- McCracken 35,064

Fifth district (Democratic):
- Calloway 19,867

Sixth district (Democratic):
- Lyon 9,423
- Marshall 15,771
- Total 25,194

Seventh district (Democratic):
- Crittenden 13,296
- Livingston 10,627
- Total 23,923

Eighth district (Democratic):
- Trigg 14,539

Ninth district (Democratic):
- Caldwell 14,063

Tenth district (Republican):
- Christian 38,845

Eleventh district (Democratic):
- Hopkins 34,291

Twelfth district (Democratic):
- Webster 20,974

Thirteenth district (Democratic):
- Henderson 29,352

Fourteenth district (Democratic):
- Union 19,886

Fifteenth-sixteenth districts (Democratic):
- Daviess 41,020

Seventeenth district (Democratic):
- McLean 13,241

Eighteenth district (Republican):
- Muhlenberg 28,598

Nineteenth district (Democratic):
- Todd 16,488

Twentieth district (Democratic):
- Logan 24,977

Twenty-first district (Democratic):
- Simpson 11,460

Twenty-second district (Democratic):
- Allen 14,882

Twenty-third and twenty-fourth districts (Democratic):
- Warren 30,579

Twenty-fifth district (Republican):
- Butler 15,805
- Edmonson 10,469
- Total 26,274

Twenty-sixth district (Republican):
- Ohio 27,642

Twenty-seventh district (Republican):
- Grayson 19,958

Twenty-eighth district (Democratic):
- Breckinridge 21,034

Twenty-ninth district (Democratic):
- Hancock 8,512

Thirtieth district (Democratic):
- Meade 9,763

Thirty-first district (Democratic):
- Hardin 22,696

Thirty-second district (Democratic):
- Larue 10,701

Thirty-third district (Democratic):
- Hart 18,173

Thirty-fourth district (Democratic):
- Barren 25,293

Thirty-fifth district (Republican):
- Monroe 13,663
- Metcalfe 10,453
- Total 24,116

Thirty-sixth district (Republican):
- Wayne 17,518
- Clinton 8,153
- Total 25,671

Thirty-seventh district (Republican):
- Adair 16,503
- Cumberland 9,846
- Total 26,349

Thirty-eighth district (Democratic):
- Green 11,871
- Taylor 11,961
- Total 23,832

Thirty-ninth district (Democratic):
- Nelson 16,830

Fortieth district (Democratic):
- Marion 16,330

Forty-first district (Democratic):
- Bullitt 9,487
- Spencer 7,567
- Total 17,054

Forty-second district:
- Washington 13,940

Forty-third district (Republican):
- Casey 15,479
- Russell 10,861
- Total 26,340

Forty-fourth to Fifty-first district (Democratic):
- Jefferson 262,920

Fifty-second district (Democratic):
- Oldham 7,248
- Trimble 6,512
- Total 13,760

Fifty-third district (Democratic):
- Carroll 8,110
- Gallatin 4,697
- Total 12,807

Fifty-fourth district (Democratic):
- Henry 13,716

Fifty-fifth district (Democratic):
- Shelby 18,011

Fifty-sixth district (Democratic):
- Franklin 21,135

Fifty-seventh district (Democratic):
- Anderson 10,146

Fifty-eighth district (Democratic):
- Scott 16,956

Fifty-ninth district (Democratic):
- Woodford 12,571

Sixtieth district (Democratic):
- Owen 14,248

Sixty-first and sixty-second districts (Democratic):
- Fayette 47,715

Sixty-third district (Democratic):
- Jessamine 12,613

Sixty-fourth district (Democratic):
- Mercer 14,063

Sixty-fifth district (Democratic):
- Boyle 14,668

Sixty-sixth district (Democratic):
- Lincoln 17,897

Sixty-seventh district (Democratic):
- Garrard 11,894

Sixty-eighth district (Republican):
- Pulaski 35,986

Sixty-ninth district (Republican):
- Whitley 31,982
- Knox 22,116
- Total 54,098

Seventieth district (Republican):
- Laurel 19,872
- Rockcastle 14,473
- Total 34,345

Seventy-first district (Republican):
- Clay 17,789
- Jackson 10,734
- Owsley 7,979
- Total 36,502

Seventy-second district (Democratic):
- Madison 26,951

Seventy-third district (Republican):
- Estill 12,273
- Powell 6,268
- Total 18,541

Seventy-fourth district (Democratic):
Clark	17,937
Seventy-fifth district (Democratic):
Bourbon	17,462
Seventy-sixth district (Democratic):
Harrison	16,873
Seventy-seventh district (Democratic):
Grant	10,581
Seventy-eighth district (Democratic):
Boone	9,420
Seventy-ninth district (Democratic):
Pendleton	11,985
Eightieth, eighty-first, and eighty-second districts (Republican):
Kenton	70,355
Eighty-third and eighty-fourth districts (Republican):
Campbell	59,369
Eighty-fifth district (Democratic):
Bracken	10,308
Eighty-sixth district (Democratic):
Nicholas	10,601
Robertson	4,121
Total	14,722
Eighty-seventh district (Democratic):
Mason	18,611
Eighty-eighth district (Democratic):
Fleming	16,066
Eighty-ninth district (Republican):
Lewis	16,887
Ninetieth district (Democratic):
Montgomery	12,868
Menefee	6,153
Total	19,021
Ninety-first district (Democratic):
Morgan	16,259
Wolfe	9,864
Total	26,123
Ninety-second district (Republican):
Breathitt	17,540
Lee	9,531
Magoffin	13,654
Total	40,725
Ninety-third district (Republican):
Bell	28,447
Harlan	10,566
Leslie	8,976
Perry	11,255
Total	59,244
Ninety-fourth district (Democratic):
Bath	13,988
Rowan	9,438
Total	23,426
Ninety-fifth district (Republican):
Pike	31,676
Ninety-sixth district (Republican):
Johnson	17,482
Martin	7,291
Total	24,773
Ninety-seventh district (Republican):
Knott	10,791
Floyd	18,623
Letcher	10,623
Total	40,037
Ninety-eighth district (Republican):
Boyd	23,444
Lawrence	20,067
Total	43,511
Ninety-ninth district (Republican):
Greenup	18,475
One-hundredth district (Republican):
Elliott	9,814
Carter	21,966
Total	31,780

Mr. POWERS. A careful examination of the tables I have inserted herewith not only prove the truth of every statement I have made, but show also many other instances where the Legislature of Kentucky has grossly violated the State as well as the Federal statutes, which provides:

That the number of Congressmen to which each State may be entitled in Congress shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the court of appeals of Kentucky, speaking through Judge Carroll, in the case of Richardson v. McChesney (128 Ky., p. 363), adjudges, that since neither the Constitution of the United States, nor the constitution of the State of Kenucky, contain any direction to the State legislature on the matter of apportionment of the State into congressional districts, that the legislature of the State has the power, beyond the control of the courts, to divide the State into congressional districts in whatever way it chooses, and that it is not legally compelled to have any regard for the number of inhabitants in any given district, when formed, or its size in area. But the Supreme Court of the United States has never as yet said that the State legislatures were not as much bound to obey an act of Congress as they were the Constitution of the United States in matters over which the Federal Government had control, and nobody doubts that the Federal Government can exercise control over the number of its own Representatives, as well as the number of constituents each shall represent and the size of the district represented. But, if, as contended by the court of appeals of Kentucky, there is not sufficient positive direction on the part of the Federal Government to State legislatures to fairly redistrict the States into congressional districts with an equal number of inhabitants, the amendment I have proposed will cure that defect. It provides that the congressional districts, when formed, shall not contain an inequality of population of more than 20,000 inhabitants.

This amendment ought to pass this House and become a law. It is in the interest of justice and fair play. It is nonpartisan, in that it applies with equal force to every State in this Union. And the State of Kentucky is not the only State in this Union that will be benefited and blessed by its provisions. To reject this amendment on a strict party vote, as has been the case with other amendments to this bill presented from the Republican side of this House, will undoubtedly add no credit to the boasted fairness of the Democratic Party of this Nation.

I ask its adoption because it is just and right.

Pass the amendment I have offered, and the tenth congressional district (Republican) of Missouri will no longer contain (1900 census) 265,440 inhabitants, while the eighth congressional district (Democratic) has only 142,254 inhabitants.

Pass this amendment and the second congressional district in the State of Connecticut (1900 census) will no longer have 310,923 inhabitants, and the third congressional district of the same State only 129,619 inhabitants.

Pass it and you will hear nothing more about gerrymandering congressional districts in the State of Pennsylvania.

Pass it and the thirteenth congressional district of that State will no longer have 302,054 inhabitants, as shown by the census of 1900, while the twentieth district of the same State has only 150,909 inhabitants.

Pass this amendment and the various Republican State legislatures will be no longer tempted to gerrymander their States in the interest of the Republican Party.

Pass it and the Democratic legislatures of the various States will no longer let desire for power or greed for office swerve them from the paths of right.

In its political life, this Nation is getting too far from the paths of rectitude.

Old-time honesty in both business and politics is what we need. We ought not to let any political advantage control our actions here to the detriment of our common country. A square deal to every American ought to be our slogan.

Mr. Chairman, I will not detain you or this House further, but thank you both for your indulgence. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. POWERS) there were—ayes 66, noes 107.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment, and instead of providing 20,000 inhabitants I make it 50,000 inhabitants.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "inhabitants," line 8, page 4, add the following: "and that there shall not be, when formed, a difference in population of more than 50,000 inhabitants, based upon the most recent United States census, between congressional districts in any given State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. POWERS) there were—ayes 69, noes 104.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment, making the difference in population 75,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair thinks it is an honest effort to test the sense of the House. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "inhabitants," line 8, page 4, add the following: "and there shall not be, when formed, a difference in population of more than 75,000 inhabitants, based on the most recent United States census, between the congressional districts in any given State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That in case of an increase in the number of Representatives in any State under this apportionment such additional Representative or Representatives shall be selected by the State at large and the other Representatives by the districts now prescribed by law until such State shall be redistricted by the legislature thereof in the manner herein prescribed; and if there be no change in the number of Representatives from a State, the Representatives thereof shall be elected from the districts now prescribed by law until such State shall be redistricted as herein prescribed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Section 4, line 14, strike out the word "selected" and insert the word "elected."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 4, line 14, strike out the word "selected" and insert the word "elected."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 4, line 17, by striking out the words "by the legislature thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the House, but I want simply to say that the effect of this amendment, if it goes through, will leave to the several States the power of choosing the manner in which the redistricting shall be made. It will enable the States that have the institution of initiative and referendum to appeal direct to the people upon this question of paramount importance. If the amendment is not adopted, the redistricting must be made by the legislature without the privilege of the referendum. I believe the States ought to settle the question according to their own best judgment. That is all I care to say.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the primary reason for offering this amendment is on account of conditions existing in my State, the State of Missouri. This amendment is offered, as I am informed, at the solicitation and on the initiative of certain Republicans in the State of Missouri who are so infinitesimally small that you must have a magnifying glass to find them.

The statement has been made here upon the floor of this House, and in other places, that there is a statute in Missouri which provides that if the legislature fails to redistrict the State then the governor may lay the State off into congressional districts.

There is no such statute in Missouri. I will insert in my remarks the only provision of our statutes that can be construed to in any manner refer to this matter. Unfortunately for Missouri at the present time it is afflicted with a Republican governor [applause on the Republican side] compensated in a measure by being blessed with a Democratic legislature [applause on the Democratic side], this condition, however, rendering it practically impossible to pass a redistricting bill in the usual way at this time.

It has been stated to me by gentlemen having in charge this amendment, or favoring this amendment, that if Missouri had such a statute they wanted this amendment adopted so that the governor can prevent the legislature from redistricting the State by vetoing any bill which it might pass, and then take advantage of his own veto and redistrict the State himself.

It seems to me that every man upon this floor, either upon this side or that, ought to agree that such conduct would be contemptible petty politics, and I know of no other way to express it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert, as a part of my remarks, a copy of the only sections of the Missouri statutes bearing on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. The sections are as follows:

SEC. 6616. Electoral districts: Hereafter at all elections held in this State for the office of President and Vice President of the United States the electoral districts shall be the same as the congressional districts into which the State shall be divided, and the same number of electors shall be chosen by the qualified voters, one of whom shall be a resident of each district, and in addition thereto two electors shall be chosen by the State at large.

SEC. 6617. New apportionment—Duty of governor: When any new apportionment shall be made of the Members to be elected to the House of Representatives of the United States whereby the number of electors to which the State may be entitled shall be increased or diminished, it shall be the duty of the governor to lay off the State into as many districts as shall be equal to the number of electors to which this State shall then be entitled, so that the said districts contain as near as may be an equal number of inhabitants.

From a careful reading of this statute it will be seen that section 6616 simply provides that the electoral districts shall be the same as the congressional districts, and there shall be one elector chosen from each district and two electors from the State at large.

Section 6617 simply provides that when an apportionment shall be made of the Members to be elected to the House of Representatives of the United States whereby the number of electors—which, as we all know, must correspond in numbers to the Members of the House of Representatives and United States Senate from each State—are either to be increased or diminished, then in that event the governor shall lay off the State into electoral districts, in compliance with the preceding section, which is to make the electoral districts the same as the congressional districts are. Thus it will be seen there is no authority given to the governor to fix the congressional districts, but only the electoral districts, and in the absence of any legislation by Congress as to how the redistricting shall be done I do not believe that the governor would have any more authority to divide the State up into congressional districts than any other officer of the State government, and no one would contend that any of the other State officers would have any such right.

Mr. Chairman, the friends of this amendment have sought to prejudice Members by contending that in the Democratic States the gerrymander has been grossly unfair, and my State has been cited as a sample of that unfairness. It seems to me if my Republican friends had not lost all shame by the long lease of power which they have enjoyed they would hesitate, in view of their own record, to refer to this matter at all.

I want to give you a sample of the Republican gerrymander, but I want first to especially call the attention of my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] to the facts as they relate to our State. He contends that the Democratic Legislature of Missouri that redistricted the State 10 years ago violated the Federal Statutes by making the districts greatly unequal in population, so as to get an advantage. Let us see. The tenth, eleventh, and twelfth districts of Missouri are now represented in this House by Republicans—one of whom is my colleague, Mr. BARTHOLDT—and have an average population per district of 208,426; but the seventh, fourteenth, and fifteenth districts are represented by Democrats, of which I am one, and contains an average population per district of 233,646, being an average of 25,220 more to the Democratic district than to the Republican district. The average population per district for the whole 16 districts of Missouri is 194,166. Thus it will be seen that the charges he makes against his own State is not borne out by the facts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us get back to the record in the Republican States, where the redistricting has been done by the Republican Party, and see what the record is. The following table tells its own tale:

In California the population of the fifth California district is 236,234 and of the sixth is 155,839, difference being 80,395.

In Connecticut the population of the second Connecticut district is 310,923, while that of the third Connecticut is 129,619, the difference in population being 181,304.

In Illinois the eighth district has a population of 286,643, and the fourteenth Illinois has a population of 170,820, the difference in population being 115,823.

In Iowa the first Iowa district has a population of 159,267 and the tenth Iowa 253,350, the difference in population being 94,083.

In Kansas the third district has a population of 284,537 and the fourth Kansas 157,842, a difference in population of 126,695.

In Michigan the ninth Michigan district has a population of 166,124 and the twelfth Michigan 275,525, a difference in population of 109,401.

In Minnesota the fifth Minnesota district has a population of 292,806 and the second Minnesota district 174,856, the difference in population being 117,950.

In Nebraska the second district has a population of 162,756 and the third district has a population of 211,780, the difference in population being 49,024.

In New York, in the city of New York, the fifteenth New York district has a population of 165,701, and the eighteenth New York, in the same city, 450,000, the difference in population being 284,299. In the rural districts of New York, the twenty-second has a population of 169,005, the fifteenth a population of 165,701, the thirteenth a population of 169,378, and the thirty-fourth a population of 220,208.

In Ohio the twelfth Ohio district has a population of 164,460, and the twenty-first Ohio has a population of 255,510, the difference in population being 91,050.

In Oklahoma, where the present districts were created by the enabling act of Congress, the fifth Oklahoma has a population of 315,106, and the first Oklahoma 225,373, the difference being 89,733.

In Pennsylvania the eleventh district has a population of 257,121, and the fourteenth Pennsylvania 146,769, a difference of 110,352.

In the State of Colorado the first Colorado district has a population of 245,979, and the second Colorado 293,721, a difference of 47,742.

This table shows your record in these Republican States.

You Republicans had better get the "beam" out of your own eyes before you try to remove the "mote" out of your neighbors' eyes.

There is another record which, like Banquo's ghost, will not down. When the Republican Party was in control of Congress Oklahoma was admitted into the Union, and notwithstanding the fact that a very large majority of her population was made up of the intelligent, progressive, enterprising citizenship of the older States, thoroughly trained in statecraft, in fact, the very flower of American citizenship, you would not permit them to divide their own State up into congressional districts, but before you would admit this young giant into the Union, you laid your blighting hand upon her and fixed the metes and bounds of her congressional districts so that you thought you had secured three Representatives out of the five from that State.

What does this record show as to the equal distribution of population in these districts provided by you? Let us see:

	Population.
First district (Republican)	225,373
Fifth district (Democratic)	315,106
Second district (Republican)	230,224
Fourth district (Democratic)	303,330

In these four districts, two of which are Republican and two Democratic, and under your benign and just gerrymander there are 162,908 more people in the Democratic districts than there are in the Republican districts.

O! ye Republican pharisees, hypocrites! for pretense you make long prayers, and then, in order to obtain a petty advantage, you do not hesitate to invade the sacred precincts of State rights, but, like the serpent, you leave your trail behind.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of these lilliputian Republican politicians in Missouri is very apparent.

They are not willing that our State shall be redistricted in the usual way—by a bill in the legislature, nor by the initiative and referendum—but they want to devise some means whereby one man, the governor, may do this work. They do not want it done fairly.

Their real purpose is disclosed by a remark frequently made by my colleague, Mr. BARTHOLDT, and who represents the governor on this floor, that the best lawyers are divided in opinion as to whether under our statutes the governor might not be authorized to redistrict the State, congressionally, in the event Congress should fail to direct how this work shall be done by the several States.

They are evidently reasoning this way about it: If good lawyers divide in opinion as to the proper construction to be given this statute, may not members of our Supreme Court also reach different conclusions, and if they should divide in opinions may not that division be along political lines, and if along political, then they console themselves with the fact that a majority of the members of our Supreme Court are now Republicans; and in this very dubious, doubtful, and questionable way fix it so that one man, the governor, may redistrict our State. This is their scheme in a nutshell. Of course, they do not dare to admit this in the open. Why, my colleague, Mr. BARTHOLDT, even pretends that he is in favor of letting the redistricting be done by the initiative and referendum. He was never in favor of this system of legislation a moment in his life, and whenever I hear one of these "stand-pat" Republicans talking about letting the people decide anything for themselves I immediately begin to look through the woodpile for the Senegambian, which I am sure is concealed therein, and in this case we do not have to look far to find the "nigger in the woodpile." It is to leave this law so that no particular authority in the State shall be designated by Congress to do this redistricting, so that by a partisan construction of a section of our statute a Republican governor can ignore the wishes of the good people of the State and lay out their congressional districts to suit his own sweet will.

I am opposed to it. I want a "square deal."

Mr. Chairman, practically every apportionment bill that has been passed through this House from the foundation of the Government has provided that the redistricting shall be done by legislatures of the different States. You Republicans passed the apportionment bills of 1872, 1882, 1892, and 1901, each one of which bills provided that the legislatures of the different States should do the work of redistricting. Now, if it was good to do that way then, why is it not good to do that way now?

The lower house of my State is composed of at least one member from each county in the State. The Senate is composed of men elected by districts equal in population as may be. In redistricting the State the representatives from all the people from every county have an equal vote. No man or party desiring to be fair can object to this method. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be voted down.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I can not allow to go unchallenged the statements just made by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN]. It is not the intention of either one or more politicians of the Republican faith to have the governor redistrict the State of Missouri.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I can not yield. Our proposition is, and the reason for this amendment is, not to tie the hands of the people of Missouri. The Democratic legislature which 10 years ago did the redistricting made districts varying in population by more than 100,000 people; in other words, it violated the Federal statute which said that the districts should contain as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants. And because of that flagrant violation of a Federal law, and for the further reason that the people desire to take this case in their own hands, we ask you Democrats now to be true to your traditions and to your principles and stand up for State rights on this question and not tie the hands of the people of Missouri if they propose by petition to present to the voters of that State a fair and equitable apportionment scheme. By voting these words into the bill, namely, "by the legislature thereof," you will prevent the people of Missouri from doing so. You will tie their hands; you will leave to the legislature again an opportunity to violate the Federal statute without any recourse on our part anywhere, either in the State courts or the Supreme Court of the United States. We ask you to be true to the doctrine which you preach, that the people have a right to make use of the initiative and referendum when they cease to have confidence in the legislature, and legislatures are usually controlled, as we all know, by partisan majorities, and it is probably true that both parties are sinning in that respect.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not yield. As to the law cited by my colleague [Mr. HAMLIN], I want to state for the information of the House that that law was passed by a Democratic legislature. It was passed at the behest of a Democratic governor and was signed by that governor, but it can not be invoked in this case as another colleague [Mr. RUSSELL] has stated on the floor to-day. There is a doubt in the minds of the people as to whether that law relates to congressional districts or to the selection of electors in a presidential year, and, as I say, the greatest legal minds are in doubt about it. But this is immaterial, because we do not propose to invoke it; we propose to leave the matter of redistricting to the people themselves. Let each party get up by petition a fair scheme, and let the people vote as to which scheme they want, and we Republicans are perfectly willing to trust the people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Members of the House can not sufficiently appreciate the situation unless they understand political conditions in Missouri. A brief explanation will demonstrate to any fair-minded man, be he Republican or Democrat, how thoroughly justifiable is the demand of the people for the right to fix, by their own votes, the boundary lines of the districts, legislative as well as congressional. The State of Missouri is gerrymandered as no other State in the Union is, owing to a frantic effort on the part of Democratic politicians to prop their tottering party. The Democratic legislatures who played the dastardly game at political geometry were concerned, in the language of my friend from Kentucky, neither "about the law of the land nor the oaths they had taken to obey it," but had in view only the increase of Democratic and the decrease of Republican representation. Now, I believe, and my party believes, that the majority of the people of Missouri favor fair play in representation, but how, under the present system, are they going to get it?

Remember that the legislature which is to do the redistricting is itself elected in badly gerrymandered districts. How, then, can you secure pure water when the spring is poisoned? I do not propose to burden the RECORD with figures, but "by their fruits ye shall know them." At the last election, in November, 1910, the Republicans of Missouri elected their supreme court judges and other State officials by about 3,000 majority, and yet the Democrats succeeded in securing a large majority in both the house and the senate. There was no political issue that I know of which could have militated in favor of the State ticket and against the legislative ticket of the Republicans; hence it was the monstrous iniquity of the Democratic State gerrymander which prevented the majority of the people of Missouri from working their will through fair representation in the legislature.

But "the worst is still to come." Look at the result of the congressional elections. While, as I said before, the Republicans carried the State by a small majority, so that under an equitable arrangement they should have carried at least eight of the 16 districts of the State, that same monstrous gerrymander robbed us of five Republicans in Congress and left us but three, but, fortunately, enough, the same as in Kentucky, to tell the tale on this floor. Instead of one-half of the representation—and I should say at least one-half—we are not even accorded one-fifth, and from this you can probably understand why my Democratic colleagues insist on having the State redistricted "by the legislature thereof."

Before proceeding to give facts and figures on the congressional situation, let me throw a side light on Democratic conduct since the election. It seems that the leaders of that party regarded a Republican congressional representation of three out of possible 16 as excessive. So effective did they regard the congressional gerrymander that the election of more than one Republican was a surprise to them. And as all three successful candidates had been elected in the city of St. Louis, these so-called leaders raised the cry of fraud. To-day they wish they had not done it, for events proved that they had cried "Fraud" just once too often. Let me tell you the story. It is too good to withhold from the country. Owing to the prohibition issue, which brought out an exceptionally heavy vote—the citizenship of St. Louis being overwhelmingly opposed to prohibition—the Republicans carried that city by an unprecedented majority. A heavy vote in St. Louis always means a big Republican majority, but the Democratic leaders professed not to know that, nor were they aware, apparently, that the Republican governor, Herbert S. Hadley, had staked his honor and reputation on an honest election in the three large cities of the State, and had instructed the State boards of election, appointed and controlled by him, to exhaust their official powers for the purpose of preventing fraud. He felt, as did every one of his party friends, that the Republican State administration was on trial in the conduct of that election, and it was his purpose to demonstrate that the people had made no mistake when they intrusted the affairs of the State in Republican hands. We knew we had had an honest election, and consequently courted the fullest investigation. Now, if our Democratic friends had stopped then and there they might have probably gained some party advantage, as the people of the State, unfamiliar with the facts, might have believed some of the wild statements made by the Democratic State chairman and other leaders. Instead, they walked, with open eyes, into their own trap, and instituted contests in all three of the congressional districts. And what was the result of these contests? A recount of all the ballots cast and a most careful comparison of the ballots with the poll books revealed a difference between the original count and the recount hardly sufficient to change the result in a single precinct, even if all clerical mistakes and technical errors were added together. To repeat a common expression, the wonder of it all was that so remarkably clean an election and so correct a count was technically possible, considering the tremendous task which the judges and clerks had to perform in so short a time.

It is admitted now by all that the last election in St. Louis was the fairest and squarest ever held, and as this is largely due to a Republican governor the people of Missouri, irrespective of party, regard his elevation to that high office on that account alone as a blessing rather than an "affliction," which is the word thoughtlessly used by my colleague [Mr. HAMLIN]. A partisan committee of the legislature also made investigations upon the strength of contests against St. Louis Members, and they, too, were forced to report in favor of the Republican contestees. So, we have the anomalous situation of the Democratic Party certifying to and proving the honesty of an election which it had denounced in unmeasured terms as fraudulent and corrupt, and in my judgment it will be many years before that party will get over the effect of the boomerang.

To return to the congressional gerrymander for which the Democratic Party is responsible let me cite but one example. The tenth district, which I have the honor to represent, had a population 10 years ago of 265,440. The adjoining twelfth district was given only 152,424 people, a difference of 113,016 people. It would have been an easy matter to comply with the Federal statute by making the three St. Louis districts equal in population, but that did not suit our Democratic gerrymanderers who hoped, by crowding all the Republican territory into one district, to make both the others Democratic. The tenth district now has a population of over 400,000, and its Republican majority of 25,600 alone, if fairly apportioned, would insure to the Republicans the representation to which they are entitled on this floor.

But why is it that of all the Missouri Democrats my colleague [Mr. HAMLIN] is so particularly anxious to save the Missouri gerrymander or to have a new one just as iniquitous made by the Missouri Legislature? I let the St. Louis Globe-Democrat answer this question. It says under the caption "A Specimen Missouri District":

> In the debate on the congressional apportionment bill, which passed the House last week, one of Missouri's Democratic Representatives, Mr. HAMLIN, made a special attack on the Republicans of Missouri and the idea of submitting the question of districting to all the voters of the State by referendum. Mr. HAMLIN's anxiety on the subject of saving the gerrymander can be understood when the peculiar make-up of his own district, the seventh, is examined. It begins not far from the southern boundary of the State, runs north in a single string of counties until it reaches the Missouri River, where it suddenly bulges east and west, jumping the river to take in the heavily Democratic county of Howard, without which the district would be strongly Republican. The seven counties south of the river, including the city of Springfield, give a Republican majority of 1,000, but the acrobatic feat at the river to get in Howard County, the Bourbon Gibraltar, Democratic by 1,600, sufficed to elect Mr. HAMLIN last year by the scanty plurality of 482.
>
> It is not surprising, in view of the geographical eccentricity of his district, that Mr. HAMLIN should be a champion of the gerrymander and scorn the use by the people of the referendum to obtain equal representation for themselves. The southernmost county of his district rests on a district, the fourteenth, that is another example of the art of the Missouri gerrymander contortionists. It takes almost the entire width of the State to render the fourteenth district "compact and contiguous." It is a spindling succession of counties east and west, and would be Republican but for its inclusion of a bunch of Democratic counties in the southeastern corner of the State. These two districts alone cover, in a narrow strip, two-thirds of the State east and west, and also north and south. Mr. HAMLIN refers to Missouri's election of a Republican governor as "unfortunate." The fact is due to allowing equal representation in filling the office. By a vote of 355,000 to 340,000, the voters of Missouri preferred the Republican candidate. No doubt the failure to apply a juggle to the choice of State officers also is the "unfortunate" part of it in Mr. HAMLIN's estimation.

The gentleman from the seventh district [Mr. HAMLIN] charges the Republicans of Missouri with an attempt to take advantage of a certain State law, which he quotes, in order to have the Republican governor perform the work of redistricting the State, and almost in the same breath he asserts that that law does not apply to congressional districts at all. Will he kindly tell me what would be the use of our invoking a law which does not apply? It seems his partisan feeling has carried him to an illogical and untenable position. Furthermore, in order to justify the Missouri gerrymander, he points to a number of States where, he says, the Republicans were guilty of the same offense. Well, we all know that two wrongs do not make a right; but, supposing his statements as to gerrymanders in other States were correct, would they not constitute the strongest possible argument in favor of my position that partisan legislatures can not be trusted as well as the people themselves? He argues that all former apportionment bills passed by Congress contained the words "by the legislature," so that heretofore the States had always been redistricted by the legislature; but he forgets that even 10 years ago, when Congress passed the last apportionment bill, such an institution as the initiative and referendum was unknown, or had not been adopted by a single State in the Union. Now, this new system of direct legislation by the people is in vogue in a large number of States, and whatever we may think of its value and usefulness in other respects a moment's reflection will satisfy us that it is exceptionally well adapted as an instrument to secure a fair apportionment of legislative, senatorial, and congressional districts. And the Republicans of Missouri, far from intending to take a partisan advantage which the law, above referred to, might or might not give us, intend to make use of the referendum by presenting to the people, for their approval at the ballot box, a fair and equitable apportionment plan. If Congress would refuse to invade the sovereign rights of the State to the extent of prescribing that the redistricting must be done by the legislature, all the States having the initiative and referendum could resort to it for the same purpose. In such an event both parties could prepare their redistricting schemes and submit them to the people, who, always solicitous of fair play, would put their stamp of approval upon what will seem to them to be the best. And it would probably not make much difference whether the Republican or the Democratic scheme is adopted, as the mere knowledge of its being subject to the approval of the people would insure fair and reasonable propositions.

How much superior, from the standpoint of justice and impartiality, such a system would be to the present plan of permitting partisan legislative majorities to arrange the districts for representation in legislative bodies is shown by another most recent example furnished by two Democratic State officials in Missouri. According to the constitution of my State the districting of State senatorial districts, when the legislature fails to act, must be performed by the governor, secretary of state, and attorney general. It so happens that the governor is a Republican, and the last-named two officials are Democrats. Now, instead of acting in a nonpartisan spirit and a judicial capacity, those two Democratic officials, being the majority of the board, eliminated the governor entirely and proceeded to do the work in the sole and exclusive interest of the Democratic Party. The refusal of the governor to sign the partisan plan will alone save the people of the State from a gerrymander unequaled in unfairness in political history.

The Republicans of Missouri are willing to trust the people rather than partisan bodies or officials, and I am free to say that Congress would lend its hand to the continuance of partisan outrages in Missouri and other States if it denied to the people of the several States the right to choose their own methods of securing fair representation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will allow me five minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Very well; I make the motion, then, Mr. Chairman, that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that under the law in the State of Missouri that you have the initiative?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. You have it now by law?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It reminds me of a boy who had a dog to sell. [Laughter.] He met a lady and said, "I have a dog; do you want to buy a dog?" Said the lady, "What is his name?" "Well, ma'am, I call him 'Initiative,'" said the boy. "That is a nice name," said the lady. "Is he a fierce dog?" "Oh," says he, "he is the d—— d—— d—— fiercest dog you ever saw." "Well," she said, "I do not want a fierce dog." The boy, equal to the occasion, said, "He is not such a d—— d—— d—— fierce dog as he might be." [Laughter.] That law, the initiative, was enacted under the leadership of the Democratic Party in the State of Missouri. Now that you want to perpetrate an outrage in congressional apportionment, or perchance in State apportionment, you rush, under the desire, in my judgment, to nullify the will of a majority in your State and repudiate that law. [Applause on the Republican side.] And great is Democracy! My judgment is not in favor of initiative legislation, but if it is enacted, even against my will, I will abide it. You do not seem willing to abide it. Missouri, in my judgment, is perhaps the most hopeful Republican State in the swing of 20 years of all the States in the Union. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And when you repudiate the law which your party led in enacting, while I am not a prophet or a son of a prophet, I believe the good people of the State of Missouri—of the Anglo-American race—will repudiate you, and the rocks and the mountains, if they do not fall on you, ought to fall on you. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On line 17, section 4, after the word "legislature," insert "pursuant to the laws of the State under the constitution of said State."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the Clerk report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "legislature," line 17, in section 4, insert "pursuant to the laws of said State under the constitution of said State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2983, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. BROUSSARD, a Representative elect from the State of Louisiana, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that those who spoke on the bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that those who have spoken on the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some gentleman on that side of the House if the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is present? If this meets with his approval, I shall not object. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill as amended to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with the following instructions, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to recommit the bill with instructions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after section 2 of the bill, as a new section, the following:

"SEC. 3. That as soon as the Fourteenth and each subsequent decennial census of the population of the several States, as required by the Constitution, shall have been completed and returned to the Department of Commerce and Labor, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of said department to ascertain the aggregate population of all the States and of each State separately, excluding Indians not taxed; which aggregate population he shall divide by the number 430, and the product of such division, excluding any fraction of a unit that may happen to remain, shall be the ratio of apportionment of Representatives among the several States under such census; and the Secretary of said department shall then proceed to divide the total representative population of each State by the ratio so determined, and each State shall be assigned one Representative for each full ratio of population therein and an additional Representative for any fraction equal to or greater than a moiety of such ratio, but in no case shall a Representative be assigned for a fraction less than a moiety of such ratio, and each State shall have at least one Representative; and the aggregate number of Representatives so assigned to the States shall constitute the total membership of the House of Representatives under such census. And as soon as practicable after the Secretary of said department shall have ascertained the number of Representatives to which each State is entitled under any decennial census, in the manner herein provided, he shall make out and transmit to the House of Representatives a certificate of the number of Representatives so apportioned to each State; and he shall likewise make out and transmit without delay to the executive of each State a certificate of the number of Representatives apportioned to such State."

And in section 4 of the bill, page 4, line 17, strike out the words "by the legislature thereof."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk did not read the motion. The Clerk should also have read the introductory part.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the introduction.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the bill (H. R. 2983) to the Committee on the Census, with directions to report said bill back to the House forthwith, with the following amendments:

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] moves the previous question on the motion to recommit the bill with instructions. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to recommit the bill will answer "yea"; those opposed, "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 177, answered "present" 7, not voting 105, as follows:

YEAS—99.

Anderson, Minn.	Draper	Higgins	Lindbergh
Anthony	Driscoll, M. E.	Hill	McCreary
Austin	Dwight	Hinds	McKinney
Bartholdt	Dyer	Howell	McLaughlin
Bathrick	Esch	Hubbard	Madden
Bowman	Farr	Humphrey, Wash.	Madison
Buchanan	Focht	Kahn	Mann
Burke, S. Dak.	Foss	Kennedy	Martin, S. Dak
Cannon	French	Kent	Miller
Catlin	Fuller	Kinkaid, Nebr.	Moore, Pa.
Cooper	Gardner, Mass.	Knowland	Morgan
Crumpacker	Gardner, N. J.	Kopp	Mott
Currier	Gillett	Lafferty	Murdock
Danforth	Good	La Follette	Needham
Davis, Minn.	Hanna	Langley	Nelson
De Forest	Harris	Lawrence	Norris
Dodds	Helgesen	Lenroot	Nye

Olmsted	Simmons	Sulloway	Vreeland
Parran	Sloan	Sweet	Warburton
Pickett	Smith, J. M. C.	Talcott, N. Y.	Wedemeyer
Powers	Smith, Saml. W.	Taylor, Ohio	Wilder
Prince	Speer	Thistlewood	Willis
Rees	Steenerson	Tilson	Young, Kans.
Roberts, Mass.	Stephens, Cal.	Utter	Young, Mich.
Rodenberg	Sterling	Volstead

NAYS—177.

Aiken, S. C.	Dupre	Jacoway	Richardson
Akin, N. Y.	Ellerbe	James	Robinson
Alexander	Estopinal	Johnson, Ky.	Roddenbery
Allen	Evans	Johnson, S. C.	Rothermel
Anderson, Ohio	Faison	Jones	Rouse
Ansberry	Ferris	Kendall	Rubey
Ashbrook	Fields	Kinkead, N. J.	Rucker, Colo.
Ayers	Finley	Kitchin	Rucker, Mo.
Barnhart	Flood, Va.	Konig	Russell
Beall, Tex.	Floyd, Ark.	Konop	Sabath
Bell, Ga.	Foster, Ill.	Korbly	Saunders
Blackmon	Fowler	Lamb	Shackleford
Booher	Francis	Lee, Ga.	Sharp
Borland	Gallagher	Legare	Sheppard
Broussard	Garner	Lever	Sherley
Bulkley	Garrett	Linthicum	Sherwood
Burke, Wis.	George	Littlepage	Sims
Burleson	Glass	Lloyd	Sisson
Burnett	Goeke	Lobeck	Small
Byrnes, S. C.	Goodwin, Ark.	McCoy	Smith, Tex.
Byrns, Tenn.	Gordon	McDermott	Sparkman
Callaway	Gould	McGillicuddy	Stack
Candler	Graham	McHenry	Stanley
Cantrill	Gray	Macon	Stedman
Carlin	Gregg, Pa.	Maguire, Nebr.	Stephens, Miss.
Carter	Gregg, Tex.	Maher	Stephens, Tex.
Clark, Fla.	Gudger	Martin, Colo.	Stone
Claypool	Guernsey	Mays	Taylor, Colo.
Clayton	Hamilton, W. Va.	Moon, Tenn.	Towner
Cline	Hamlin	Moore, Tex.	Townsend
Connell	Hammond	Morrison	Tribble
Conry	Hardwick	Moss, Ind.	Turnbull
Covington	Hardy	Murray	Tuttle
Cox, Ind.	Harrison, Miss.	Oldfield	Underwood
Cullop	Harrison, N. Y.	Padgett	Watkins
Curley	Hay	Page	Webb
Daugherty	Heflin	Pepper	Whitacre
Davenport	Helm	Plumley	White
Davis, W. Va.	Hensley	Post	Wickliffe
Dickinson	Holland	Pou	Wilson, Pa.
Dies	Houston	Prouty	Witherspoon
Difenderfer	Hughes, Ga.	Rainey	Young, Tex.
Dixon, Ind.	Hughes, N. J.	Raker
Doremus	Hull	Rauch
Driscoll, D. A.	Humphreys, Miss.	Reilly

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—7.

Bartlett	Donohoe	Kipp	Woods, Iowa
Brantley	Haugen	Randell, Tex.

NOT VOTING—105.

Adair	Doughton	Latta	Pray
Adamson	Edwards	Lee, Pa.	Pujo
Ames	Fairchild	Levy	Ransdell, La.
Andrus	Fitzgerald	Lewis	Redfield
Barchfeld	Fordney	Lindsay	Riordan
Bates	Fornes	Littleton	Roberts, Nev.
Berger	Foster, Vt.	Longworth	Scully
Bingham	Godwin, N. C.	Loud	Sells
Boehne	Goldfogle	Loudenslager	Slayden
Bradley	Greene	McCall	Slemp
Brown	Griest	McGuire, Okla.	Smith, Cal.
Burgess	Hamill	McKenzie	Smith, N. Y.
Burke, Pa.	Hamilton, Mich.	McKinley	Stevens, Minn.
Butler	Hartman	McMorran	Sulzer
Calder	Hawley	Malby	Switzer
Campbell	Hayes	Matthews	Talbott, Md.
Cary	Heald	Mitchell	Taylor, Ala.
Collier	Henry, Conn.	Mondell	Thayer
Copley	Henry, Tex.	Moon, Pa.	Thomas
Cox, Ohio	Hobson	Morse, Wis.	Underhill
Crago	Howard	O'Shaunessy	Weeks
Cravens	Howland	Palmer	Wilson, Ill.
Dalzell	Hughes, W. Va.	Patten, N. Y.	Wilson, N. Y.
Davidson	Jackson	Patton, Pa.	Wood, N. J.
Dent	Kindred	Payne
Denver	Lafean	Peters
Dickson, Miss.	Langham	Porter

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. COLLIER with Mr. WOODS of Iowa (transferable).

Mr. FORNES with Mr. BRADLEY.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. ANDRUS.

Mr. PUJO with Mr. MCMORRAN (transferable).

Until further notice:

Mr. COX of Ohio with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DOUGHTON with Mr. BATES.

Mr. HOBSON with Mr. FAIRCHILD (transferable).

Mr. BOEHNE with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. ADAMSON with Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

Mr. KIPP with Mr. LANGHAM.

Mr. ADAIR with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. BARTLETT with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. KINDRED with Mr. HOWLAND.

Mr. DENVER with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas with Mr. GREENE.

Mr. SULZER with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. DENT with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont.

Mr. LEWIS with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas with Mr. MCCALL.

Mr. PATTEN of New York with Mr. HENRY of Connecticut.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. LOUDENSLAGER.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana with Mr. LAFEAN.

Mr. SMITH of New York with Mr. MALBY.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama with Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. UNDERHILL with Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. WILSON of New York with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. CRAVEN with Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. LINDSAY with Mr. FORDNEY.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina (against) with Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania (in favor).

Mr. SLAYDEN (in favor) with Mr. HAUGEN (against).

Mr. PALMER (against) with Mr. HOWARD (in favor).

Mr. EDWARDS (against) with Mr. THAYER (in favor).

On this vote:

Mr. LEVY (against) with Mr. HEALD (in favor).

Mr. LITTLETON (against) with Mr. MCKINLEY (in favor).

Mr. BRANTLEY (against) with Mr. DALZELL (in favor).

Mr. SCULLY (against) with Mr. BROWN (in favor).

From the 27th to Monday noon:

Mr. DONOHOE with Mr. CALDER.

Until April 28 at noon:

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania (against) with Mr. PRAY (in favor).

From to-day for three weeks.

Mr. LATTA with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

From April 27 at noon until May 1 at noon.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HOUSTON, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HEALD, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ADAMSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 28, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Kitty and Maria, John Logan, master (H. Doc. No. 31); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Alciope, Robert Rice, master (H. Doc. No. 32); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the ship Golden Age, Caleb Earl, master (H. Doc. No. 33); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Eliza, John Miller, master (H. Doc. No. 34); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the ship Nancy, Joseph Dill, master (H. Doc. No. 35); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the ship Goddess of Plenty, Thomas Chirnside, master (H. Doc. No. 36); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FINLEY, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. Con. Res. 3) providing for the printing of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 14), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 7690) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Snake River at the town of Nyssa, Oreg.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TURNBULL: A bill (H. R. 7691) to provide for a survey of the Roanoke River from the town of Clarksville in the county of Mecklenburg, State of Virginia, to the head of steamboat navigation in said river below Weldon, in the county of Halifax, State of North Carolina; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 7692) to define the hours of labor of letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 7693) to authorize the town of Logan, Aitkin County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SIMMONS: A bill (H. R. 7694) to give effect to the fifth article of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed January 11, 1909; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 7695) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: A bill (H. R. 7696) to provide for enlarging the United States building at Houlton, Me.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7697) to provide for the erection of a public building at Caribou, Me.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7698) changing the name of Maine Avenue and providing for a new location for Maine Avenue, District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 7699) to increase the compensation of pressmen in the Government Printing Office; to the Committee on Printing.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7700) to provide against the purchase of goods manufactured by convict labor on behalf of the United States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7701) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Newton, in the State of New Jersey; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7702) providing for the issuance of a charter to the Veteran Reserve Corps of America, a corporate military organization; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BATHRICK: A bill (H. R. 7703) to authorize the enlargement of the public building at Akron, Summit County, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7704) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Barberton, Summit County, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7705) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Cuyahoga Falls, Summit County, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7706) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Ravenna, Portage County, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7707) to authorize the erection of a public building at Niles, Trumbull County, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7708) to authorize the erection of a public building at Conneaut, Ashtabula County, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BORLAND: A bill (H. R. 7709) making appropriations and providing for a continuing contract for the construction, repair, and preservation of public work on the Missouri River between Kansas City and the mouth; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 7710) to amend section 4916 of the Revised Statutes, relating to patents; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7711) to amend section 4889 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 7712) to amend section 839 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 7713) to decrease the expense and increase the efficiency of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CANDLER: A bill (H. R. 7714) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Tombigbee River in the State of Mississippi and in the State of Alabama; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 7715) to require all street railroad companies in the District of Columbia to issue free transfers, interchangeable from the lines of one company to those of another, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7716) to regulate the rates to be charged and collected by the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. and any other firm or corporation, for telephones, telephone service, and telephone connections in the District of Columbia for business purposes, and prescribing a penalty for its violation; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLAYTON: A bill (H. R. 7717) for the erection of a public building at Union Springs, Ala.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7718) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Alabama; the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7719) for the maintenance and improvement of the Choctawhatchee River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. JONES: A bill (H. R. 7720) to establish a national highway from Washington, D. C., by way of Mount Vernon to Fredericksburg, Va., to be known as the Mother Washington Memorial Highway, in memory and honor of the mother of the Father of his Country; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 7721) to amend and reenact section 3224 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OLMSTED: Resolution (H. Res. 130) authorizing and directing the Committee on Invalid Pensions to inquire and report why the pension granted to David L. McDermott by act of July 6, 1886, is withheld, and what action, if any, should be taken in the premises; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BLACKMON: Resolution (H. Res. 131) requesting certain information of the Attorney General; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio: Resolution (H. Res. 132) instructing and authorizing the Committee on the District of Columbia to make an examination into the rates charged for the telephone service in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts: Resolution (H. Res. 133) requesting certain information of the Secretary of War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 134) requesting certain information of the Secretary of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 135) to reprint House Document No. 27, Sixty-first Congress, first session; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BLACKMON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 76) directing the Attorney General to make investigations and begin prosecutions of persons unlawfully conspiring together to reduce the price of cotton; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 77) directing the Attorney General to make investigations and begin prosecutions of persons unlawfully conspiring together to increase the price of wheat; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SABATH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 78) to secure the neutralization of the Philippine Islands; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. BERGER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 79) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OLMSTED: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 7) authorizing the appointment of a committee of Senators and Representatives to confer with the commission of the State of Pennsylvania in regard to the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 7722) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Dobbins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 7723) granting an increase of pension to George K. Taylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7724) for the relief of Mathias Meyer; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 7725) granting an increase of pension to David W. Brandt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BATHRICK: A bill (H. R. 7726) granting an increase of pension to Henry E. Hill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7727) for the relief of Charles J. Callahan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7728) for the relief of John W. Walsh; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 7729) granting a pension to William F. Myers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLAYTON: A bill (H. R. 7730) granting a pension to William Lanier; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7731) granting a pension to Thomas I. Durham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7732) granting a pension to Mettie Blackwood; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7733) granting a pension to Zachariah Cassedy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7734) granting a pension to Martha Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7735) granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Webb; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7736) for the relief of the representatives of the estate of Henry C. Sills, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7737) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Samuel J. Maund; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 7738) granting an increase of pension to Jerry A. Fitzgerald; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DICKINSON: A bill (H. R. 7739) for the relief of Henry Parks, alias Nathaniel Parks; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7740) for the relief of Mrs. William C. Lucas; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DIFENDERFER: A bill (H. R. 7741) granting a pension to John H. Bunting; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 7742) granting an increase of pension to Daniel W. Meyers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7743) granting an increase of pension to William H. Williamson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7744) granting an increase of pension to Andreas Wirth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7745) granting an increase of pension to Leander C. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7746) granting an increase of pension to B. M. Laur; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7747) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Kilburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7748) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Phillips; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7749) granting an increase of pension to J. P. Tanne; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7750) granting an increase of pension to W. V. Cronk; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7751) granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Dare; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7752) granting an increase of pension to William T. Hunt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7753) granting an increase of pension to C. K. Elliott; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7754) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Ley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7755) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of George R. Spore; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7756) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John D. Woods; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 7757) granting an increase of pension to John H. Kohr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOEKE: A bill (H. R. 7758) granting an increase of pension to Elias McQuay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7759) for the relief of Henry S. Call; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7760) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Hezekiah R. Hubbell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 7761) granting an increase of pension to Joseph A. Edmonds; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: A bill (H. R. 7762) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Grass; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 7763) granting an increase of pension to Laura E. R. Hatfield; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7764) granting an increase of pension to Joseph E. Layton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7765) granting an increase of pension to Henry Mardle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7766) granting an increase of pension to E. Clarkson Lane; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7767) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Orlando L. Wieting; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7768) granting a pension to John J. Schreiber; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7769) granting a pension to Georgia L. Burnand; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7770) granting a pension to William Haley; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7771) granting a pension to William R. Claxton; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7772) for the relief of John McKeon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY: A bill (H. R. 7773) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Bigler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7774) granting an increase of pension to A. V. Kendrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7775) granting an increase of pension to John M. Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 7776) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7777) granting an increase of pension to James W. Cowan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7778) granting a pension to Martha I. Reynolds; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KIPP: A bill (H. R. 7779) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Havens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7780) granting an increase of pension to Amasa David; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7781) granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Tiffany; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7782) granting an increase of pension to John M. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7783) granting a pension to Margret Price; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 7784) granting an increase of pension to John C. Ball; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7785) granting an increase of pension to Josephus P. Eckler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEPAGE: A bill (H. R. 7786) granting a pension to James M. Hanshaw; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7787) granting a pension to John W. Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7788) granting a pension to William F. Harrold; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7789) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Young; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGILLICUDDY: A bill (H. R. 7790) granting an increase of pension to Charles Gammon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 7791) granting an increase of pension to Allen Hart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7792) granting an increase of pension to Henry Spencer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7793) granting an increase of pension to William Greer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7794) granting an increase of pension to Jesse W. Casteel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7795) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Reed; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7796) granting an honorable discharge to William Alexander; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7797) granting a pension to William T. Bogert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 7798) granting an increase of pension to Eugene Lenhart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEEDHAM: A bill (H. R. 7799) for the relief of Peter Van Valer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7800) for the relief of John Wesley Young; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7801) for the relief of the estate of Vicente Gomez, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 7802) granting an increase of pension to John S. Lander; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 7803) granting an increase of pension to Peter K. Arnold; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7804) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Witmer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7805) granting an increase of pension to Henry Wetzel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7806) granting an increase of pension to Amos C. Wertz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7807) granting an increase of pension to John A. Walter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7808) granting an increase of pension to John Trout; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7809) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Stout; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill H. R. 7810) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ann E. Sperry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7811) granting an increase of pension to David Sornberger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7812) granting an increase of pension to Arnold B. Spink; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7813) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7814) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7815) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Sipe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7816) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Sheets; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7817) granting an increase of pension to James L. Seebold; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7818) granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Reuter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7819) granting an increase of pension to Eliphas W. Reed; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7820) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Ramsey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7821) granting an increase of pension to William Presley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7822) granting an increase of pension to John Person; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7823) granting an increase of pension to George W. Parthemore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7824) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Morrisey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7825) granting an increase of pension to David H. Mumma; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7826) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca M. Missemer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7827) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Franklin Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7828) granting an increase of pension to Philip M. Messner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7829) granting an increase of pension to Sarah C. Meredith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7830) granting an increase of pension to John R. Meredith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7831) granting an increase of pension to Maria A. Meily; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7832) granting an increase of pension to James F. Maben; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7833) granting an increase of pension to Milton T. Maguire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7834) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Layser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7835) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Kimmel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7836) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Jordan; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7837) granting an increase of pension to William F. Hummelbaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7838) granting an increase of pension to John H. Houtz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7839) granting an increase of pension to Samuel D. Hess; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7840) granting an increase of pension to William Hampton, sr.; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7841) granting an increase of pension to Martha Groner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7842) granting an increase of pension to Frank C. Gratz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7843) granting an increase of pension to Fannie Huntt Gibson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7844) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Garland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7845) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Eisenhauer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7846) granting an increase of pension to Joanna R. Forster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7847) granting an increase of pension to Henry Breslin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7848) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette Billig; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7849) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Benner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7850) granting an increase of pension to William Bodley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7851) granting an increase of pension to John H. Adams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7852) granting a pension to Caroline S. Mindil; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7853) granting a pension to Rebecca Zimmerman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7854) granting a pension to Isaac E. Walker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7855) granting a pension to Annetta Vale; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7856) granting a pension to William H. Swoveland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7857) granting a pension to Charles E. Stock; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7858) granting a pension to Richard M. Steckley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7859) granting a pension to Harriet Stees; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7860) granting a pension to John S. Snyder; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7861) granting a pension to Elizabeth Snyder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7862) granting a pension to Mary M. Shambaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7863) granting a pension to Martin P. Schaffner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7864) granting a pension to Charles C. Rumpf; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7865) granting a pension to Silas W. Rank; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7866) granting a pension to Stephen W. Pomeroy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7867) granting a pension to Catherine B. Pelley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7868) granting a pension to Margaret Montgomery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7869) granting a pension to Martha J. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7870) granting a pension to Henry S. Matter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7871) granting a pension to George W. Lehman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7872) granting a pension to Emma E. Kipple; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7873) granting a pension to Katherine E. Kemble; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7874) granting a pension to Kate E. Keiser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7875) granting a pension to Mary Idle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7876) granting a pension to Eliza Hartman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7877) granting a pension to Emma Handshaw; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7878) granting a pension to John P. M. Haas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7879) granting a pension to John W. Gray; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7880) granting a pension to Lucetta C. Graffius; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7881) granting a pension to Pricilla C. Givler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7882) granting a pension to George W. Emery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7883) granting a pension to John W. Ely; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7884) granting a pension to John D. Deihl; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7885) granting a pension to Sarah Culp; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7886) granting a pension to J. Caroline FitzGerald; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7887) granting a pension to Catherine B. Fisher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7888) granting a pension to Charles William Bowman; to the Commitee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7889) granting a pension to Jacob Ambrose; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7890) granting a pension to Grace Backenstoss; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7891) granting a pension to Mrs. George Armour; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7892) for the relief of J. H. Mease, postmaster at Mount Gretna, Pa.; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7893) for the relief of John C. Colwell; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7894) for the relief of James E. Cann, paymaster, United States Navy; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7895) to correct the military record of Joseph Spangler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7896) to correct the military record of David Polm; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7897) to correct the military record of Charles Moore; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7898) to correct the military record of Phillip K. Meloy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7899) to corrct the military record of Alexander C. Landis; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7900) to correct the military record of William Irving; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7901) to correct the military record of John F. Geist; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7902) to correct the military record of Lieut. John W. Geiger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7903) to correct the military record of Philip D. Beidel; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7904) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Francis Tomlinson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7905) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Snyder; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7906) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Levi Sheetz; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7907) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Reuben Seiler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7908) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas Morgan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7909) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Keys; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7910) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John F. Kelly; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7911) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Frederick; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7912) for the removal of the charge of desertion standing against the name of John Brininger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7913) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John P. Leitzel; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7914) authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Lieut. Samuel Lindsey Graham, now on the retired list, to be commander on the retired list; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7915) to authorize the appointment of Alexander D. B. Smead as a captain of cavalry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7916) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph Windowmaker; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 7917) granting an increase of pension to Mary T. Larkin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PLUMLEY: A bill (H. R. 7918) granting an increase of pension to Frederick A. Fish; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7919) granting an increase of pension to John F. Abbott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7920) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Shepard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7921) granting an increase of pension to Oscar L. Pike; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7922) granting an increase of pension to David Bolles; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7923) granting an increase of pension to Wayland A. Strong; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7924) granting an increase of pension to Caleb P. Nash; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7925) granting an increase of pension to Charles Carr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7926) granting a pension to Alfred E. Ames; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7927) granting a pension to Carl H. Ellis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POU: A bill (H. R. 7928) for the relief of Fannie E. Gardner; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7929) for the erection of a statue in memory of President Andrew Johnson; to the Committee on the Library.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7930) for the relief of heirs of Wiley Holt, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PRINCE: A bill (H. R. 7931) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Duncan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7932) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Hannon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 7933) granting a pension to Catherine T. Butler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 7934) granting a pension to Charles Baumann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7935) granting an increase of pension to Walter L. Todd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7936) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Quinn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS: A bill (H. R. 7937) granting an increase of pension to Silas Dewey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE: A bill (H. R. 7938) granting an increase of pension to Joseph N. Burch; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 7939) for the relief of the heirs of John A. Turner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THISTLEWOOD: A bill (H. R. 7940) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Fish; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TURNBULL: A bill (H. R. 7941) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases herein enumerated; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WEDEMEYER: A bill (H. R. 7942) granting a pension to Rosalia A. Butts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS: A bill (H. R. 7943) granting an increase of pension to John M. Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 7944) granting an increase of pension to John H. Cox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7945) granting an increase of pension to John W. French; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7946) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Wakely; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7947) granting an increase of pension to Lyman Toombs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7948) granting an increase of pension to George Marker; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7949) granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Morris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7950) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Leonhardt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7951) granting an increase of pension to George F. Baxter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7952) granting a pension to Charlotte L. Kizer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7953) granting a pension to Amanda Neufer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 7954) for the relief of Jacob M. Cooper; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7955) for the relief of John T. Watson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FOSTER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 7956) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Brice Prater; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7957) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Jubal Grant and to grant him an honorable discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: Resolutions of Stereotypers' Union No. 5, of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring Canadian reciprocity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of the New England Shoe & Leather Association, against putting leather, boots, and shoes on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORNES: Petition of Carolina Bagging Co., against jute being admitted free on farmers' free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of New England Shoe & Leather Co., protesting against placing leather, boots, and shoes on free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER: Papers to accompany a bill for the relief of John H. Kohr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the New England Shoe & Leather Association, opposing the placing of leather, boots, and shoes on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts: Resolutions of Central Council, Irish County Clubs, of Boston, Mass., against any arbitration treaty with Great Britain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Cape Ann Branch, The Granite Cutters' International Association of America, of Rockport, Mass., favoring a repeal of the 10-cent tax on oleomargarine; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of New England Shoe Wholesalers' Association, favoring nonpartisan tariff board or commission; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HANNA: Petitions of citizens of North Dakota, favoring the Hanna bill providing for additional compensation to the rural free-delivery carriers; J. B. Sessions, Fargo, N. Dak., against parcels post; and citizens of Brooklyn Township, Williams County, N. Dak., favoring parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of numerous citizens of North Dakota, against Canadian reciprocity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KENDALL: Petition of citizens of Richland and Keota, Iowa, against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of Thomas J. Goodman, of Providence, and numerous other citizens of Rhode Island, favoring the department of health; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

By Mr. PLUMLEY: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Caleb P. Nash, Wayland A. Strong, David Bolles, Fredrick A. Fish, John F. Abbott, Charles E. Shepard, Carl H. Ellis, Oscar L. Pike, Alfred E. Ames, and Charles Carr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRAY: Petition of citizens of Waldheim, Mont., in favor of parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of City Council of Helena, Mont., and F. J. Edwards, mayor, and J. A. Mattson, city clerk, for abrogation of treaty with Russia of 1832; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Typographical Union No. 255, Anaconda, Mont., for reduction of duty on oleomargarine; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts: Petitions of Carolina Bagging Co., against admitting jute into this country free; New England Shoe and Leather Association, protesting against placing leather, boots, and shoes on the free list; and New England Shoe Wholesalers' Association, Boston, Mass., favoring a permanent, independent tariff commission or board; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: Petitions of the Spaulding Chapter of the American Woman's League, Compton, Cal., numbering 63, favoring a speedy hearing of the Bartholdt indemnity bill; American Woman's League of Huntington Park, Long Branch, Los Angeles, and San Bernardino, and Los Angeles Chapter, Los Angeles, all in the State of California, in favor of the Bartholdt indemnity bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TUTTLE: Resolutions of Sterling Camp, No. 11, Patriotic Order Sons of America, urging passage of illiteracy test; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: Petition of citizens of the Northwest against Canadian reciprocity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WOOD of New Jersey: Petition of W. J. McLaughlin and F. O. Lozier, of Trenton, N. J., urging the repeal of the duty on lemons; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2983. An act for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Thirteenth Census.

H. J. Res. 1. Joint resolution to correct errors in the enrollment of certain appropriation acts approved March 4, 1911;

H. J. Res. 2. Joint resolution making appropriations for the payment of certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress;

H. J. Res. 3. Joint resolution making immediately available the appropriations for mileage of Senators and of Members of the House of Representatives; and

H. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to grant authority to the American Red Cross to erect temporary structures in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the president of the Woman's Home Missionary Auxiliary of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Bristol, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict the sale and traffic in opium, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of Minisink Grange, No. 907, Patrons of Husbandry, of Unionville, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Des Moines and Polk County, in the State of Iowa, praying that Italian lemons be placed on the free list, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Lyon Township Agricultural Club, of Inwood, Iowa, praying for the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented memorials of sundry citizens of Waterbury, Naugatuck, New Britain, Union City, and Torrington, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WATSON. I present a petition signed by a large number of woolgrowers of Marshall County, W. Va., relative to the tariff on wool. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names, as follows:

Hon. C. W. WATSON,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned woolgrowers of Marshall County, W. Va., petition you, as our Representative in Congress from the State of West Virginia, to do all in your power to retain the present tariff rate of 11 cents on wool, for the following reasons:

That on our hills and mountains we can not grow grain, cattle, and hogs to compete with the farmers of the Western States, which leaves us practically with the sheep and woolgrowing as the principal farming industry.

That we have got to feed our sheep grain and hay six months in the year, which figured at the present market prices makes our quality of wool cost us about 33 cents per pound, which is more than we can realize for our wool at the present time; and only once in the past five years have we been able to market our wool for this figure, that being in the year 1909. So to reduce the present tariff as we view it would reduce the price of our wool to the amount of tariff reduction, which would drive us out of the woolgrowing business—the only farming industry left for this section.

To substantiate our claim of cost of woolgrowing in this section, we herewith reproduce the figures of the Tristate Woolgrowers' Association, held at Wheeling on February 23, 1911, which are as follows:

Interest on investment of 100 ewes, at $4.50 per head	$27.00
Taxes, $1; annual loss, 3 per cent, $13.50	14.50
Depreciation	45.00
Labor	62.00
Grain	85.00
Roughage, $1.50 per head	150.00
Pasture ewes and lambs	85.00
Ram service	20.00
Shearing and marketing	15.00
	503.50
Estimated to raise 80 lambs, at $3 per head	240.00
Estimating the largest possible average per head of 8 pounds (800)	263.50
Net cost per pound to produce	.33

In view of these facts and figures, we earnestly solicit your support and influence in our behalf and assure you in advance that we will appreciate very highly anything you can do for us now or at any future time when Congress is considering the tariff schedule on wool.

Mr. BRIGGS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of New Jersey, praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Hoboken; Washington Camp, No. 188, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Cedarville; of Dr. J. H. Rosenkrans, of Hoboken; of Otto Fuchs, of Hoboken; and of sundry citizens of Readington, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented memorials of Lacktown Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Flemington, and Rancocas Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Mount Holly, in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called cold-storage bill, which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a petition of William J. Sewell Camp, United Spanish War Veterans, of Elizabeth, N. J., praying that pensions be granted to the widows and children of the veterans of the Spanish War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of Burlington County Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Columbus, N. J., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted at a joint meeting of the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, International Brotherhood of Pulp Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, and of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, held at Ticonderoga, N. Y.; also resolutions adopted at a meeting of Local Union No. 25, Ancient Order of Hibernians, held at Ballston Spa, N. Y., and the memorial of Patrick J. McCarthy, district secretary treasurer, Order of Knights of Labor, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Federation of Churches and Christian Workers in the State of Rhode Island, praying for the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Federation of Churches and Christian Workers in the State of Rhode Island, praying for the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of the Presbytery of the State of Vermont, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of race gambling bets, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McCUMBER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Fort Ransom, Westfield, Griggs County, Monango, Cando, Milnor, Velva, Granville, Voltaire, Bottineau County, and of Orr, all in the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CURTIS presented memorials of Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Osage City; of Local Union No. 21, Brotherhood of Railway Conductors of America, of Pittsburg; of Local Union No. 483, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Jennings; and of Local Union No. 308, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Reading, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Woodston and Stockton, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called cold-storage bill, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. DU PONT presented a petition of Washington Camp, No. 17, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented a petition of the Fortnightly Club, of Oconomowoc, Wis., praying for the repeal of the present oleomargarine law, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Pine Valley Butter Co., of Neillsville, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called cold-storage bill, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present the memorial of Mr. Wharton Barker, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of certain financial legislation. I move that the memorial be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 1697) granting 2 acres of land to school district No. 44, Chelan County, Wash.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 1698) to correct the military record of Thomas Miller; and

A bill (S. 1699) to correct the military record of John C. Barrett; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1700) granting an increase of pension to Peter Schaddle;

A bill (S. 1701) granting an increase of pension to Henry Yost;

A bill (S. 1702) granting an increase of pension to William Bessinger; and

A bill (S. 1703) granting a pension to Amelia Harmon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 1704) for the relief of Percy Harrison Moore; and

A bill (S. 1705) to authorize the construction of a municipal asphalt plant in the District of Columbia (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BROWN:
A bill (S. 1706) granting an increase of pension to Byron Bathrick (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 1707) granting an increase of pension to Jerome Schamp (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 1708) granting a pension to Sarah C. Mansfield; and
A bill (S. 1709) granting an increase of pension to A. B. Mitchell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DU PONT:
A bill (S. 1710) to organize a Service Corps in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:
A bill (S. 1711) to authorize the acquisition of lands by the Reclamation Service by exchange, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I am not misinformed, it is to provide for the surrender of title to lands by the United States in exchange, and I think it ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. For the information of the Senator from Idaho I should like to state that the bill is an exact copy of a bill which was before the Irrigation Committee in the last Congress and was reported on favorably and passed by the Senate. It went to the House in the last days of the session. Its object is to enable the Reclamation Service to exchange private holdings of proposed reclamation projects for lands outside of the reservation.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not include State lands?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I have no objection to the reference proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reference will be as before indicated.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:
A bill (S. 1712) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Oregon City, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BURTON:
A bill (S. 1713) to admit to the mails as second-class matter periodical publications issued by and under the auspices of benevolent and fraternal societies and trades-unions; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. STEPHENSON:
A bill (S. 1714) granting an increase of pension to Reuben F. King (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 1715) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weissmiller (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 1716) granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. Tolfree (with accompanying papers); and
A bill (S. 1717) granting a pension to Anna Rosche; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:
A bill (S. 1718) for the relief of Clara D. Miller;
A bill (S. 1719) for the relief of Lucy L. Bane; and
A bill (S. 1720) for the relief of Scott P. Stewart and Andrew J. Stewart, jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCUMBER:
A bill (S. 1721) granting a pension to Phillippina Healy (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1722) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Jenner (with accompanying paper); and
A bill (S. 1723) granting an increase of pension to Alma J. Parkin (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS:
A bill (S. 1724) to amend section 14 of "An act to promote the administration of justice in the Navy," approved February 16, 1909, and to provide for the destruction of records of deck courts in United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WORKS:
A bill (S. 1725) granting an increase of pension to William E. Ross (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 1726) granting an increase of pension to William Patterson (with accompanying papers); and
A bill (S. 1727) granting an increase of pension to John H. Fairbanks (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:
A bill (S. 1728) granting an increase of pension to Martin Ouderkirk; and
A bill (S. 1729) granting a pension to Sarah A. Crawford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:
A bill (S. 1730) to increase the compensation of pressmen in the Government Printing Office; to the Committee on Printing.
A bill (S. 1731) for the relief of the Methodist Protestant Church;
A bill (S. 1732) for the relief of the estate of Ella P. Williams;
A bill (S. 1733) for the relief of C. A. Sprinkel;
A bill (S. 1734) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Lee, deceased;
A bill (S. 1735) for the relief of Emma C. Franner, George W. Seaton, Hiram K. Seaton, Howard Seaton, Mary Seaton, Blanche Seaton, George W. Taylor, Edward Taylor, and Catharine Pomeroy;
A bill (S. 1736) for the relief of the estate of Peter Sheets, deceased;
A bill (S. 1737) for the relief of the heirs of John Wescott;
A bill (S. 1738) for the relief of the estate of Maurice T. Smith;
A bill (S. 1739) for the relief of the estate of William Benton, deceased;
A bill (S. 1740) for the relief of the heirs of John D. Rawlings, deceased;
A bill (S. 1741) for the relief of the estate of Richard Wiseman, deceased;
A bill (S. 1742) for the relief of James W. Nickens;
A bill (S. 1743) for the relief of Mason Shipman;
A bill (S. 1744) for the relief of the heirs of Amanda M. James, deceased;
A bill (S. 1745) for the relief of the estate of John Ivy, deceased;
A bill (S. 1746) for the relief of the estate of Mary G. Temple, deceased;
A bill (S. 1747) for the relief of the estate of William J. Conner, deceased;
A bill (S. 1748) for the relief of the estate of Murray Mason, deceased;
A bill (S. 1749) for the relief of the estate of John Anderson, deceased; and
A bill (S. 1750) for the relief of Mary Eliza Woodhouse; to the Committee on Claims.
A bill (S. 1751) for the relief of John F. Wingfield; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. SMOOT:
A bill (S. 1752) to provide for the erection of a public building at Eureka, Utah; and
A bill (S. 1753) to provide for the erection of a public building at Vernal, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BRADLEY:
A bill (S. 1754) to correct the military record of William F. McKim; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
A bill (S. 1755) for the relief of the heirs or estates of William McClure and Margaret McClure, deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.
A bill (S. 1756) granting an increase of pension to Richard Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON:
A bill (S. 1757) granting an increase of pension to Charles Way (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1758) granting an increase of pension to Fieldon S. Snodgrass;
A bill (S. 1759) granting an increase of pension to Edgar W. Lauck;
A bill (S. 1760) granting an increase of pension to J. S. Hall;
A bill (S. 1761) granting an increase of pension to James McConnell;
A bill (S. 1762) to pension Army teamsters;
A bill (S. 1763) granting an increase of pension to Ellwood A. Collins;
A bill (S. 1764) granting an increase of pension to Samuel N. Black;
A bill (S. 1765) granting an increase of pension to James Barr; and
A bill (S. 1766) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Camp; to the Committee on Pensions.
A bill (S. 1767) for the relief of Oakley Randall; and
A bill (S. 1768) for the relief of the heirs of Abraham Parsons, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.
A bill (S. 1769) to amend the military record of Asa S. Hugill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:
A bill (S. 1770) for the relief of certain purchasers of lots in the Fort Crawford military tract at Prairie du Chien, State of Wisconsin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1771) providing for the valuation of the segregated coal and asphalt lands and the surplus lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and of the surplus lands in the Creek Nation, in the State of Oklahoma, and for the sale of the surface and the disposition of the mineral rights therein; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 1772) to amend section 839 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROOT:

A bill (S. 1773) to create a Commission on National Historical Publications; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 1774) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to erect a suitable monument over the remains of Rear Admiral Charles Wilkes, United States Navy, in the national cemetery at Arlington, Va.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 1775) granting an increase of pension to Soll P. Merrill (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 1776) granting a pension to Ella M. Mosher (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 1777) granting an increase of pension to Albert Whitehead (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1778) granting a pension to Adeline Conway (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1779) granting a pension to James Lewis (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1780) granting an increase of pension to W. K. Best (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1781) granting a pension to Lucinda P. Fayette (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1782) granting a pension to Maria C. Haney; and

A bill (S. 1783) granting a pension to Jane Simpson; to the Committee on Pensions.

DRAINAGE SURVEY OF LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer a resolution for reading and reference to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution (S. Res. 26) was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That 500 copies of House Document No. 27, Sixty-first Congress, first session, entitled "Drainage Survey of Certain Lands in Minnesota," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT CLERK.

Mr. ROOT. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 27) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Industrial Expositions be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution (S. Res. 25) coming over from a former day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. GALLINGER, as follows:

Resolved, That the following shall constitute the standing committees of the Senate of the Sixty-second Congress, effective May 1, 1911:

On Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.—Messrs. Bailey (chairman), Stone, Cullom, Nelson, and Poindexter.

On Agriculture and Forestry.—Messrs. Burnham (chairman), Warren, Perkins, Guggenheim, Page, Crawford, Bradley, Lorimer, Gronna, Bankhead, Gore, Chamberlain, Smith of South Carolina, Percy, Terrell, and Lea.

On Appropriations.—Messrs. Warren (chairman), Perkins, Gallinger, Curtis, Gamble, Smoot, Nixon, Dixon, Bourne, Wetmore, Tillman, Foster, Culberson, Martin of Virginia, Overman, Owen, and Smith of Maryland.

To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.—Messrs. Briggs (chairman), Dillingham, Bristow, Clarke of Arkansas, and Williams.

On Canadian Relations.—Messrs. Oliver (chairman), Cummins, Burton, Root, McLean, Tillman, Foster, Gore, and Smith of Maryland.

On the Census.—Messrs. La Follette (chairman), Guggenheim, Cummins, du Pont, McLean, Townsend, Lippitt, Bailey, Shively, Thornton, Chilton, and Pomerene.

On Civil Service and Retrenchment.—Messrs. Cummins (chairman), La Follette, Lodge, Smoot, Borah, Dixon, Gallinger, Clarke of Arkansas, Rayner, Owen, Johnston of Alabama, and Myers.

On Claims.—Messrs. Crawford (chairman), Smoot, Bristow, Oliver, Bradley, Page, Jones, McLean, Townsend, Martin of Virginia, Overman, Davis, Paynter, Bryan, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Coast and Insular Survey.—Messrs. Townsend (chairman), Richardson, Frye, Cullom, Works, Culberson, Davis, Bankhead, and Terrell.

On Coast Defenses.—Messrs. Curtis (chairman), Nixon, du Pont, Crane, Root, Works, Simmons, Foster, Smith of Maryland, Terrell, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Commerce.—Messrs. Frye (chairman), Nelson, Perkins, Smith of Michigan, Bourne, Burton, Burnham, Stephenson, Crawford, Oliver, Martin of Virginia, Simmons, Newlands, Bankhead, Fletcher, Percy, and Reed.

On Conservation of National Resources.—Messrs. Dixon (chairman), Clark of Wyoming, Dillingham, Briggs, Guggenheim, Jones, Richardson, Gronna, Townsend, Newlands, Overman, Bankhead, Smith of South Carolina, Watson, and Lea.

On Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.—Messrs. Newlands (chairman), Shively, Brown, La Follette, and Lippitt.

On Cuban Relations.—Messrs. Page (chairman), Burnham, Clapp, Curtis, Crane, Kenyon, Simmons, Stone, Watson, and O'Gorman.

On Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.—Messrs. Clarke of Arkansas (chairman), Kern, and Burnham.

On the District of Columbia.—Messrs. Gallinger (chairman), Dillingham, Curtis, Jones, Oliver, Lorimer, Works, Kenyon, Martin of Virginia, Paynter, Johnston of Alabama, Smith of Maryland, Pomerene, and Lea.

On Education and Labor.—Messrs. Borah (chairman), Penrose, du Pont, Page, McLean, Kenyon, Rayner, Bankhead, Shively, Swanson, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Engrossed Bills.—Messrs. Simmons (chairman), Lodge, and Burton.

On Enrolled Bills.—Messrs. Stephenson (chairman), Gronna, and Foster.

To Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.—Messrs. Paynter (chairman), Culberson, Simmons, Richardson, Crawford, Perkins, and Townsend.

On Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.—Messrs. Lippitt (chairman), Stephenson, Gronna, Simmons, and Gore.

On Expenditures in the Interior Department.—Messrs. Poindexter (chairman), McCumber, Frye, Davis, and Chamberlain.

On Expenditures in the Department of Justice.—Messrs. Bradley (chairman), Burnham, Borah, Bailey, and Rayner.

On Expenditures in the Navy Department.—Messrs. Gronna (chairman), Dillingham, Bradley, Martin of Virginia, and Tillman.

On Expenditures in the Post Office Department.—Messrs. Bristow (chairman), Smith of Michigan, Penrose, Bacon, and Chilton.

On Expenditures in the Department of State.—Messrs. Kenyon (chairman), Warren, La Follette, Stone, and Percy.

On Expenditures in the Treasury Department.—Messrs. Burton (chairman), Briggs, Works, Smith of Maryland, and Lea.

On Expenditures in the War Department.—Messrs. Works (chairman), du Pont, Cullom, Foster, and Johnson of Maine.

On Finance.—Messrs. Penrose (chairman), Cullom, Lodge, McCumber, Smoot, Gallinger, Clark of Wyoming, Heyburn, La Follette, Bailey, Simmons, Stone, Williams, Kern, and Johnson of Maine.

On Fisheries.—Messrs. Jones (chairman), Bourne, Perkins, Briggs, Curtis, Bailey, Overman, Fletcher, and Thornton.

On the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.—Messrs. Tillman (chairman), Fletcher, Clapp, Nixon, and Smith of Michigan.

On Foreign Relations.—Messrs. Cullom (chairman), Frye, Lodge, Smith of Michigan, Root, McCumber, Sutherland, Borah, Burton, Bacon, Stone, Shively, Clarke of Arkansas, Rayner, and Hitchcock.

On Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.—Messrs. McLean (chairman), Perkins, Burnham, Lodge, Poindexter, Tillman, Overman, Taylor, and Hitchcock.

On the Geological Survey.—Messrs. Taylor (chairman), Rayner, Smith of South Carolina, Briggs, Wetmore, Page, and Kenyon.

On Immigration.—Messrs. Lodge (chairman), Dillingham, Penrose, Brown, Richardson, Burton, Gronna, Davis, Gore, Smith of South Carolina, Percy, Kern, and O'Gorman.

On Indian Affairs.—Messrs. Gamble (chairman), Clapp, McCumber, Sutherland, La Follette, Curtis, Brown, Dixon, Page, Stone, Davis, Owen, Chamberlain, Watson, and Myers.

On Indian Depredations.—Messrs. Rayner (chairman), Davis, Johnston of Alabama, Owen, Percy, Curtis, Dixon, Stephenson, Crawford, Brandegee, and Lippitt.

On Industrial Expositions.—Messrs. Root (chairman), Jones, Crane, Stephenson, Oliver, Gronna, Works, Rayner, Overman, Taylor, Paynter, Swanson, and Newlands.

On Interoceanic Canals.—Messrs. Brandegee (chairman), Borah, Crawford, Bristow, Perkins, Page, Jones, Townsend, Simmons, Johnston of Alabama, Percy, Thornton, Chilton, and O'Gorman.

On Interstate Commerce.—Messrs. Clapp (chairman), Cullom, Crane, Nixon, Cummins, Brandegee, Oliver, Lippitt, Townsend, Tillman, Foster, Newlands, Clarke of Arkansas, Gore, Watson, and Pomerene.

To Investigate Trespassers upon Indian Lands.—Messrs. Smith of Maryland (chairman), Bryan, Bradley, Richardson, and Poindexter.

On Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.—Messrs. Nixon (chairman), Warren, Sutherland, Borah, Jones, Brandegee, Works, Bailey, Newlands, Gore, Smith of Maryland, Chamberlain, and Myers.

Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States.—Messrs. Heyburn (chairman), Sutherland, Clarke of Arkansas, and Percy.

On the Judiciary.—Messrs. Clark of Wyoming (chairman), Nelson, Dillingham, Sutherland, Brandegee, Borah, Brown, Cummins, Root, Bacon, Culberson, Overman, Rayner, Paynter, Chilton, and O'Gorman.

On the Library.—Messrs. Wetmore (chairman), Briggs, Cummins, Root, Burton, Newlands, Shively, and Swanson.

On Manufactures.—Messrs. Heyburn (chairman), Oliver, Lorimer, La Follette, Cummins, McLean, Smith of South Carolina, Terrell, Reed, Pomerene, and O'Gorman.

On Military Affairs.—Messrs. du Pont (chairman), Warren, Dixon, Briggs, Brown, Guggenheim, Bristow, Jones, Lorimer, Foster, Johnston of Alabama, Clarke of Arkansas, Taylor, Chamberlain, Hitchcock, and Williams.

On Mines and Mining.—Messrs. Lorimer (chairman), Heyburn, Nixon, Sutherland, Guggenheim, Poindexter, Tillman, Johnston of Alabama, Watson, and Myers.

On the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.—Messrs. Davis (chairman), Owen, Thornton, Brown, Burton, Stephenson, and Wetmore.

On Naval Affairs.—Messrs. Perkins (chairman), Penrose, Wetmore, Clapp, Lodge, Smith of Michigan, Page, Poindexter, Tillman, Smith of Maryland, Thornton, Swanson, Bryan, and Johnson of Maine.

On Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.—Messrs. Richardson (chairman), Clapp, Lorimer, Nelson, Burnham, Brandegee, Poindexter, Clarke of Arkansas, Owen, Fletcher, Watson, and Kern.

On Pacific Railroads.—Messrs. Owen (chairman), Chamberlain, Shively, Reed, Frye, Smith of Michigan, Stephenson, McCumber, and Brown.

On Patents.—Messrs. Brown (chairman), Brandegee, Kenyon, Works, Shively, Smith of South Carolina, and Gore.

On Pensions.—Messrs. McCumber (chairman), Burnham, Smoot, Curtis, du Pont, Brown, Bradley, Poindexter, Taylor, Gore, Shively, Bryan, Johnson of Maine, and Pomerene.

On the Philippines.—Messrs. Guggenheim (chairman), Lodge, Nixon, Heyburn, Bristow, Crawford, McLean, Lippitt, Johnston of Alabama, Paynter, Chamberlain, Fletcher, Hitchcock, and Reed.

On Post Offices and Post Roads.—Messrs. Bourne (chairman), Penrose, Crane, Guggenheim, Briggs, Richardson, Bradley, Bristow, Lorimer, Bankhead, Taylor, Terrell, Smith of South Carolina, Swanson, Bryan, and Martine of New Jersey.

On Printing.—Messrs. Smoot (chairman), Gallinger, Richardson, Page, Kenyon, Smith of Maryland, Fletcher, and Chilton.

On Private Land Claims.—Messrs. Bacon (chairman), Davis, Thornton, Smith of Michigan, Oliver, Lorimer, and Gronna.

On Privileges and Elections.—Messrs. Dillingham (chairman), Gamble, Heyburn, Clapp, Sutherland, Bradley, Jones, Oliver, Kenyon, Bailey, Paynter, Johnston of Alabama, Fletcher, Kern, and Lea.

On Public Buildings and Grounds.—Messrs. Sutherland (chairman), Warren, Heyburn, Wetmore, Gamble, du Pont, Stephenson, Bourne, Poindexter, Culberson, Taylor, Swanson, Owen, Watson, Martine of New Jersey, and Reed.

On Public Health and National Quarantine.—Messrs. Culberson (chairman), Fletcher, Thornton, Owen, Williams, Smoot, Crawford, Crane, Gronna, Lippitt, and Works.

On Public Lands.—Messrs. Nelson (chairman), Clark of Wyoming, Gamble, Smoot, Heyburn, Dixon, Jones, Guggenheim, Works, Newlands, Davis, Chamberlain, Thornton, Bryan, and Myers.

On Railroads.—Messrs. Gore (chairman), Bacon, Taylor, Watson, Reed, Clark of Wyoming, Nelson, Bourne, Bristow, Penrose, and McCumber.

On Revolutionary Claims.—Messrs. Stone (chairman), Chilton, Bradley, Root, and Borah.

On Rules.—Messrs. Crane (chairman), Warren, Gallinger, Nelson, Cummins, Bacon, Bailey, and Overman.

On Standards, Weights, and Measures.—Messrs Bankhead (chairman), Bacon, Borah, Clapp, and Gamble.

On Territories.—Messrs. Smith of Michigan (chairman), Nelson, Burnham, Brown, Bristow, McLean, Lippitt, Owen, Chamberlain, Shively, Johnson of Maine, and Hitchcock.

On Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.—Messrs. Smith of South Carolina (chairman), Rayner, Gore, Bankhead, Clark of Wyoming, McCumber, Brandegee, Bourne, and Burton.

On Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.—Messrs. Foster (chairman), Watson, Clark of Wyoming, Nixon, and Townsend.

On the University of the United States.—Messrs. Johnston of Alabama (chairman), Foster, Overman, Terrell, Williams, Frye, Dillingham, Curtis, Wetmore, Dixon, and Cummins.

On Woman Suffrage.—Messrs. Overman (chairman), Johnston of Alabama, Wetmore, du Pont, and Bourne.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, speaking for 13 Republican Members of the Senate, I submit on their behalf the following statement:

For several years marked differences have been developing within the Republican Party in many States. These differences have been along clearly defined lines of legislative action designed to meet the demands resulting from changed economic conditions affecting the industrial life of the Nation.

The statutes so enacted have become generally known as progressive statutes, and that element of the Republican Party which has secured the enactment of such legislation has become generally known as the progressive element of the Republican Party.

In the logic of events it was inevitable that the rapidly growing progressive sentiment of the progressive States should find expression in the Senate of the United States, and for several years the proceedings of the Senate have from day to day recorded marked and well-defined differences in the Republican membership of this body.

Out of the total Republican vote of the Senate more than one-fourth is to-day emphatically progressive Republican. This is a settled and established fact in political history. The country knows it. The Senate can not ignore it.

The differences which create division in the Republican Party are not upon matters of party policy, but relate to the most important subjects of legislation and the gravest problems which confront the American people. These differences represent not merely conflicting personal opinions of individual Senators. They represent fundamental differences in convictions involving the welfare of 90,000,000 people. If the progressive Republican Senators should fail to represent the progressive public opinion of their States, they would be swept aside and their places filled with men who would faithfully represent that public opinion. If they failed to protest against the denial of representation upon the most important committees in the Senate, they would be remiss in their public duties.

Their protest is not made to advance the personal ambition of any Senator. It is made because we who make it can not permit to pass unchallenged a resolution denying to millions of people their right to be fairly represented upon the committees which frame the most important legislation passed by the United States Senate.

Under the organization of the Senate the committees have a potential influence in shaping legislation. All bills first go to a committee before being considered. The committee has power to amend any bill in any way, or substitute another bill for it, or refuse to report the bill back to the Senate for consideration. In that event it dies, never having reached the calendar of the Senate.

Having this great power and influence over legislation, it is of the highest importance that the committees should represent in their membership as nearly as possible the controlling economic and political opinion of the people of the several States. In the framing of the Committees on Finance and Interstate Commerce this policy has not been followed. Legislation most vital to the welfare of the American people as a whole comes before the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The committee practically controls legislation affecting transportation, trusts and combinations, overcapitalization, and almost every phase of the great industrial controversies that are agitating the country. We believe that the membership of that committee, as proposed in the resolution, would place the control of legislation in the hands of those opposed to a thoroughgoing regulation of railway rates and services.

First we call attention to the geographical location of members. The four new members are Mr. BRANDEGEE, of Connecticut; Mr. OLIVER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. TOWNSEND, of Michigan; and Mr. LIPPITT, of Rhode Island. The present membership consists of Mr. CLAPP, of Minnesota; Mr. CULLOM, of Illinois; Mr. CRANE, of Massachusetts; Mr. NIXON, of Nevada; and Mr. CUMMINS, of Iowa. It will be observed that of the nine Republican members, three, or one-third, are located in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, States of comparatively insignificant railway mileage, while the other six members are scattered over the vast territory west of the Hudson River, where the problems that grow out of interstate commerce are of such vital consequence to the people. A glance at the map will show the absurdity of this geographical distribution. The division existing in the membership of the committee is well known, and from our standpoint the four new members added can not be reckoned as advocates of strong and effectual regulation of transportation companies, trusts, combinations, and monopolies. We hereby most earnestly protest against this action on the part of the majority of the committee on committees.

We also protest against the proposed organization of the Committee on Finance. The progressive Republicans have more than 25 per cent of the Republican membership of the Senate. This increased progressive membership is the result of the direct expression of the will of the people of the various States. Senators representing these States have a right to the one-fourth of the Republican membership of this important committee. That representation has been denied them by a majority of the committee. We believe this is a violation of the very fundamental principles of representative government and is indefensible from every standpoint of justice and equity. The progressive Republicans have the right to ask that they shall be given two of the nine Republican members of the Committee on Finance. To do less is to deliberately place in the hands of the ultrahigh-tariff Republicans the absolute control of revenue legislation during the Congress.

Mr. President, we have no desire to delay the organization of the committees of the Senate, and content ourselves with presenting the foregoing protest, which represents the views of the 13 progressive Republican Members of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am gratified to know that the Senator from Wisconsin, representing his associates, has no desire to postpone the organization of the Senate, and I join with him in the hope that it will be speedily organized, so that the public business may be proceeded with.

I had thought, Mr. President, of saying something in defense of the committee on committees, but I am quite content to have the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin go to the country, accompanied by the list of committees as agreed upon by a majority of the committee on committees. If we had gone into mathematics, Mr. President, the so-called progressives, in proportion to their number, would have been entitled to 100 places on the committees, and if they will examine the list they will find that they have been given 114 places. There was a difference as to the membership on two or three committees, and it was solved in a way that a majority of the committee on committees believe to be equitable and just, and we stand by it as it is reported. I wish that the report may now be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted after the list of committees as passed upon to-day a list of assignments to the individual Senators, showing precisely the committees to which each Senator has been assigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The list referred to is as follows:

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS OF SENATORS, SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

Mr. BACON	Private Land Claims, chairman.
	Expenditures in the Post Office Department.
	Foreign Relations.
	Judiciary.
	Railroads.
	Rules.
	Standards, Weights, and Measures.
Mr. BAILEY	Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, chairman.
	Census.
	Expenditures in the Department of Justice
	Finance.
	Fisheries.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Rules.
Mr. BANKHEAD	Standards, Weights, and Measures, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Commerce.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Education and Labor.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
Mr. BORAH	Education and Labor, chairman.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Expenditures in the Department of Justice.
	Foreign Relations.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Judiciary.
	Revolutionary Claims.
	Standards, Weights, and Measures.
Mr. BOURNE	Post Offices and Post Roads, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Commerce.
	Fisheries.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Railroads.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
	Woman Suffrage.
Mr. BRADLEY	Expenditures in the Department of Justice, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Claims.
	Expenditures in the Navy Department.
	Investigate Trespassers upon Indian Lands.
	Pensions.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Revolutionary Claims.
Mr. BRANDEGEE	Interoceanic Canals, chairman.
	Indian Depredations.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Judiciary.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Patents.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
Mr. BRIGGS	Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, chairman.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Expenditures in the Treasury Department.
	Fisheries.
	Geological Survey.
	Library.
	Military Affairs.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
Mr. BRISTOW	Expenditures in the Post Office Department, chairman.
	Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.
	Claims.
	Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. BRISTOW (continued)	Military Affairs.
	Philippines.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Railroads.
	Territories.
Mr. BROWN	Patents, chairman.
	Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.
	Immigration.
	Indian Affairs.
	Judiciary.
	Military Affairs.
	Mississippi River and its Tributaries.
	Pacific Railroads.
	Pensions.
	Territories.
Mr. BRYAN	Claims.
	Investigate Trespassers upon Indian Lands.
	Naval Affairs.
	Pensions.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Public Lands.
Mr. BURNHAM	Agriculture and Forestry, chairman.
	Commerce.
	Cuban Relations.
	Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.
	Expenditures in the Department of Justice.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Pensions.
	Territories.
Mr. BURTON	Expenditures in the Treasury Department, chairman.
	Canadian Relations.
	Commerce.
	Engrossed Bills.
	Foreign Relations.
	Immigration.
	Library.
	Mississippi River and its Tributaries.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Expenditures in the Interior Department.
	Indian Affairs.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Military Affairs.
	Pacific Railroads.
	Philippines.
	Public Lands.
	Territories.
Mr. CHILTON	Census.
	Expenditures in the Post Office Department.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Judiciary.
	Printing.
	Revolutionary Claims.
Mr. CLAPP	Interstate Commerce, chairman.
	Cuban Relations.
	Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.
	Indian Affairs.
	Naval Affairs.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Standards, Weights, and Measures.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming	Judiciary, chairman.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Finance.
	Public Lands.
	Railroads.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
	Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.
Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas	Disposition of Useless Papers in Executive Departments, chairman.
	Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Foreign Relations.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States.
	Military Affairs.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
Mr. CRANE	Rules, chairman.
	Coast Defenses.
	Cuban Relations.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
Mr. CRAWFORD	Claims, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Commerce.
	Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.
	Indian Depredations.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Philippines.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
Mr. CULBERSON	Public Health and National Quarantine, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.
	Judiciary.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
Mr. CULLOM	Foreign Relations, chairman.
	Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Expenditures in the War Department.
	Finance.
	Interstate Commerce.
Mr. CUMMINS	Civil Service and Retrenchment, chairman.
	Canadian Relations.
	Census.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Judiciary.
	Library.
	Manufactures.
	Rules.
	University of the United States.
Mr. CURTIS	Coast Defenses, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Cuban Relations.
	District of Columbia.
	Fisheries.
	Indian Affairs.
	Indian Depredations.
	Pensions.
	University of the United States.
Mr. DAVIS	Mississippi River and its Tributaries, chairman.
	Claims.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Expenditures in the Interior Department.
	Immigration.
	Indian Affairs.
	Indian Depredations.
	Private Land Claims.
	Public Lands.
Mr. DILLINGHAM	Privileges and Elections, chairman.
	Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	District of Columbia.
	Expenditures in the Navy Department.
	Immigration.
	Judiciary.
	University of the United States.

Mr. DIXON	Conservation of National Resources, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Indian Affairs.
	Indian Depredations.
	Military Affairs.
	Public Lands.
	University of the United States.
Mr. DU PONT	Military Affairs, chairman.
	Census.
	Coast Defenses.
	Education and Labor.
	Expenditures in the War Department.
	Pensions.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Woman Suffrage.
Mr. FLETCHER	Commerce.
	Fisheries.
	Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Philippines.
	Printing.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
Mr. FOSTER	Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Canadian Relations.
	Coast Defenses.
	Enrolled Bills.
	Expenditures in the War Department.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Military Affairs.
	University of the United States.
Mr. FRYE	Commerce, chairman.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Expenditures in the Interior Department.
	Foreign Relations.
	Pacific Railroads.
	University of the United States.
Mr. GALLINGER	District of Columbia, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Finance.
	Printing.
	Rules.
Mr. GAMBLE	Indian Affairs, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Public Lands.
	Standards, Weights, and Measures.
Mr. GORE	Railroads, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Canadian Relations.
	Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.
	Immigration.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Patents.
	Pensions.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
Mr. GRONNA	Expenditures in the Navy Department, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Enrolled Bills.
	Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.
	Immigration.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Private Land Claims.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
Mr. GUGGENHEIM	Philippines, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Census.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Military Affairs.
	Mines and Mining.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Public Lands.
Mr. HEYBURN	Manufactures, chairman.
	Finance.
	Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States, chairman.
	Mines and Mining.
	Philippines.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Public Lands.
Mr. HITCHCOCK	Foreign Relations.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Military Affairs.
	Philippines.
	Territories.
Mr. JOHNSON of Maine	Expenditures in the War Department.
	Finance.
	Naval Affairs.
	Pensions.
	Territories.
Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama	University of the United States, chairman.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	District of Columbia.
	Indian Depredations.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Military Affairs.
	Mines and Mining.
	Philippines.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Woman Suffrage.
Mr. JONES	Fisheries, chairman.
	Claims.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	District of Columbia.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Military Affairs.
	Privileges and Elections.
	Public Lands.
Mr. KENYON	Expenditures in the Department of State, chairman.
	Cuban Relations.
	District of Columbia.
	Education and Labor.
	Geological Survey.
	Patents.
	Printing.
	Privileges and Elections.
Mr. KERN	Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.
	Finance.
	Immigration.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Privileges and Elections.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE	Census, chairman.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.
	Expenditures in the Department of State.
	Finance.
	Indian Affairs.
	Manufactures.
Mr. LEA	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	District of Columbia.
	Expenditures in the Treasury Department.
	Privileges and Elections.

Mr. LIPPITT	Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, chairman.
	Census.
	Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.
	Indian Depredations.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Philippines.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
	Territories.
Mr. LODGE	Immigration, chairman.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Engrossed Bills.
	Finance.
	Foreign Relations.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Naval Affairs.
	Philippines.
Mr. LORIMER	Mines and Mining, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	District of Columbia.
	Manufactures.
	Military Affairs.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Private Land Claims.
Mr. MCCUMBER	Pensions, chairman.
	Expenditures in the Interior Department.
	Finance.
	Foreign Relations.
	Indian Affairs.
	Pacific Railroads.
	Railroads.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
Mr. MCLEAN	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, chairman.
	Canadian Relations.
	Census.
	Claims.
	Education and Labor.
	Manufactures.
	Philippines.
	Territories.
Mr. MARTIN of Virginia	Appropriations.
	Claims.
	Commerce.
	District of Columbia.
	Expenditures in the Navy Department.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey	Claims.
	Coast Defenses.
	Education and Labor.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
Mr. MYERS	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Indian Affairs.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Mines and Mining.
	Public Lands.
Mr. NELSON	Public Lands, chairman.
	Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.
	Commerce.
	Judiciary.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Railroads.
	Rules.
	Territories.
Mr. NEWLANDS	Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia, chairman.
	Commerce.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Library.
	Public Lands.
Mr. NIXON	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Coast Defenses.
	Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Mines and Mining.
	Philippines.
	Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.
Mr. O'GORMAN	Cuban Relations.
	Immigration.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Judiciary.
	Manufactures.
Mr. OLIVER	Canadian Relations, chairman.
	Claims.
	Commerce.
	District of Columbia.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Manufactures.
	Private Land Claims.
	Privileges and Elections.
Mr. OVERMAN	Woman Suffrage, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Claims.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Fisheries.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Judiciary.
	Rules.
	University of the United States.
Mr. OWEN	Pacific Railroads, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Indian Affairs.
	Indian Depredations.
	Mississippi River and its Tributaries.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
	Territories.
Mr. PAGE	Cuban Relations, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Claims.
	Education and Labor.
	Geological Survey.
	Indian Affairs.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Naval Affairs.
	Printing.
Mr. PAYNTER	Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, chairman.
	Claims.
	District of Columbia.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Judiciary.
	Philippines.
	Privileges and Elections.
Mr. PENROSE	Finance, chairman.
	Education and Labor.
	Expenditures in the Post Office Department.
	Immigration.
	Naval Affairs.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Railroads.
Mr. PERCY	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Commerce.
	Expenditures in the Department of State.
	Immigration.
	Indian Depredations.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS	Naval Affairs, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Appropriations.
	Commerce.
	Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.
	Fisheries.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Interoceanic Canals.
Mr. POINDEXTER	Expenditures in the Interior Department, chairman.
	Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Investigate Trespassers upon Indian Lands.
	Mines and Mining.
	Naval Affairs.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Pensions.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
Mr. POMERENE	Census.
	District of Columbia.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Manufactures.
	Pensions.
Mr. RAYNER	Indian Depredations, chairman.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Education and Labor.
	Expenditures in the Department of Justice.
	Foreign Relations.
	Geological Survey.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Judiciary.
	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.
Mr. REED	Commerce.
	Manufactures.
	Pacific Railroads.
	Philippines.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Railroads.
Mr. RICHARDSON	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, chairman.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.
	Immigration.
	Investigate Trespassers upon Indian Lands.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Printing.
Mr. ROOT	Industrial Expositions, chairman.
	Canadian Relations.
	Coast Defenses.
	Foreign Relations.
	Judiciary.
	Library.
	Revolutionary Claims.
Mr. SHIVELY	Census.
	Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.
	Education and Labor.
	Foreign Relations.
	Library.
	Pacific Railroads.
	Patents.
	Pensions.
	Territories.
Mr. SIMMONS	Engrossed Bills, chairman.
	Coast Defenses.
	Commerce.
	Cuban Relations.
	Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.
	Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.
	Finance.
	Interoceanic Canals.
Mr. SMITH of Maryland	Investigate Trespassers upon Indian Lands, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Canadian Relations.
	Coast Defenses
	District of Columbia.
	Expenditures in the Treasury Department.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Naval Affairs.
	Printing.
Mr. SMITH of Michigan	Territories, chairman.
	Commerce.
	Expenditures in the Post Office Department.
	Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.
	Foreign Relations.
	Naval Affairs.
	Pacific Railroads.
	Private Land Claims.
Mr. SMITH of South Carolina	Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Geological Survey.
	Immigration.
	Manufactures.
	Patents.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
Mr. SMOOT	Printing, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Civil Service and Retrenchment.
	Claims.
	Finance.
	Pensions.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
	Public Lands.
Mr. STEPHENSON	Enrolled Bills, chairman.
	Commerce.
	Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.
	Indian Depredations.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Mississippi River and its Tributaries.
	Pacific Railroads.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
Mr. STONE	Revolutionary Claims, chairman.
	Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.
	Cuban Relations.
	Expenditures in the Department of State.
	Finance.
	Foreign Relations.
	Indian Affairs.
Mr. SUTHERLAND	Public Buildings and Grounds, chairman.
	Foreign Relations.
	Indian Affairs.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States.
	Judiciary.
	Mines and Mining.
	Privileges and Elections.
Mr. SWANSON	Education and Labor.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Library.
	Naval Affairs.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
Mr. TAYLOR	Geological Survey, chairman.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Industrial Expositions.
	Military Affairs.
	Pensions.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Railroads.

Mr. TERRELL	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Coast Defenses.
	Manufactures.
	Post Offices and Post Roads.
	University of the United States.
Mr. THORNTON	Census.
	Fisheries.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Mississippi River and its Tributaries.
	Naval Affairs.
	Private Land Claims.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
	Public Lands.
Mr. TILLMAN	Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Canadian Relations.
	Expenditures in the Navy Department.
	Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Mines and Mining.
	Naval Affairs.
Mr. TOWNSEND	Coast and Insular Survey, chairman.
	Census.
	Claims.
	Conservation of National Resources.
	Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.
	Interoceanic Canals.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.
Mr. WARREN	Appropriations, chairman.
	Agriculture and Forestry.
	Expenditures in the Department of State.
	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Military Affairs.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Rules.
Mr. WATSON	Conservation of National Resources.
	Cuban Relations.
	Indian Affairs.
	Interstate Commerce.
	Mines and Mining.
	Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	Railroads.
	Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.
Mr. WETMORE	Library, chairman.
	Appropriations.
	Geological Survey.
	Mississippi River and its Tributaries.
	Naval Affairs.
	Public Buildings and Grounds.
	University of the United States.
	Woman Suffrage.
Mr. WILLIAMS	Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.
	Finance.
	Military Affairs.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
	University of the United States.
Mr. WORKS	Expenditures in the War Department, chairman.
	Coast and Insular Survey.
	Coast Defenses.
	District of Columbia.
	Expenditures in the Treasury Department.
	Industrial Expositions.
Mr. WORKS (continued)	Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.
	Patents.
	Public Health and National Quarantine.
	Public Lands.

CORRECTION OF ERRORS IN APPROPRIATION ACTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read by title.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) to correct errors in the enrollment of certain appropriation acts approved March 4, 1911, was read the first time by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state to the Senate in reference to the joint resolution that it is entitled a joint resolution "to correct errors in the enrollment of certain appropriation acts," one coming from the Committee on Appropriations, another from the Post Office Committee, and a third from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The joint resolution in fact repeals certain provisions of those acts and in part modifies others. It seemed to the Chair, inasmuch as by title it is proposed to correct enrollments, the joint resolution should go to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, but the Chair did not wish to make such a reference without calling to the attention of the Senate the provisions of the joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has been recognized.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have only one observation to make. To prove the errors in enrollment it will be necessary to consult the original bills that were before the conferees, to examine the markings upon their margins, and the conference reports to the Senate. Therefore the proper reference for the joint resolution is to the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of checking up such of the bills as may come within their jurisdiction, and, if necessary, it can then go to some other committee.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understand, this is an effort to correct a bill passed in the last Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Several bills, of which bills different committees had jurisdiction, and it is in effect a repealing resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. That is all it can be. There can be no such thing as the correction by one Congress——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly not.

Mr. BAILEY. Of a mistake made by a previous Congress or its committees except by way of affirmative legislation. These are the laws, and it would not be competent in a court of law to come down into the committee room and examine the bill there and contradict it by the bill in the State Department. All we can do is simply to amend the law as it now stands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the joint resolution proposes to do.

Mr. WARREN. Just a word——

Mr. BAILEY. I thought it merely proposed to correct a mistake.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In its title it assumes to do something else, but in effect, when the joint resolution is read, it will be seen that it is a repealing resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. Then that is the way it ought to be framed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Just a word.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. It would seem rather peculiar under ordinary circumstances to undertake to repeal legislation passed in the last Congress without, in reporting the joint resolution, giving some good reason for such repeal.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to repeal a good deal of it.

Mr. WARREN. The reason for that repeal, if there be one, will, of course, appear when the bills are examined and it is shown that the enrollment was in error, being different legislation from what was intended by the Senate itself.

Mr. BAILEY. That would be a good reason for passing the joint resolution, but as it is now the law, you have to deal with it as you would with any other existing law.

Mr. HEYBURN. We confronted this question at the last Congress under circumstances that enabled us to fully realize the effect of this class of attempt. It is an attempt to do by indirection what under the law can and should only be done by direct action. If this legislation, which is as much law as anything upon the statute books, is to be repealed, let it be done by a measure that purports to repeal it, not by a measure that purports to apologize for it and ask forgiveness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it does that, except in the title.

Mr. HEYBURN. The joint resolution is not entitled to be received by the Senate, and it is not a measure known to legislative procedure—to correct a measure that became final at a Congress that has terminated. It is not a proceeding known to legislation—or, rather, I might say, that should be known to it. It went through at the last session.

I happen to be interested, as a Member of this body, in some of the measures that are proposed to be advocated by this measure—a resolution that we did not mean to do that which we have been certified to the country as having done—and I shall take such steps as are within my power, within the rules of legislation, to have rejected, without any recognition as a correct method of legislating, all such measures.

If any part of the legislative branch of the Government desires to propose the repeal of a measure, let it come in the shape of a bill to repeal it, and let it go to the committee with the notice and opportunity implied by such procedure, and come in here and go on the calendar as any other measure.

I am not in the habit of serving notice as to what I shall do, but I certainly will do what can be done to prevent summary action upon this class of proposed legislation.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Idaho is through, as I understand. Has the Senator finished?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator, then, I will say what I have to say in his time.

I think the discussion is proceeding on the part of the Senator from Idaho upon a misapprehension of what is contained in the joint resolution. It is a joint resolution which, I need not say, has the same effect as a statute when it has been agreed to by each House and approved, and the direct purpose of it, as stated, is to amend existing law. I will read it to the Senator. The Senator shakes his head. I happen to have the document before me.

Mr. HEYBURN. I read a statement of it in the morning paper. I have not seen the document.

Mr. BACON. I have in my hand the document which comes from the House of Representatives. It reads this way:

Resolved, etc., That the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 4, 1911, is amended as follows.

There is a distinct proposition to amend an existing law. It is doing exactly what the Senator from Idaho very properly says is the proper and correct method of procedure to correct what was an error. It is true that there is an unfortunate expression in the preamble.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that is the unfortunate——

Mr. BACON. But that does not affect it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, it is the unfortunate statement in the preamble that caused me to take the floor on this occasion.

Mr. BACON. Very well. That is a matter with which the Senate can very easily and readily deal by a minor correction when the joint resolution comes before a proper committee for consideration. But the joint resolution itself purports to amend existing laws, the purpose being to correct what was in the enactment of those laws the commission of an unintentional error. But the direct method of procedure is the correct one, to wit, it proposes to amend the law as it now exists. The language is as I have read it, and I will proceed to read, not the entire joint resolution, but its provisions in that particular. Now, for instance, as to the Post Office bill, on the next page. I read what referred to the sundry civil bill. When it comes to the Post Office appropriation bill, line 13, on page 2, it says:

The Post Office appropriation act approved March 4, 1911, is amended as follows.

When it comes to the naval appropriation bill it says:

The naval appropriation act approved March 4, 1911, is amended as follows.

So the joint resolution does proceed regularly with the purpose and intent to amend existing law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator kindly allow me to use the joint resolution, if he is through with it?

Mr. BAILEY. It is right in the body of the joint resolution. The only mistake is in the preamble.

Mr. BACON. In the preamble. It is a matter very easy of correction.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is a matter of great importance, not only as to the items included, but as to the establishing of a precedent. This comes to us in the shape of a joint resolution which, when it is passed and signed, becomes a law with just the same binding force as any other law. I am perfectly aware of that. But, Mr. President, this recites that "the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 4, 1911, is amended as follows," immediately following a declaration of the purpose of the proposed act, of the nature of the legislation, which is "whereas certain errors were made in the enrollment of certain appropriation acts approved March 4, 1911." I do not admit it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Idaho will recall the fact that it is almost the universal practice in the Senate to strike out preambles.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, of course, the committee can do that——

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. And simply report back the joint resolution as it would appear after the preamble had been stricken out.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from Idaho, I wish to make a suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. It is that the joint resolution ought to be referred in succession to the various committees which had charge of the particular bills that are sought to be amended.

There is no doubt about it that it would be very much better if we had had three joint resolutions sent to us instead of one. But as the whole matter has been embodied in one joint resolution, it occurs to me that the better plan is that it should be referred to each of the committees, so far as it relates to the particular subject matter within the control of the several committees.

Mr. CULLOM. Beginning with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BACON. It is true this is somewhat an awkward procedure, but it is the practical way in which to deal with it, and if there is anything wrong in the matter of form or style or expression each of those committees can make proper recommendations for its correction.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is wrong in morals. If this were the Congress that enacted the laws, there might be some excuse for this action. But this is not the Congress that enacted the laws. It is a subsequent Congress, and if we can go back to one we can go back to any, and if we have votes enough we can declare it was not the intention in the sundry civil appropriation bill of 1906 that certain items should be included. It is lax legislation.

As long as a Congress exists, which is for the period of two years, it should be competent for it to correct errors which it has committed, but it should not be competent for another Congress to make changes in the law on the pretense that a Congress which has passed into history and is responsible for its own action did that which this Congress does not approve of.

Take these items, for instance. In the first place, I referred to one, which was the cause of my rising to discuss this question:

So much of the general deficiency appropriation act approved March 4, 1911, as appropriates the sum of $500 to reimburse the State board of regents of the University of Idaho for the premium paid on an indemnity bond is repealed.

Mr. President, that matter was pending before this body for a long time, and it received the approval of this body. It was agreed to, so far as history tells us, in the conference and has become a law, a law enacted not by this Congress, but by another Congress. If we can do it as to the last Congress, we can do it as to the first Congress, and we can go back of the ultimate record of the measures that were enacted and certified to the Department of State and after men and the memory of men have passed away, we can open up these questions upon the lead-pencil marks upon an appropriation bill or the memory of some one who is no longer a Member of the body. I think the principle is sufficiently important to justify any one or all the Members of the Senate in taking this up at this time.

Let me call attention to another feature of it. The joint resolution undertakes in one measure to repeal provisions in the general deficiency bill, the Post Office appropriation bill, the urgent deficiency bill, and the naval appropriation bill. The change in the personnel of the committees that represented the two legislative bodies of the Government in conference in itself would constitute a warning against anything like such action. Those committees to whom this joint resolution would go are in at least two instances almost entirely composed of new Members. Are they to sit in judgment upon the action of the committees of the last Congress or upon the action of the Congress itself? If we establish a practice like this, the old principle of the stability and certainty of the law when it is written and recorded would be very much diminished in its value as a rule of legal and legislative procedure.

I will ask Senators to investigate the personnel of the committees from which that which is now the law came and to which this joint resolution would go and see whether they want the work of the last Congress criticized, whether they want to take up those who may have been clerks to the committees of the last Congress and not connected with the present and inquire of them, What does that little mark mean on the margin of that manuscript? or, Do you remember that in conference there was a failure to agree upon this measure? Does any Senator want legislation based upon such loose methods as that? And that is just what we are proposing to do.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. This joint resolution came from the Committee on Appropriations in the House. I have not examined all of the records, but I have examined sufficiently to know that as to repeals that are sought in bills that were before the Senate Committee on Appropriations the return from the committee of conference, which is a matter of record, will show that the bill itself as enrolled does not correspond with the report of the conference committee.

It is in my judgment proper to send the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations that the committee may examine and be able to ascertain and lay before the Senate its conclusion as to whether this legislation proceeded regularly and in which the conferees were in agreement, or whether they legislated one way and their legislation was written through the enrolling clerks in another.

I make no point of judgment whether the joint resolution should pass or not. All I ask is that it may go, in the first instance, to the proper committee, and, if it is necessary, then it can go to the Committee on Naval Affairs and to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming conclusively demonstrate the unsoundness of this action. He confesses that the procedure will be one of investigation to determine whether or not Congress made a mistake. There is the whole thing in a nutshell. Shall one Congress undertake to review the action of another?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that will be a matter for the Senate itself to settle. But all committees are committees of investigation. The committees may return a report that this bill should not pass, but at least they may accumulate the facts relating to the matter and give the benefit of those facts to the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the committee should not be invested with any such power, nor should such a duty be undertaken by it. The committees of this Congress should not undertake such a thing. Where would it end? What limitation would you put upon the power to inquire as to whether or not the laws written, sent out, and published to the people and acted upon, accepted as laws, are laws? How often can it be done? Perhaps again and again.

No, Mr. President, if this Congress doubts the wisdom of any other Congress it is appropriate to introduce a bill to repeal a law, recognizing it as the law, not as a mistake. If you are going to nullify it, recognize its status as a law, not as a mistake to be corrected.

I felt when on a former occasion Congress took a similar step in regard to the legislation of that Congress that it was going beyond any possible rule that should govern. But this goes a step further and proposes to correct as a mistake the action of another Congress. I merely appeal to Senators not to drop into a mistake as a method of legislation. Otherwise they will cast doubt upon the stability of any law upon the statute books, because of a fear that some committee or some person who disagrees with the act of Congress may go back and find that by the lead pencil notes upon the margin of a conference report some mistake was made.

Now, that will not do as a method of legislation. I know that in one case, and I think in more, action has been taken upon such a matter based upon it as legislation, and I was astounded when I read in the paper that the first session of the Sixty-second Congress was going to inquire into the accuracy and intelligence of the preceding Congress. The great committee which Senators seem sometimes to overlook passed upon this matter, and passed upon it deliberately.

This condition of affairs illustrates the laxity of the rule and procedure under which a report from a conference committee is stated by numbers and not by names. When a conference report is made it says, "The Senate recedes from amendments numbered 12, 19, 32, and 75," and no Senator can keep up with it; and the House recedes from numbers, stating them rapidly. Unless you have an opportunity to place the bill before you and hunt up those numbers you do not know what the result of the conference has been.

I hope some Senator will propose such a reformation in regard to the manner of making conference reports as will make this kind of a proceeding forever impossible. Had the conference report come to this Chamber conveying the information that those items had not been included, then there would have been a motion to send it back to the conference for further consideration. No such opportunity was given. It was stated that the conference had agreed to the measure as it is written in the statute. A disagreement to the conference report would perhaps have elicited more wisdom than would be shown by the refusal of the conference to include those items, some of them I know. I may say that had the conference report conveyed the information to this body that they had not included that item and one other, I think I should have asked that the conference consider it further.

Now, see the condition in which we are left. A Senator introduces a measure. It is passed through this body. He is advised at the door or on the floor that the conference with the other House has agreed to the measure, and he rests in security and waives the opportunity which he has under the rules of this body to ask for a further consideration of the measure. He accepts the conference report as it comes to this body and as it is printed and as it is signed by the Presiding Officer. It is written in the law, and those who are the beneficiaries or the responsible people who are controlled by the legislation act upon it. Then he is told at some subsequent Congress that a mistake was made, and it matters not whether it is 1 year, 1 month, or 50 years afterwards. There is no right to correct the record of the last Congress that is not equally applicable to the correction of the record of a Congress of 50 years ago. There is no statute of limitations.

I object, as I objected on the former occasion, to the practice; and I object to this particular case because it represents legislation that in the wisdom and in the justice of this body—and I believe in the wisdom of the conferees—should have been enacted into law.

Mr. President, I have been thinking just what action should be taken. The joint resolution comes from the House. Of course the House has sent it to us with a preamble. So we are fully advised as to the nature and character and purpose of the legislation. There is no rule under which we can send it back to the House. It is ours to act upon. We can amend it. If we strike out the declaration in the preamble, the venom still remains in the text of the bill.

Mr. President, I will inquire what is the status of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a message from the House of Representatives laid before the Senate for reading and reference.

Mr. HEYBURN. For a first reading?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to a second reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On a single objection it must go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the second reading of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over under the rule.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 2983. An act for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Thirteenth Census was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Census.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

H. J. Res. 2. Joint resolution making appropriations for the payment of certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress; and

H. J. Res. 3. Joint resolution making immediately available the appropriations for mileage of Senators and of Members of the House of Representatives.

H. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to grant authority to the American Red Cross to erect temporary structures in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, suggests that all matters relating to the Red Cross go to that committee for consideration, and I ask that the reference of House joint resolution 38 be changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reference will be changed from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF TARIFF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire Senate proceedings with reference to the tariff act of 1842, including the act itself, be printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. 21.)

I also ask that the entire Senate proceedings with reference to the tariff act of 1846 be printed as another and separate Senate document, including the act of 1846 and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury made to Congress in December, 1845, known as the Walker report.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I may interrupt the Senator from Texas, would it not be well to include also in the document the Canadian reciprocity act of 1854?

Mr. BAILEY. That is now a public document.

Mr. HEYBURN. But does it contain all the Senate proceedings? It contains selected proceedings.

Mr. BAILEY. The Finance Committee, when the reciprocity agreement came to the Senate, ordered printed the document relating to the proposition now before us and also the documents relating to the old reciprocal trade agreement, including the agreement itself, the report of Mr. Mason, and the Ward report, as well as others made by some experts of the Treasury Department.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say I have a copy of that document, as every Senator doubtless has, but it seemed to me that it contains only selected portions of the proceedings in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I do not recall at this moment, perhaps the Senator from Texas will know, whether the Elgin treaty was debated in open session or not. If it was debated, as treaties almost universally are, in secret session, naturally there would be no report of the debate. So very little of it could be given in that case.

Mr. HEYBURN. My recollection is that it was not considered in secret session, because the discussion between Mr. Morrill and certain other Senators is contained in this document, and I assume that it must have been in open session.

Mr. BAILEY. I think, however, that may have been upon the abrogation of the treaty, but I would not be positive about that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. There was a very extensive debate on the Elgin treaty, which came on the question to abrogate or repeal it, which really ought to be included in any document that is published concerning the reciprocal trade agreement.

Mr. BAILEY. I myself would be very glad to see that done, but my purpose was to get these documents printed, assuming that as the Senate will at once take up the trade agreement it could have what additional printing it might desire done. I am rather inclined, Mr. President, to believe that the Finance Committee, under the standing rule, might have this printing done, but I wanted to have no question about it; and if the committee could have it done this order of the Senate could do no harm.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator intends to include the debates?

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly. I said all the proceedings; and in order that whoever compiles it may know what I mean by the request to which I hope the Senate will give its consent, I would begin with the bill to the Senate from the House. For instance, the act of 1846 was never reported to the Senate from a committee. It was one of the few great measures debated at length, attracting universal attention, with the consideration of which the Senate proceeded without having it referred to a committee. There was an absentee, and as the means of coming and going were not so good then as they are now, it was by no means certain that the absent member of the Finance Committee would be able to attend its sessions, and his absence left that committee a tie. The Democratic leaders of the Senate very frankly avowed that they did not want to send the bill to the committee, because they did not want it kept there by this tie.

There was one speech of great interest aside from the question discussed. I think probably one of the most eloquent tributes ever paid by one Senator to another was paid by the Senator from Missouri, Mr. Benton, to the Senator from North Carolina, who resigned his seat as a Member of this body rather than to vote for that bill, although he was a Democrat.

The administration paper then published in Washington assailed him with such ferocity that Mr. Benton, though friendly to the administration, felt called upon to protest on the floor of the Senate. It was one of the interesting episodes of that most remarkable discussion. I should want that included; in fact, Mr. President, I want everything relating to that bill from the time it came to the Senate from the House until the time it passed the Senate included.

There have been a good many mistakes made about that bill. The other night I picked up a recent edition of Clay's writings, and the last volume contained a history of the tariff question written by the lamented President McKinley. He states in that book that the famous tariff act of 1846 passed this body by the casting vote of the Vice President. I have seen that statement repeatedly made, and at one time I made the mistake of repeating it; but it is a mistake. The casting vote of the Vice President was not on the passage of the bill; it was on the third reading of the bill. That bill passed the Senate by a majority of 1 vote, and that 1 vote was cast by a Whig Senator under the instruction of the legislature of his State.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the Walker report is already printed as a public document.

Mr. BAILEY. I know. I understand that the Senator from Georgia very wisely had it so printed during the last tariff discussion; but I should like to have everything relating to that particular bill included in the document.

Mr. BACON. The Senator wants it all printed together as one document?

Mr. BAILEY. As one document. And, Mr. President, I want also the document embracing the act of 1842 to include the veto messages of President Tyler, who vetoed that bill twice. Congress finally passed it after eliminating a provision that related to certain public lands. One of the remarkable episodes in connection with that was that after the bill had been twice vetoed by the President and the House was about to yield to the position of the President a new Member, as I recall, from the State of Pennsylvania, made a remarkable speech, and concluded with moving, as an amendment to the bill, the former bill with the provision relating to public lands eliminated. He so charmed and convinced the House that they adopted his motion, and that bill, thus slightly amended, was finally sent to the President for a third time, and received his approval. I should like to have both of those veto messages included in that document. I doubt if we have had a document printed by either House since we printed the messages and papers of the Presidents which would be more interesting and more instructive than the document I propose; and I hope unanimous consent will be given for its printing.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I take it that everyone is in accord with the request of the Senator from Texas; but his request makes no provision as to how this proposed document shall be compiled or who shall compile it. I would suggest that the matter be referred to the Committee on Finance and taken up in detail there. The Senator will then have an opportunity to indicate just what he wants and how he wants the work compiled, and it would, of course, be part of the numerous records which that committee will have to report for publication during the discussion of the subject.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I meet the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania by requesting that the Committee on Finance be requested to have the documents referred to printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to inquire whether the request includes the debates and the proceedings with reference to the former reciprocity treaty with Canada?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Texas desires to include in his request all that he has stated, and that the printing shall be done under the direction of the Committee on Finance. That is as the Chair understands it.

Mr. BAILEY. It will include the debates, the votes, the amendments, and the motions.

Mr. BORAH. I understand what the Senator desires to include with reference to the acts of 1842 and 1846; but I was inquiring if provision was being made for printing the proceedings and debates with reference to the former reciprocity treaty with Canada.

Mr. BAILEY. I had not, Mr. President, included that in the request.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have that included in the request.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the debates in relation to the Canadian reciprocity treaty referred to by the Senator from Idaho have already been printed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment, I think the only debate that has been printed in document form is the debate that occurred when the bill to repeal the reciprocity agreement was up for consideration, but neither the debate when the treaty in the first instance was under consideration nor when the tariff bill made in pursuance of that treaty was under consideration have been printed. However, some of the debates—whether all are included or not I do not know—that took place when the former Canadian reciprocity treaty was repealed have been printed.

Mr. BAILEY. I ought to know, but I must admit that I do not know, whether the debates on the treaty have ever been made public—I mean on the original proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I know many of them have been made public and many of them have been printed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me further, I join with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in asking that all the proceedings in connection with the reciprocity treaty of 1854, the act passed in pursuance thereof, and also the repealing act—everything in connection with those matters—be printed as a document in connection with the other matters referred to, under the direction of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, on the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], who sits near me, I want also to say that I shall ask the Finance Committee to include the act of 1857, modifying, as it did, the act of 1846. If I could have my way with the committee, taking the responsibility for it back to the Senate, I should like to see both those documents printed in a volume of convenient size. In my opinion, all that relates to the acts of 1842 and 1846 can be printed in a volume not wider nor longer than the book which I hold in my hand [exhibiting] and only a little thicker, because it will contain nothing except the Senate proceedings.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator that my recollection, from an examination very recently made of the condition of the record, is that the treaty was not considered in open session, and that, therefore, there is no report of the debate. In those days Canada was not so important as now, and the treaty was made with England. It was discussed in secret session, and there is no record of what anybody said.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I will say there was an act immediately passed to carry out the provisions of the treaty, and there was debate in connection with that act.

Mr. HEYBURN. The debate on that act reveals merely the discussion of the items, but I think my colleague [Mr. BORAH] will find no record of the proceedings when the treaty was ratified.

Mr. BORAH. What I was most concerned about was the debate with reference to the abrogation of the treaty, which I think is very instructive.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that is all right. We have that.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. I think the record will disclose that the proposition for reciprocity with Canada was pending for four or five years before it was eventually adopted.

There is quite an elaborate debate in the Congressional Globe of 1849 on that proposition, participated in by Stephen A. Douglas and other distinguished Members of the Senate at that time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in order that the Senate may understand my desire, if it is found that to incorporate all the proceedings with reference to these bills will make a volume of inconvenient size then I am going to ask the committee to make two volumes of it, so that every Senator may have them for convenient reference.

Mr. SMOOT. No doubt, Mr. President, that would be done at all events.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the committee will comply with the request of the Senate in regard to this matter, but I think, in the interest of orderly procedure, the Senate should direct the committee and not request it. That was the form in which it was put—that the committee be requested. I think the committee should be, as is universally done, directed to comply with these requests.

Mr. BAILEY. That is an entirely proper suggestion. I preferred the request to the Senate, and then, to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I simply added that the work should be done under the direction of the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], supplemented by the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, my recollection is that a letter on the subject of reciprocity was written by Robert J. Walker on or about May 1, 1848, and I would suggest to the Senator from Texas that he include that letter in his request.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I will state that my recollection corresponds with the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], that there is in the document room an executive document, including a message from President Taylor in 1850, and a letter from the former Secretary of the Treasury, Robert J. Walker, in 1848, approved by him but not signed by him, advocating freer trade relations with Canada. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury relates to a House bill, not to a treaty. In that document there is also included a remarkable speech by Gen. Dix, of New York, then a Member of the Senate, in favor of a bill for reciprocal free-trade relations between the United States and Canada. These, of course, ought to be included in the proposed publication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is broad enough to cover it. As the Chair understands, the request of the Senator from Texas covered everything which appeared in the record of debates during the period of years relating to this subject.

Mr. CULBERSON. That was not included. My colleague simply asked for the printing of the Senate proceedings—and he named some of the proceedings—but he did not include the matter to which the Senator from Oklahoma has called attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It may be that the Chair misunderstood the request.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, my colleague will permit me to say that my own request was confined to proceedings respecting the two tariff acts of 1842 and 1846. Then the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] supplemented that with a suggestion about the reciprocity proceedings in 1854, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] then added his request. As I understand, all matters relating to that reciprocity agreement are to be printed under their requests, which, with my consent, became a part of what I had requested. Under that the documents to which my colleague refers will, as I understand, be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to have printed as a Senate document the document to which I have just called attention. It is House document 64, Thirty-first Congress, first session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Aside from the other request?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes; aside from the other request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is not on a reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada, but it is upon a bill which passed the House of Representatives, according to my recollection, but did not pass the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the request of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] will first be disposed of. The Chair hears no objection to the request. Is there objection to the request of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] as modified by the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am of course very much in favor of the order made by the Senate to publish the proceedings of the Senate with regard to the acts referred to and also the reciprocity agreement between this country and England with respect to Canada, also referred to; but I am now more interested in the pending reciprocity agreement than in the old one. A great many egregious misstatements have been sent broadcast in the country and scattered particularly among the farmers. I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate on Monday next, after the routine morning business has been disposed of, to address the Senate for a short time, in the hope of being able to correct some of the misstatements of fact which certain people have been so busy in spreading broadcast over the country.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 1, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 28, 1911.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Samuel Adams to be First Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Elliot Marshal to be surveyor of customs at St. Joseph, Mo.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Adolphus E. Watson to be a lieutenant commander.
The following-named machinists to be chief machinists:
Herbert E. Fish and
Barnett B. Bowie.
Machinist Bernhard Christensen to be a chief machinist.
The following-named carpenters to be chief carpenters:
Charles J. Kerr and
Ernest L. Bass.

POSTMASTERS.

MONTANA.

William Cowgill, Chouteau.

NEW JERSEY.

George E. Schenck, Haddon Heights.

NORTH CAROLINA.

John G. Brown, Red Springs.
Moses L. Buchanan, Concord.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Horace S. Carpenter, East Downington.
Samuel J. Gundry, Lattimer Mines.
Frank Merle Altland, Dillsburg.
Charles Seger, Emporium.
W. A. Terrill, Clairton.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Edward O. Harwood, Moorefield.
Albert S. Winter, Moundsville.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for all the seasons of the year, since each contributes its share to the wants and necessities of mankind; but when the winter is over and gone and the life currents are freed from its icy fingers, the grass springs beneath our feet; the trees take on their garments of green; the flowers bud, blossom, and exhale their fragrance; the birds sing; and the heart of man rejoices in the beauty and promise of it all, and our faith is enlarged in Thy goodness and Thy promises unto Thy children.

It is written, "For as the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and maketh it bring forth and blossom that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater; so shall My word be that goeth forth out of My mouth; it shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." So may we be faithful and profitable servants unto Thee, O God, our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ESCH, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Charles O. Baker, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. PETERS, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Mary A. Fearing, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BERGER, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one week on account of important business.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4413, to put agricultural implements and other articles on the free list.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SIMS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4413, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4413) to place on the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask what time has been used on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has used 4 hours and 53 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 5 hours and 11 minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from Alabama that I would like to yield 15 minutes at this time, as the gentleman desires to go away.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, on April 4, 1911, page 7 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the distinguished Speaker of the House made use of these words:

After 16 years of exclusion from power in the House and 14 years of exclusion from power in every department of government, we are restored to power in the House of Representatives and in that alone. We are this day put upon trial, and the duty devolves upon us to demonstrate, not so much by fine phrases as by good works, that we are worthy of the confidence imposed in us by the voters of the land, and that we are also worthy of their wider confidence. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We could not if we would, and we would not if we could, escape this severe test. We will not shirk our duty. We shrink not from the responsibility.

What has this Democratic House done up to this time? It passed a bill to authorize the election of Senators by direct vote of the people. A Republican House passed that bill on more than one occasion. The Democratic Party of this House, true to its history, is trailing along after the Republican Party. The Republican Party passed a bill——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. The House is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the House will be in order.

Mr. PRINCE. The next bill passed was one that refers to campaign expenses. A similar bill was passed by a Republican Congress. The bill that was passed here did not go to the root of the evil, which was the primary election. We tried to amend it. That was denied to us, and the bill in a very improper and ineffective form passed this House. Much flourish of trumpets was made about the economy of this House. How many have been discharged; how many positions have been discontinued? Who can tell? One hundred and eighty-two thousand dollars of salaries and useless expenses on the part of this House to be put aside and saved to the country, and yet what gentleman in the House can tell what saving has been done thus far? I pause for answer. I heard my distinguished colleague [Mr. MANN] show that you are seeking to have committee clerks and janitors and messengers appointed for committees that you said you had discontinued.

By the report of committee assignments those committees have been discontinued, and yet you are asking for clerks. What condition are we in to-day? Resolution after resolution of investigation is offered. This Congress ought not to be called an extra session of Congress, but ought to be called a Congress for special resolutions to investigate somebody. Commissions are to be appointed to investigate commissions, circling around one after another, and for what purpose? To increase the force of your employees, to seek to obtain some information that you have in all of the reports that have been given to you by the different departments. Unless you do more legislation for the good of the people you will be driven from the seat of power.

So much for that. Now, you have reached another bill—the Canadian reciprocity measure. That has passed this House. For the life of me I do not know what kind of a measure it is. Gentlemen on the other side say that it is a Democratic measure. The majority of the Republicans who voted on this side—78 against and 64 for—said it was not a Republican measure, and I was one of those that so voted. Nowhere do I find in the history of my party, in the speeches that I have made for 20 years or more to the farmers, nowhere do I find anywhere, from platform or speech, anything which says that the farmers shall be stricken down for the benefit of some other country, for the benefit of some other people who do not pay our taxes, who do not defend our flag, who do not care for the interests of this country as our own citizens have to care for them. Let us take the reciprocity bill that was passed. Why was it passed? I do not know. Is it a good bill? Some say yes. The President of the United States only last night said this:

> We tendered to the Canadian commissioners absolute free trade in all products of either country, manufactured or natural, but the Canadian commissioners did not feel justified in going so far.

Why? Why did they not? They made a bargain with us—the most unconscionable bargain that was ever entered into by this country with any other country, the most one-sided. What do we get? Free products of the Canadian farmer; all that he raises and produces in the form of natural products are made free. What benefit does the American farmer get in exchange? None. What is the expression of the President of the United States last night in that same speech?

> The effect is not going, in my judgment, to lower the specific prices of agricultural products in our country.

To lower the specific prices! The word "specific" is used, pointing out definitely that it will not lower the prices in this country. How can he square that with the statement that this measure is passed to relieve the ultimate consumer in his high cost of living in this country? If this bill does not reduce the prices to the farmer, why are we seeking to pass it? What is the purpose of this extra session if this measure gives no relief? Does it leave the price of the farmer's product exactly as it is? Oh, no; it does not. The Canadian commissioners knew it did not. They declined to let in manufactured products on the free list, and why? Because it was not to their interests to do so. What have we done? We have given to Canada the free market of the United States, with its over $20,000,000,000 of trade within its own limits. The combined trades of all of the waters of the world outside of the United States are not equal to the free trade that exists beween our States. We invite them to come into our market. We say to the farmer, "You shall not have any protection—this protection that we have preached all of our life, that the farm and the factory should be side by side, the one producing and the other consuming, thus making the home market." Yet with one fell swoop we have destroyed the arguments of a lifetime and said there is nothing in it for the farmer, that his competitor's products must come in free. What does the manufacturer get in exchange for all this? Let us see.

If he happens to be a maker of biscuits, cakes, combined with chocolate, under the present law he pays 35 per cent, and under the new proposed law he will pay 32½ per cent. In other words, the farmer is sold out to give the candy fellow 2½ per cent of reduction. What else? Plows, farm wagons, under the present law 25 per cent, reduced 2½ per cent. There is a reduction of 2½ per cent in favor of the manufacturer on one side and free trade to the farmer on the other—to 9,000,000 of men who are just beginning to get some profits. You take from them the profits of their farms, you take from them the products of their labor and give it over to the other fellow, if you please, in the face of his getting 2½ per cent. Take plows, 20 per cent under the present law, 15 per cent under the proposed agreement. I say to you, read this bill from start to finish and you will see it is the most unconscionable, the most unwise and onesided bargain that was ever driven by any nation with another. There is nothing like it. Read it, and I challenge any man in favor of it to read it and see how he will make it out. Oh, but you say, it does not affect the farmer. What do you want the bill for? It does not help the ultimate consumer. What do you want the bill for? If you read it carefully you will see there is a little kinky-headed fellow in the bill. The real purpose of the bill is to enlarge the field of exploitation in favor of the trusts, in favor of the combinations, in favor of the manufacturing interests of this country at the expense of the farmer, at the expense of the ultimate consumer. [Applause on the Republican side.] So much for that. Now, let us go a little further with this other bill you are now presenting to the people. You call it a farmers' free-list bill. We are calling it the farmers' "fake" bill. That is what it is. You have stricken him down, you have cut off both of his legs, and there he is bleeding, and then you say, "Here, I will let you buy plows a little cheaper somewhere else." Where can he buy them? Can you tell me?

My distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] put in the RECORD from the International Harvester Co. that they were selling reapers, mowers, binders, and different kinds of implements cheaper in this country than in any country in the world. Where are you going to get these cheaper products for the farmer? Where are they? Nowhere. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, let us go a little further. Your theory, my Democratic friends, is that when the tariff is added to the cost of an article the consumer pays it, and to that extent it is a burden. According to the statement of Mr. UNDERWOOD, agricultural implements pay a tariff of $12,189. Twelve thousand one hundred and eighty-nine dollars is the tariff tax added to the farmer of this country for buying agricultural implements! Now you propose to give him free trade with all the world. Oh, but you do take care of your own friends, you do, my Democratic friends on the other side, and most of them are south of Mason and Dixon line. You are in the saddle politically, you are dominating the policies of your party, and you ought to; you have been loyal and devoted to the party and you believe in its principles; why should not you? When it comes to your side you find cotton bagging, sacks, and burlap amount to $6,877,677. In other words, it is a sectional bill. Ten millions of dollars to be taken away from the Treasury and $8,000,000 given to the Southern States as a result of that, and yet we are all receiving petitions and communications from your cotton interests asking us and begging us to stand up against it. But we find there is a loss of revenue. Mr. UNDERWOOD stated that the loss by reason of Canadian reciprocity was $5,000,000 from the Treasury. The President says it means no damage to the producer; that the producer loses nothing and the consumer loses nothing. It is all beautiful and altruistic, and yet it loses to the Treasury of the United States $5,000,000 on account of Canadian reciprocity and $10,000,000 by this fake bill; in all, $15,000,000 taken out of the Treasury. What is the condition to-day? April 26, 1911, statement of the Treasury—and here is the dark shadow of Democratic tariff agitation, the shadow that will grow to the gloom it did under the Wilson-Gorman bill, and it may be that the Treasury will be depleted and the time may be, if you get in complete control, that you will have to issue bonds to pay the running expenses of the Government. Here is the statement of April 26, 1911. The excess of expenditures over receipts was $5,658,015.26. Read the statements in the public press, and you will find the receipts are going off in internal revenue and customs receipts. Men are working upon part time.

They are beginning to curtail and reduce their forces, and you are starting out with the conditions along the line of free trade. But, to your credit, you are honest in your views——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRINCE. I have not the time to yield in five minutes. The President in his speech—and I am most kindly disposed toward him, and I only differ with him on this proposition—states that in the other countries they are talking about annexation. What is the history of the American people? We might as well be frank and honest. Americans went into Texas, Americanized it, and it was annexed as a part of this great Union. Americans went into Hawaii, Americanized it, and annexed it. And if these bright young men that the President speaks of in his speech—these clever, active, virile, vigorous young men from the farms of Illinois and northern States, the thousands and hundreds of thousands of them—go up into that northland, 92 or 100 and more on this side, as against 7 on the other, what do you think will be the effect of it? Have I not a right to say that is the first step toward annexation? Have they not a right to believe it? Why have they not? The present Speaker of this House in the last session of Congress said that he was in favor of taking Canada as a part of the United States. And this was the first step toward annexation. He is a plain, blunt, honest man, whom I admire for his frankness. [Applause.] He has never denied that statement. I say to my neighbors on the north: Be not deceived. When we go into a country and get control of it, we take it. It is our history and it is right we should take it if we want it, and you might as well understand it. The Speaker has so said; the party back of him has so said. You are in control. You have never denied it on the floor of this House, and you can not deny it.

Now, let us see if they believe it in the other country. Let us see if the people of Canada believe in reciprocity and annexation.

That reciprocity involves a national menace is the widespread opinion in Canada. A procession of McGill students, on the occasion of a vast antireciprocity mass meeting carried mottoes reading: "This is a time of national peril"; "No bartering of our birthright"; "First step, reciprocity; second step, commercial union; third step, annexation"; "Keep off the annexation wolves."

That is their view of us, and it is idle to say it is not being discussed.

I want to say to you, my countrymen, in my judgment the reciprocity bill is the worst bill that was ever presented to this House, next to this fake bill which we are now considering. You now have a worse one.

I am a Republican. While I felt keenly the fact that a great body of my party, 64 of them, representing manufacturing interests, should assault the interests of my district, and strike them down so that they could get cheaper raw material in order to deal with somebody else, yet I now rise above little petty prejudice. I remember, in the language of a distinguished former Speaker of this House, that I am a representative of 92,000,000 people; that I am standing here for the best interests of all the people, and so I will vote on this occasion. I voted because I thought it was for the interest of the manufacturer, for the interest of the laborer, for the interest of the professional man, for the interest of the farmer, that the Canadian pact be defeated, and likewise I will vote against this measure, because I believe it to the interest of all of our people that this "farmers' fake bill" be defeated. And if you pass it, as pass it you will, the people will discriminate next November, and they will read the ticket from top to bottom, and they will say: "This is reciprocity; this is a ratification of your views," and in my judgment you can not afford to strike down or offer false allurement to 9,000,000 of the intelligent people in this country and think that they will believe in any such doctrine. For that reason I hope this measure will fail to pass. But, if it does pass, I hope it will fail in another branch. And I will continue to pray that our President will right up and go no further along this line of free trade and will veto this bill if it ever comes to him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, a large latitude is granted in debate, and for this reason I wish to avail myself of the opportunity to discuss a question which is to-day of vast importance not only to the National Congress, but to the entire people of the United States.

On the 21st day of December, 1910, the Senate adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 312):

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to furnish to the Senate for its use, if he does not deem it incompatible with public interest, the following information, with departmental classifications of the same:

First. The total number of appointments which are made by the President upon nomination to and confirmation by the Senate.

Second. The total number of appointments which are made by the President, but which do not require nomination to and confirmation by the Senate.

Third. The total number of officers and employees of the Government subject to civil-service regulations, specifying classification and number of postmasters.

Fourth. The total number of officers and employees subject to removal by the President without action on the part of Congress.

Fifth. Total number of officers and employees of the United States Government, exclusive of enlisted men and officers of the Army and Navy.

To this resolution the President responded on the 24th day of February, 1911, a summary of which is hereto appended.

Appointments made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Department:
State	441
Treasury	736
War (exclusive of Army)	6
Justice	383
Post Office	7,953
Navy (exclusive of naval officers)	11
Interior	272
Agriculture	3
Commerce and Labor (exclusive of Census)	28
Civil Service Commission	4
Government Printing Office	1
Interstate Commerce Commission	7
Library of Congress	1
Total	9,846

Appointments made by the President without confirmation by the Senate.

Department:
State	94
Treasury	0
War	0
Justice (approximately)	846
Post Office	0
Navy	0
Interior	44
Agriculture	0
Commerce and Labor	8
Civil Service Commission	1
Total (approximately)	993

Officers and employees under civil-service regulations.

Department:
State	177
Treasury	27,093
War	12,989
Justice	625
Post Office	147,727
Navy (approximately)	29,000
Interior	13,938
Agriculture	11,438
Commerce and Labor	14,797
Civil Service Commission	204
Government Printing Office	3,610
Interstate Commerce Commission (approximately)	586
Smithsonian Institution	424
Total	262,608

Officers and employees of the United States Government, exclusive of enlisted men and officers of the Army and Navy.

Department:
State		712
Treasury		27,829
War		17,102
Additional under War Department estimated—
Engineer Department	9,000
Quartermaster's Department	2,000
		11,000
Justice		5,700
Post Office		272,813
Navy (approximately)		29,000
Interior		14,262
Agriculture		12,519
Commerce and Labor		14,883
Government Printing Office		3,925
Interstate Commerce Commission		614
Civil Service Commission		209
Smithsonian Institution		424
Library of Congress		330
Total		411,322

It will be observed that exclusive of the enlisted men and officers of the Army and Navy the patronage under the control of the President amounts to 411,322 persons. This power is too enormous to be given any man in a free country where "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," a power which, if exercised for selfish and ambitious purposes, would be sufficient to perpetuate an administration or dictate its succession; a power greater than the founders of the Government contemplated would be vested in the hands of any man. We have grown beyond the optimistic dreams of the most ardent of the architects who drafted the plans of our Government, and are now occupying a station where this power may become a menace to the growth and development of our liberties. It is a power too dangerous to be confided to any one man. Ambition is not prone to relinquish power, and selfishness always craves it as an asset to win greater position and to retain all that has been won.

It is not only the 411,322 persons, but employees and appointees made by them and directly under their control, which almost doubles the number. This great appointive power once under the command of an ambitious, selfish, and designing man, would be a menace to the perpetuity of the Republic. This power would be ample to perpetuate a line of succession in office holding that might turn the purposes of our Government from what its original founders intended and divert them from republican to monarchial tendencies. It could mold legislation to suit the whims and caprices of a selfish Executive and special interests, if in favor with the appointing power, could secure such legislative favors as their greed might prompt.

How potential would be this power vested in the Chief Executive if he should attempt to secure legislation by the National Congress by withholding from the Members of that body the patronage to which the members of the party in power are entitled? It might transfer legislation from the National Congress to the Executive and result in the overthrow of constitutional requirements.

This vast office-holding army is in complete control of the President, their tenure of office is due to him, and he is vested with the power to promote, demote, and dismiss as he desires. He is Commander in Chief of the Federal office-holding force, and no power can revoke his orders. They are supreme. Does any man doubt the magnitude of this power and how its abuse might do serious and irreparable injury to the Republic? Of all the vast army of officeholders in this country the people elect but 391, the membership of this House. No other Federal officeholders are elected by a direct vote of the people. Each voter of the United States votes for only one Federal officeholder, the Member of Congress from his district. The voter, therefore, has but little to say about who shall hold the Federal offices. Does anyone doubt the intelligence and ability of the people to elect the officeholders of this country? If he does, he admits the incapacity of the people for self-government, and if this admission be true, then the end of the Republic must be conceded to be at hand. But upon what basis is such an admission predicated? Are not the great majority of the people in private life as intelligent, honest, and capable as those in public life, as well fitted for the responsibilities of citizenship? If not, why not? Is it true that by accident the people, not qualified for office, elect the qualified persons to administer the offices? The people are abundantly able to elect every man who holds a public office. They know what they want and know how to get it; know better than anyone else.

The civil-service law was enacted to prevent the abuse of the appointing power and worked well for years, but has now fallen victim to political abuse and is the "Trojan horse" for political knavery. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under it 262,608 persons hold office, secure from removal, ready when their political services are required, a reserve for every political emergency. Every man knows that this vast army is not immune from party service, is not idle in party campaigns, and not independent on party questions. Freedom from political and pernicious activity under civil service as administered to-day is a mockery and a sham. If it was desired to make it an office-holding class of nonpartisan or bipartisan character, why not amend the law so that the appointees under it shall be prorated according to the respective strength of the leading political parties in the locality, State, or Union? This would make it of bipartisan character and secure fair partisan representation. Its administration is and for years has been a slander on political independence and bipartisanship in office holding. This is true from the lowest to the highest in the civil-service class. It serves as a mask behind which party service is rendered and deserves the severest condemnation.

The most aggravated and offensive partisanship exercised in any of the departments is in the Post Office Department. This department is a political machine and is openly administered as such. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Its membership is 272,813 strong, reaching to every neighborhood and coming into direct personal contact with all the people. Of this vast army, 147,727 are under the civil-service control, but as a rule their pernicious political activity goes bravely and constantly on. They are daily on their jobs, both in and out of campaigns. It is the greatest political machine ever constructed in this or any other country.

The Postmaster General is to-day the commanding general of the Republican Party; he is at the head of the national organization. If not the real head, he is the quasi head of the same. Too much of his time is given to politics and not enough to public service. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If more time of the Postmaster General was devoted to looking after the public business and less after politics, complaints against the public service would not be so numerous from every quarter of the Republic. [Applause.] It is a notorious fact that rumors are in circulation in many quarters of the Union that officials under the civil-service branches of the Government, and more especially in the postal service, are assessed every campaign for the Republican campaign fund from the highest to the lowest position; even the rural-route man in the country, with his paltry wage, and the letter carrier on the streets of the cities, who can barely subsist on his meager pay, does not escape the gatherer of campaign funds.

All must pay campaign assessments, or off go their official heads. If not for this, the real reason, ostensibly for some other. Such a flagrant abuse of the law, it is charged, exists all over the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In this connection it would be interesting to know how many, if any, of these officials are assessed, and for what amount, for the Republican campaign fund at each national election. It would be interesting to know how many, if any, in every campaign are reminded that it would be to their advantage to make a contribution to the Republican campaign fund. It would be interesting to know how many, if any, lose their jobs or are demoted because of their failure to pay the assessment or make a liberal contribution to the Republican campaign fund. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It would be interesting to know how many, if any, have their positions abolished and are thus let out of the public service, and new places are created in lieu of the ones abolished, with a new man in charge, for failure to pay compaign contributions to the Republican campaign fund and render political services. [Applause on Democratic side.] It would be interesting to know how many, if any, are transferred from lucrative positions to others not so remunerative for failure or refusal to organize and do political work for the Republican Party in campaigns. It would be interesting to know what orders, directions, or requests, if any, in the last decade have been made by the heads of departments to their subordinates over the country to secure delegations or instructions for any candidate to any convention or conventions and the consequences resulting for failure to respond. Last, but not least, it would be interesting to know how many, if any, Members of either branch of Congress in the last 10 years have been called upon by the dispensers of public patronage to support measures pending in Congress, and a failure to comply would cost them the disposal of the patronage to which they were entitled. [Applause on Democratic side.]

In the answers to these inquiries the people of the entire country are deeply interested and should be correctly informed. It would also be interesting to know how many, if any, in the last few years, of the public positions, high or low, have been given, or what legislation enacted, if any, as a consideration because of liberal contributions to the Republican campaign fund. [Applause on Democratic side.]

What a "slush fund" this creates. If the 411,322 appointees under the President were assessed only $10 each annually for campaign purposes, it would raise yearly a sum of $4,113,220, and this would create for the national campaign fund every four years the enormous sum of $16,452,880. Does any man doubt the danger of this organized political machine with such a fund? Is it not too dangerous to be permitted to exist? [Applause on Democratic side.] Again, it is a reasonable estimate to say that the average pay of this vast army of public servants amounts to $1,000 per year each, aggregating $411,322,000 as the annual value of the patronage at the disposal of one man. Is this not too much power to be vested in any man, however good, great, and patriotic? Is not the temptation too great? It is time the temptation should be removed, the opportunity eliminated, and the power restored to the people where it properly belongs. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The Constitution provides in reference to the appointing power of the President as follows:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

The power to appoint Federal officials by this provision of the Constitution is vested in the President, and as to all superior officers such appointments are to be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but as to subordinate officers Congress by law may vest the appointment in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. The Constitution, therefore, points out a way whereby the President may be divested in part of this enormous and dangerous power of patronage. He could issue an Executive order calling upon the patrons of various Federal offices to select by ballot at the quadrennial national elections the officials for the Federal positions and nominate for confirmation such as by law were required to be confirmed, and appoint and commission all who were not so required. This procedure would enable the people of the respective localities to advise properly the President of their choice for such places and enable him to act intelligently and wisely in his appointments. Against such a procedure as this there is no constitutional inhibition, and no precedent will be found which declares it an innovation of Executive authority. Such an order by any Chief Executive would meet with the commendation of the people everywhere and inspire confidence among the entire people, irrespective of class or condition.

Why should not the President issue an Executive order for the selection by ballot at every presidential election of the Federal marshals, the clerks of Federal courts, collectors of internal revenues; surveyors of customs, and postmasters? Such a plan is not only feasible, but is practical, and would assure a proper and equitable distribution of the patronage and would inspire a higher standard of public service.

If the people are qualified to elect the appointing power they are equally qualified to select the subordinate officials. It would be a wise and prudent method and one which would be satisfactory to the people.

In the Post Office Department alone there are 272,813 appointees who should be elected in order to break down a great

Federal machine and give the people an efficient service. It costs the people of the country about $245,000,000 annually to run it, and yet the service is deplorable. It is the only $245,000,000 business in the world run at a loss every year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why so? Too little attention to business and too much to politics. It manifests more interest in Republican politics than it does in public business. If managed properly in the interest of public welfare, employing good business methods, it would be a great revenue producer instead of a great revenue loser, as it now is and has been for years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is the great Republican incubator operated on all occasions from the ward primary to the national conventions and at all Federal elections. Its cohorts, booted and spurred, are in the forefront of every political contest, both in season and out, every day in the year. In fact, it is the great Republican clearing house, through which all party debts are paid, from the ward heelers up to the operators of the steam roller. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What tenable objection can be urged against the plan for the people electing their postmaster? Can any sound, logical reason be given? If so, we would like to hear it. Formerly by spoilsmen this doctrine was assailed as a "populistic heresy." What if it was advocated by some Populist, that does not prove it is without merit. That is no argument against it. Denunciation is not argument, and it will not frighten intelligent people from advocating this reform, from adopting and carrying it into effect.

We are a progressive people, and our legislation should be such. The reactionary should no longer be permitted to restrain the wheels of progress or retard the onward march of 90,000,000 people in the solution of the great problems with which they daily come in contact. The election of these subordinate officials will destroy the Federal political machine, eliminate all scandals concerning the barter and sale of these Federal positions, restore confidence among the people in official conduct, inspire greater faith in our institutions, and curtail the power which now menaces the liberties of the mightiest people of all the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A life tenure of office, high or low, great or small, is inimical to the welfare of the people and the perpetuity of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It creates despotic tendencies in the administration, carelessness in the execution of duty, and tyrannical conduct in the officeholder. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No man should be selected for any official position for life, because he feels no longer responsive to the people he is to serve and will not keep step with the progress of the times. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

All positions should be selected for a term of years, so that the officeholder will bear in mind that he is but a temporary servant and must answer to the people for his official conduct. Ambition for power throughout all the ages of the world has been the inveterate foe of human liberty and independence. It has been the exponent of extravagance and the opponent of economy, the handmaiden of corruption, the subordinator of pure and honest administration, and the arch enemy of liberty. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The pathway of civilization is strewn with the wrecks of liberty, which avarice for power has created.

When our Constitution was constructed its framers recognized on account of existing conditions the necessity for a strong Executive and so builded, yet when their work was completed many of them were astonished at the extensive powers vested in that office. In spite of the checks, restraints, and limitations which were placed upon the Executive it was openly asserted by some that a monarchy, in fact, if not in name, had been created. Both opponents of the system and its warmest advocates recurred to this again and again, and its defenders found it difficult to refute the charge. In our day it is difficult to frame a definition for monarchy that excludes the President of a Republic more powerful than most of the monarchs of the world.

What monarchs of the world to-day have the appointment in the civil list, either directly or indirectly, of more than 400,000 officials, and through their appointment of subordinates as many more, amounting to nearly a million men? Add to this the power of appointment of the military force of the Government, and you have a President clothed with more power than is bestowed on any monarch in the world; a force so powerful that it could direct the course of legislation, perpetuate administration after administration, formulate and enact policies, and mold and shape the destinies of the Republic.

When John Randolph said "The people would behold in the President the form, at least, of a little monarch," he expressed a witticism which under present conditions is changed so that the people may behold in the power of the President, if he so desired, not only the form but the substance of not a little but one of the greatest monarchs of the world. The power is present; it is vested; all it needs is ambition to make it real, to call it into execution. Grant that the ambition is dormant, yet it is true that power will intoxicate the best hearts and strongest minds. The power vested in the President is almost unlimited, and no man, it matters not how wise, patriotic, or good and great, is wise enough, good enough, and great enough to be intrusted with such unlimited and extensive power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Officials clothed with extensive powers become impatient under restraint, is the experience of all the world, as recorded history conclusively shows.

Power takes precedence over talent, subservience over qualification, pollutes whatever it touches, brooks no opposition, and tolerates no rival. Sooner or later ambition, the concomitant of power, will rise and, like a mighty torrent, rush forward to autocracy, never looking back, but ever forward to greater conquests. Ambition is but the avaricious product of power, the evil shadow of aspiration.

The French Parliament possessed rights which restrained kings for a time, but with the advent of Louis XIV, the greatest of French tyrants, the power of Parliament was suspended, and with it died the liberty of the French people. Charles V of Spain could never have become the heartless tyrant he was had it not been for the power lodged in his more conscientious and humane predecessors by a confiding and trustful people. For centuries the advocates of freedom throughout the world pointed with exultant pride to the liberties of the Roman people; the glories of their rule were exploited throughout the confines of civilization; but ambition coveted power, and power was confided by the many to the few, and the Roman Senate Chamber, the ancient arena of freedom, became the battle ground of contending tyrants in their conflict for power.

History may repeat itself, and it is safer to eliminate the evil than to permit its presence, encourage its growth, and take the chances of escaping its ever-present dangers. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This power as it is now lodged in the hands of the Executive is too great to be confided to any man; the security of government is endangered, the freedom of legislation is imperiled, the economy of administration jeopardized, and the liberties of the people menaced.

Transfer to the people the patronage now vested in the President and posterity to the remotest generation, as it basks in the beneficence and wisdom of a never-dying Republic, will shout our praise and acclaim our deed. Then will the Republic be in truth a government for the people, of the people, and by the people, and the petty men who do now bestride our paths as appointees of power will be known no more forever. The power of the people must expand and grow, as the power of rulers must dwindle and die, for the voice of the people is the voice of God. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the minority of this House has, very early in the action, assumed the rôle of critic. Of course, we expect your criticism. I believe the distinguished ex-Speaker of the House stated that it was the function of the minority to criticize the majority. It is the function of the minority, if possible, to prevent the passage of bad legislation by the majority, but in all legislative bodies, where each and every man is endeavoring to do his full duty, criticism should be just, criticism should be fair, and the criticism should be wise and should be made with a full and complete knowledge of the subject criticized. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] in his criticism of the statement of the Democrats that they had reduced the expenses of this House, said that, as a matter of fact, the names were still upon the roll. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that if he will bide his time and be patient the people who are now, and have been for sometime, filling these places created by his own party, will be removed, and when the committee comes to make its final report with full knowledge of the facts the Democratic Party of this House will carry out to the letter what it said it would do and reduce the expenses $182,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated, and I am glad he is now in the Chamber, in a speech which he made on April 25, that these expenses have been reduced only in the Democratic caucus and not on the pay rolls of the House. The gentleman, I think, spoke then a little too early. It is utterly impossible for a new administration at once, without serious injury to the efficiency of the House, to immediately carry into effect a complete change in the employees of the House. And even if we did not intend to cut off any useless employee or in any way reform the service of the House, it would be impossible absolutely to change every employee of the House in one day or in one week or in one month.

If the Members of that side of the House will only be patient for awhile we will show them whether or not we will make good our pledges. If we do not, then we ought to be criticized, and I will help do it; but if we do make our promises good, then that side of the House should be fair enough to give us credit for what we have done. When I first came to Congress I made a fight on this very question. I fought the extra month's pay for employees of the House and Senate, and I am pleased with the action of my party when it cuts off these useless employees and this extra month's pay. Both are petty graft and a useless squandering of the people's money.

Mr. Chairman, the rôle of critic has been the chief part played by the Republican minority since this special session was called. They have not only criticized the Democratic majority of the House when it acted on its own initiative, but they have even criticized it for passing a bill proposed by a Republican President. What sort of a party have you gentlemen, anyway? There is a little bunch of you over there under the control of the distinguished ex-Speaker, who are as bitter toward the other little bunch who voted with the Democrats and the Republican President as you are toward the Democrats. What has become of the insurgents? Absolutely gone over to Mr. CANNON. When he was Speaker, you abused him and his policies. Now you are following wherever he leads. He has become in fact your leader. The man you elected minority leader is not your leader except in name.

Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the House and the country to the character of leadership the minority would have if he were really the leader in fact as he is in name. From the very first he began to use such adjectives as "silly" and "foolish," idiotic," and such phrases as "stupid ignorance" and "I did not expect any better from that side of the House." He at the very beginning seemed to think that great leadership could be accomplished by such denunciation and by the use of adjectives and not by argument and ideas. He at once assumed the rôle of critic and of Sir Oracle of the House. He should investigate more and talk less.

Let us now examine some of his criticisms of the Democratic free-list bill and see whether his criticism was just or unjust.

On April 26 the elected leader of the Republican minority made a speech in which, as shown on page 603 of the RECORD, he used this language:

> What are agricultural implements? I await the answer of any of the distinguished gentlemen in this House who claim to be the farmer's friend. What are agricultural implements? [Applause on the Republican side.] The bill says "All other agricultural implements, of any kind or description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts."
>
> What are agricultural implements? Do they include horticultural implements? Do they include market-garden implements? I suppose every one believes that a mowing machine is an agricultural implement; but is a wheelbarrow?

Then again he says:

> I can not run my farm without an ax. Can you? Are axes agricultural implements? Are they to come free?

Then this colloquy occurs:

> Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman——
>
> Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman for information.
>
> Mr. STANLEY. I am not surprised that the agriculturist from Chicago is pining to know what an agricultural implement is.
>
> Mr. MANN. I am.
>
> Mr. STANLEY. I do not think it a matter of satire. I think it is a demonstration of candid ignorance.
>
> Mr. MANN. That is right. Why does not the gentleman give me the information?
>
> Mr. STANLEY. An agricultural implement, generally speaking, is an implement used in tilling the soil, whether you are raising a potato or raising an ear of corn. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, if this criticism is just and wise, then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] should have indulged in it. If it is a fact, as he states, that this is loose language and will let in vastly more than was intended, then the Democratic Ways and Means Committee have made an error in using such language, because it may impair the revenue of the Government and bring about a condition not contemplated by the Ways and Means Committee. If such is the case, then the gentleman is a wise legislator. If such is not the case, then the gentleman from Illinois, to use his own expression, is "unwise" and "does not know what he is talking about"; and as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] "it is a demonstration of candid ignorance." This is a charitable construction to place upon the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois, for if he knew better and then took such a position, he is, to say the least of it, very unfair.

The gentleman from Illinois shows a complete ignorance of the authorities in the construction of tariff statutes. A little investigation on his part would have saved him from such error. Pope, in his essay on criticism, says:

> 'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
> Appear in writing or in judging ill.
> But of the two, less dangerous is the offense
> To weary our patience than mislead our sense.

It is pardonable for the gentleman from Illinois, as he often does, to weary our patience, but how can we pardon him for attempting to mislead our sense. He seems to have misled his own party, for they applauded his criticism very loudly.

This is the language which he so harshly criticizes:

> And all other agricultural implements, of any kind and description, whether specifically mentioned or not.

This language seems very broad in terms, and a careless critic like the gentleman from Illinois is likely to be misled into the belief that saws, pumps, chains, wheelbarrows, and so forth, ad infinitum, might come in free of duty. I will say that I would like to see all of these implements free, but let us examine the decisions a moment to see whether this is true or not.

I call the attention of the committee to a cardinal rule of construction. It was laid down for the first time by Judge Marshall, when he was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, for the construction of statutes generally, and the courts, following this rule in construing statutes of this character, have construed them against the contention of the gentleman from Illinois. The general rule laid down by Judge Marshall was that where two statutes were apparently in conflict the statute that mentions a matter eo nomine should prevail over a statute that refers to the same matter in general terms, although broad enough to cover the matter in the statute which mentions the matter eo nomine. The gentleman from Illinois, in his criticism of this bill, certainly had not investigated the decisions of the Supreme Court and the late decisions of the other courts. If he had, he could not have made this statement. He asks this question:

> What are agricultural implements? I await the answer of any distinguished gentlemen in this House who claim to be the farmers' friends. What are agricultural implements?

And then he says:

> Every day the Customs Court is now deciding questions of great importance with reference to the meaning of a law which endeavors to be very technical and very particular, but under the provisions of this bill, if it becomes a law, there will be an army of lawyers and importers and agents endeavoring to ascertain what it means.

I thought at first that perhaps the Ways and Means Committee had made a mistake in writing in this bill the language:

> Of any kind and description.

But in investigating the question, I find that my confidence in the ability of the gentleman from Illinois is greatly on the wane. He was simply talking, and, to use an expression of the late Judge De Armond, of Missouri, he was "simply ranting, and not reasoning."

Now, we are all familiar with the fact that the general rule is laid down that in the importation of articles the statute is always construed favorably for the importer and against the Government. But the first well-considered case directly in point, to which I want to call your attention, is Movius v. Arthur (95 U. S., p. 154). The court, in discussing the construction of revenue statutes apparently in conflict, held that the general term shall yield to the specific, and this is the language of the court:

> It is a general rule in the construction of revenue statutes that specific provisions for duties on a particular article are not repealed or affected by the general words of subsequent statutes, although the language is sufficiently broad to cover the article.

That is a cardinal rule of construction, namely, that though the general provisions of the statute may be broad enough to cover the article, if the article is mentioned by name anywhere else in the tariff bill, the succeeding statute does not affect that article by name, although the subsequent provisions might be broad enough to cover it.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he had been aware of these decisions, could not have made that statement unless he was willing to willfully deceive the House, and I do not intend to say that the gentleman would willfully deceive anybody. So we must attribute it to the fact that it was ignorance on his part of the law and not the fact that he intended to willfully mislead us.

Now, let us see what else he says about it. In speaking of saws, he wanted to know if a saw was an agricultural implement. Why, gentlemen of the committee, it is immaterial whether it is or whether it is not. It can not come in under this farmers' free-list bill, even though one of its uses might be that of an agricultural implement. As a matter of fact, if saws were not mentioned eo nomine in the Payne bill, but a general clause for carpenters' tools instead had been adopted placing a duty upon them, saws would be classified as carpenters' tools, because this is their principal use.

But it is not material to this discussion to determine to which class a saw properly belongs, because in another section in the Payne-Aldrich bill saws of all kinds are mentioned by name, and under all the decisions this fixes the status of saws. You can not repeal a clause of the Payne-Aldrich bill or change the status of an article mentioned therein unless you mention it by name or mention in the amendment the article whose status is to be changed; so the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not a just one against the Ways and Means Committee, because the law and the decisions of the courts, without a single dissenting opinion, are at variance with the statement of the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause on the Democratic side.] His quarrel, then, is with the Supreme Court and with the other courts of the country, and is not with the Democratic Ways and Means Committee.

Why, he wanted to know about trace chains and wheelbarrows and various and sundry other articles, and asked whether they were agricultural implements or not. He wanted to know whether a pruning knife was an agricultural implement, and he wanted to know whether horticultural tools were agricultural implements or not. It is immaterial whether they are classed as agricultural implements or not because in other sections of the Payne-Aldrich bill all of these articles are mentioned by name, and it is utterly impossible for any man to reach the conclusion that he reaches, under the decisions of the courts that they might come in free, unless for the purpose of deliberately trying to deceive the country and place the Democratic Party in a false light.

I am not going to read all of these decisions, but this is a general rule laid down in Morgan's Digest of the United States Tariff and Customs Laws, published in 1895, eighth edition, on page 326:

It is a well-settled rule that general legislation must give way to special legislation on the same subject, whether the provisions are found in the same statute or in different statutes; and general provisions must be interpreted so as to embrace only cases to which the special provisions are not applicable, although the general provisions may be sufficiently broad to comprehend articles under the special provisions. And the rule applies as well to statutes reducing duties as to those increasing them.

Now, in support of that proposition of law I want to invite the attention of the committee briefly to the case of Arthur v. Labey (96 U. S., p. 112), where the court construes a clause similar to this—a clause exactly like this. This is the rule laid down by the court in that decision:

The rule, that for the purpose of the tariff laws, the commercial designation of an article among traders and importers when clearly established fixes its character and that when Congress has designated an article by a specific name and imposed a duty upon it, general terms in a subsequent act or a later part of the same act, although sufficiently broad to comprehend such article, are not applicable to it and are not deprived of their application by the expression "not otherwise provided for." * * * A specific designation eo nomine must prevail over the general words and a commercial designation is the standard by which the dutiable character of the article is fixed.

And on page 117 of this case the court specifically affirms the doctrine in Movius v. Arthur.

Every article that the gentleman from Illinois criticises the bill for is mentioned by name in some other clause in the Payne-Aldrich bill and can not be affected by this farmers' free-list bill. And yet he would have the country believe that it was carelessly prepared.

Then you may ask, Why should you put it in? It is necessary, as you will conclude if you read the decisions of the court on this question. It is necessary that you have some sort of a shotgun clause, because in the rapidly developing inventions in machinery for certain specific purposes frequently a machine that is doing a certain work to-day will be completely replaced by a different one to-morrow. Therefore, in order that the revenues of the Government may not be impaired they have put these clauses in for the purpose of embracing articles of a certain specific kind that do a specific thing.

In addition to that, if you intend to put on the free list articles to be used by a certain class of people, and if some invention or some great addition to an agricultural implement should be made it would be necessary, if it might be classed as belonging in some other schedule in the bill, and if you desire to be sure to include it in the free-list bill, that you have a general clause in order that the agricultural implements may be sure to come in free—that is to say, every agricultural implement not specifically mentioned in some other clause in the Payne-Aldrich bill—would fall under this general provision of the farmers' free-list bill and not under any other general provision of some other clause of the Payne-Aldrich bill, although broad enough to cover it. This is the reason for this general clause in this free-list bill, and is the reason why the Democratic Ways and Means Committee put it in.

Now, without reading them, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a few decisions of the Supreme Court on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, without reading them, certain decisions of the court. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The decisions referred to are as follows:

The rule that an article, dutiable by its specific designation, will not be affected by the general words of the same or another statute, which would otherwise embrace it, applies as well to statutes reducing duties as to those increasing them. This rule applies both to statutes reducing and to statutes increasing duties. (Arthur v. Rheims, 96 U. S., 143.)

When an article is designated in a tariff act by a specific name, and a duty imposed upon it by such name, general terms in a later part of the same act, although sufficiently broad to comprehend such article, are not applicable to it. (Robertson v. Glendenning, 132 U. S., 158, Chief Justice Fuller delivering the opinion.)

Under the principles laid down in Arthur v. Morrison, Arthur v. Labey, and Arthur v. Unkart, the specific designation should prevail, and the judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the excess of duties paid by him was right and must be affirmed. (Arthur v. Zimmerman, 96 U. S., 124.)

In cases of doubt in the construction of a customs act courts resolve the doubt in favor of the importer. * * * Where a customs act imposes a duty upon an article by a specific name, general terms in the act, though sufficiently broad to cover it, are not applicable to it. * * * The article will be classified by its specific designation rather than under a general description. (American Net & Twine Co. v. Worthington, 141 U. S., 468; Brown, Justice.)

The settled rule of statutory construction is that general legislation must give way to special legislation on the same subject whether the provisions are found in the same statute or in different statutes, and general provisions must be interpreted so as to embrace only cases to which special provisions are not applicable.

Where a duty is imposed upon an article by a specific name this will determine its classification, although the article may be included in other words of general description in another part of the same act. (Arnold v. U. S., p. 495, vol. 147, 51 Fed. Rep.; Magone, collector, v. King et al., p. 525.)

The case falls within the general rule that, where a tariff act imposes a duty on an article by a specific name or description, general terms in the act, though embracing it broadly, are not applicable to it; the general must give way to the particular. (Brister et al. v. U. S., 59 Fed. Rep., 452.)

Mr. SISSON. All of these decisions are perfectly clear, and there is a line of decisions too numerous to quote or to even cite, which are at complete variance with the position, argument, and conclusions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] states that this bill is sectional. I regret that anybody should say anything in this country about sections. I do not believe that the people of this country are thinking now so much about the sections from which people come as about an effort to serve the whole people regardless of section. [Applause.] The gentleman was not fair in his statement to this committee when he said that the southern cotton farmer was benefited to the amount of $6,877,667, whereas the people of the North got practically nothing.

Why did not my friend state that only about one-third, or a little less than one-third of the farmers of the United States live in the South? Does he understand that only about one-third of the corn and grain is produced in the South? Did he not know that all of the sacks in which corn and wheat are sacked go into the great Middle West and the mighty West beyond? Did he not know that burlaps and sackings and articles of that kind and character were put on the free list in order that the northern and western farmer might be compensated for the fact that some of his articles were placed upon the free list? Why did not the gentleman state that in his speech? Because I presume he expects to make some political capital out of it without stating the truth in it. Why did not the gentleman tell the whole truth when he was making his speech, and why did he not tell you that the Treasury Department's statement shows—he claimed to be reading from a statement of the Treasury Department—that cotton bagging only paid duties amounting to $99,033, while on sacks the duty was $970,715.

Now, as to burlaps, I want to tell you that very little, if indeed any, cotton bagging is made out of burlap of the kind and character mentioned here; but burlaps, which are used by the western farmers and by the farmers of the Middle West, paid duties to the amount of $5,807,919, and we gave up that amount to the western and middle western farmers and the farmers of the North. Why did he not state that when he was stating the facts to you? [Applause on the Democratic side.] If he wanted to be fair, why did he not tell you that the smallest item, less than $100,000, was the item on bagging and ties. Yet he was unfair enough to state that the Ways and Means Committee was bringing in a sectional bill. If I were disposed to be of the kind that my distinguished friend is, I could in turn say that it is a sectional bill, because you are giving the northern and the western farmers the largest proportion and the biggest end of the proposition. I would not mention Mason and Dixon's line if my friend from Illinois had not done so, but two-thirds of the farmers of the country live north of Mason and Dixon's line, and they get seven or eight times as much of the benefit of this $6,000,000 as the farmers of the South do. So, I say, there is no sectionalism in the bill favorable to the South. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is evident that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], if he intended to be truthful and fair, did not know what he was talking about. He confuses "jute bagging" with "burlap." Everyone will concede that free "bagging" will be to the advantage of the southern cotton farmer. But free admission of "burlap" will not only be of no help to the southern cotton farmer, but if anything will be to his disadvantage.

Burlap is not used by the cotton farmer. It is used for making burlap bags and for baling manufactured fabrics. Jute "bagging," used for baling cotton, is a much coarser article than "burlap." Burlap is used for sacking cement and grain and by manufacturers to cover different kinds of bales of cloth. Nearly all of this is used in the North by northern manufacturers and by northern and western farmers. None is used or manufactured in the South. Therefore, the South is not interested in "burlap," but in "jute bagging."

I may say to the gentleman, however, that if the South were disposed to complain, that this would be a just ground for complaint. It is estimated that about 350,000 bales of cotton are made up in this country into a very coarse cotton goods known as osnaburgs. One of the principal uses of osnaburg is for sacking grain and cement, so free burlap is brought into direct competition with osnaburg, a southern product. This will not help the southern farmer. It will not hurt him, but it will tend to hurt our southern cotton mills that are making osnaburgs.

In sacking cement osnaburg is now chiefly used, but free burlap means that cement will be sacked in burlap. This is only one of many ways in which burlap may take the place of cotton.

If this bill had been prepared with a view to southern interests, it would not have made burlaps free. If you want to benefit the South, put the duty so high on burlap that no American can afford to import burlap, and we will force the price of osnaburg up and at the same time increase the price of cotton. An examination of the figures showing the importations will show how utterly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] is in error. In 1910 there was imported into the United States $699,940 worth of jute bagging for covering cotton.

In 1910 there was imported into the United States $20,351,810.46 worth of burlap for sacking grain, corn, wheat, oats, flour, salt, coal, cement, and for oilcloth, upholstering, and other purposes. Twenty millions for the North and West and less than $700,000 for the South, and yet the gentleman says it is sectional.

The tariff tax paid on bagging for covering cotton in 1910 was $99,033.28. The tariff tax on burlap for the same year for sacking corn, wheat, oats, coal, and so forth, was $5,371,427.80. The North and West get about 50 times as much out of this item in this bill as the South gets. Brother PRINCE, how is this for sectionalism? The South gets one dollar and you get fifty, and yet you complain about the amount the South gets out of the bill. You are hard to please; you are too selfish. It was not intended to be a sectional bill. It was intended to give the western farmer cheap sacks and cheap binding twine. It was intended to give to the farmer of the South cheap bagging and cheap ties and to deal with the farmers all over this country exactly alike; and it would have been a sectional bill if the Ways and Means Committee had not done exactly what they did do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It has also been stated that these articles are produced or manufactured, the majority of them, in the North. That is true. I do not believe I overstate the case when I say that four-fifths of all our manufactured articles come from the North. You of the North are a manufacturing people. You are peculiarly fortunate in that sense; but in this instance it just happens, gentlemen of the committee, that there are a number of bagging factories in the South. There are manufactories engaged in the business of making cotton ties. They make over $1,000,000 worth of bagging, and I am not able to state the exact number of ties, but a great many ties are manufactured in the South by southern manufacturers. As a matter of fact, the greater portion of bagging and ties are manufactured in the North, and so is the greater portion of nearly all the manufactures that enter into every southern home manufactured in the North. We are your patrons and your customers; but this bill, in giving to the southern cotton farmer free bagging and ties, is only doing that simple justice that ought to be done if you give free sacks and free binding twine and free wire for the farmers out West.

For over 100 years the southern people have been engaged in raising cotton. Cotton is the one commodity produced in the United States which always brings into our banks and into our Treasury pure gold. It has been the enormous production of the cotton fields of the South that has made the balance of trade in our favor for over 50 years.

If you take away from our international trade that vast crop which this last year with the seed amounted to something like a billion dollars—over $800,000,000 worth of raw cotton, and of that $800,000,000 over $400,000,000 of it was sold to one country alone—if you were to take out of the business of the United States this great gold producer for the Treasury and banks of this country, it would be a terrible calamity on the American people.

Notwithstanding this fact, these toiling and patient farmers in the South without complaint have had no protection from any source. They have not asked any protection; they only ask a fair, square deal at the hands of the Government, and thank God the time is coming when the people of Maine, of New Hampshire, of Vermont, of Rhode Island, of Connecticut, of Illinois, and all the great States will be willing to deal with these questions irrespective of what State is affected, whatever may be the temper of some of the northern and southern politicians. The business interests of this country have got tired of this talk of sectionalism, and we ought to begin to legislate irrespective of congressional districts. [Applause.]

But it is also said, and was said on the floor of the House, that the southern cotton farmer got pay for his bagging and ties, that the cotton was weighed on the scales, and that the farmer was paid for the gross weight. That was formerly true, that the cotton was weighed and they would deduct the tare; but it created so much trouble before the war that the result was that the business men throughout the country figured a certain amount of tare on a bale of cotton, and then made the quotations less the tare.

I shall not discuss the history of the matter nor how it came to be adopted, but state as a fact that the Liverpool Exchange, the New York Exchange, and the Cotton Exchange in New Orleans, which makes the price of all cotton, deducts 6 per cent, or 30 pounds, from the gross weight of every bale of cotton, a standard bale being 500 pounds. Every cotton producer will tell you that the bagging and ties on a bale of cotton will only weigh from 19 to 22 pounds. Therefore when you take the tare off you will defraud the farmer, if he has a 500-pound bale, of 9 to 11 pounds of cotton.

Now, it may be curious to some people to know how it is done. In making up the quotation they send out for cotton they figure about 60 points for tare; for example, if cotton was worth 12.60 the quotations for cotton would be 12 cents, because net cotton only is paid for. A net price is given for the cotton so that the bagging and the ties are not included. It is only necessary for gentlemen who doubt this statement to look at the rules of the cotton exchanges, and they will find that they specifically provide for the 6 per cent tare. It is perfectly apparent that the tare is figured out and the farmer himself loses the weight of the bagging and ties and does not receive pay for them. So, if gentlemen understand thoroughly the proposition, the statement would not be made here that the southern farmer gets pay for his bagging and ties when he sells his cotton and therefore makes a profit, and that for this reason he did not pay the tariff and the duty should remain.

There was a learned Senator in the other Chamber last year who asserted the proposition on the floor of the Senate, and it took a great deal of discussion to convince him that it was not true. It is just like this tariff business. The farmer pays it without knowing when or how.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal said about the source of revenue, if you lost practically $10,000,000 by this farmers' free-list bill. Of course the first thing that every government ought to do, or that those connected with the Government and having charge of legislation ought to do, is to run the Government at the very lowest figure possible to obtain efficient government. They ought to destroy every useless office. They ought to get the Government down as nearly as possible to a business basis, and then, when that is done, raise only just enough revenue to run the Government on this basis.

The present condition is a peculiar one because, to a large extent, the expenses of this Government have been fixed by a party that has gone out of power. It was fixed by a House—and that is one of the evils of the Federal Constitution which ought to be remedied—that was repudiated at the polls last November and which came back here in December and for three months legislated for a constituency that has repudiated it.

This is said in no partisan sense, because as the political wheels of fortune turn it may roll around that this side of the House may be repudiated; but it would be equally wrong for this side of the House to legislate after they had been repudiated at the polls. However, the last House, or a large part of them, having no responsibility to a constituency, were permitted and did vote on these bills and did fix the expenses of the Government, so that it is almost impossible for this Democratic House to reduce the expenses of the Government, because so many fixed charges have been created by the last Republican House and Senate which must be paid out of the Treasury. It is now incumbent on the majority in the House to be sure that in dealing with the tariff and the revenues it gets enough money to run the Government. That is our highest duty, because as Democrats we believe in levying a tariff only for revenue, but we believe in levying enough tariff to get enough revenue. The Government must meet promptly her every obligation. Therefore it is necessary that a good deal of care be used in changing these schedules. I say this not because I have any sort of patience with this infamous doctrine of protection, which is so hateful to me, but with the necessities of the Government as they are to-day the Democrats must raise enough revenue, though they are compelled to permit an evil which has done more to corrupt public men and done more to send vicious men to this Capitol looking to their special interests, and more to induce capital to buy voters to send men to Congress, than all of the other influences combined. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If a man has built up his business behind certain protection, he says that he must have his protection or his business is destroyed, and Republicans levy tribute then upon his business, stating that he may have it protected and cared for through them.

You need not endeavor to frighten me by calling me a free trader. I am not frightened with the term, but I am dealing with a condition and not with a theory. If I had the making of the law, I certainly would not write the Constitution as it is now written with reference to revenue, but the fathers who made this Republic were afraid that they would not get Members to come to Congress; they were afraid it would not be ratified and held together, and they devised this iniquitous system of raising revenue, so that the people would not know when they paid it. I would not be so much opposed to this tariff if, as a matter of fact, the increased price, because of the duties on articles on the dutiable list, went into the Treasury. I would not say a word, because the Government would then get the benefit of it, but the thing that is so iniquitous is that during the Dingley tariff—and I have not had the opportunity to investigate the question so far as the Payne bill is concerned, but it is even worse under it—I found that the tax was small compared to the enormous tribute which we pay the protected industries. When during the debate on the Payne bill I stated the amount of tribute, some of my Democratic colleagues said that I had overstated it. However, a distinguished Senator at the other end of the Capitol, the late lamented Senator Dolliver, in one of the best tariff speeches that I heard during the last session of Congress, arrived at the same conclusion. I do not think that the distinguished Senator ever saw the speech that I made on the question, but I was very much gratified to see that I was confirmed by one so learned as the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

Let me state the facts again for your consideration in order that you may see how wicked and iniquitous this present tariff system is. We got, in 1905, the last official statistics that I have examined, about three hundred and odd millions of dollars from impost or tariff taxes. During that year the total consumption was something like $14,000,000,000. The average duty was about 45 cents and a fraction, so that if the Dingley tariff was a scientific bill, if the Dingley tariff was a tariff which was made in accordance with scientific rules and gave the protection which its friends say was needed, and if the men on this side of the tariff wall took advantage of that protection, the people paid over and above what they ought to have paid to the manufacturers who are engaged in producing the four thousand and odd articles on the dutiable list the enormous sum of something like $4,000,000,000 over and above the world's price for these articles as a net profit. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When I made this statement here my friends said I was mistaken, and yet Senator Dolliver made that statement on the floor of the Senate, that it amounted to about $4,000,000,000 more than the 90,000,000 American people ought to pay. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This is the enormous profit which you put into private hands through the arm of the Government. To that we object seriously. Mr. Gladstone, when he made an assault upon the protected interests of England, at first had a terrible struggle, because the protected industries in England claimed that a low duty or free trade would destroy them; that there would be smokeless factories; that there would be men out of employment; and that all of the English people would be put in a condition of dire distress. Yet he went before the people with the simple statement:

I will not with my vote and with my consent give one Englishman an advantage over another Englishman. I will not permit one Englishman by right of a special privilege from the Government to extract from the pockets of another Englishman a tribute not for the Government, but as a private profit.

Therefore he advocated a tariff which would only tax the noncompetitive articles, so that the increased price would go into the treasury of England. It was only a short time after this policy went into effect until the English fleet was in every sea, until the mighty leviathans of the deep bore the products of the English factories to all the world and brought back the raw materials which has made England to-day the strong and powerful nation that she is, and terrorizes the Republicans when they begin to think about being put in competition with her. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But since we have a condition and not a theory to deal with, it is absolutely necessary that we raise the revenue to run this Government. The Republicans want to know where we are going to get the revenue. Under the present régime you tax beer, whisky, and playing cards. I introduced a bill in the last session of Congress, but for a reason which I will not state now that bill did not get out of the Committee on Ways and Means. I have introduced the same bill this session. It is a bill to put an internal-revenue tax upon the manufacture and sale of all pistols, dirk knives, sword canes, and cartridges of all kinds and character. Now, you tax whisky and playing cards. Do not pistols, cards, and whisky go together? Ought not they to be dealt with in the same manner? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The number of pistols sold in the United States is something like 500,000 annually. I would like to ask this question: Why should we not place a tax upon these articles? Will some gentleman rise in his seat and tell for what good purpose a pistol is made?

Why should not the men engaged in the infamous business of manufacturing deadly weapons and inducing our boys to purchase them pay some of the expense of running the Government? The man who manufactures liquor is denounced in pulpit and press because of the business he is engaged in. The retailer of intoxicating liquors is denounced as an outcast. They are both required to pay an internal-revenue tax because their business tends to evil and not good. When men buy liquor they are buying that which causes them harm, not good. Yet a saloon would rarely be stained with human blood if the man drinking intoxicating liquor did not have in his pocket a concealed weapon. The liquor, in the absence of the deadly weapon, might cause men to get into broils and fisticuffs, but rarely would there be blood shed. But the liquor fires up men's blood and causes the quarrel, and then, armed with a deadly weapon, the quarrel ends in a tragedy.

If all the tears that these manufacturers of deadly weapons have been directly the cause of could be collected together, they would produce a mighty river of sorrow. If all the groans they have caused could be concentrated into one sound, it would shake the universe with agony. If the blood they have caused to be shed could be seen together, it would make a crimson ocean. If the widows and orphans which they have made could be gathered together, it would make an army that no man could number. If all the felons that they have caused could be gathered into one place of confinement, it would convert the earth into one vast prison. If every gallows they have caused to be erected could be seen together, it would make a mighty monument of horror. If all they have cost the people of the earth could be converted into food and clothing, there would be no more want, hunger, or poverty.

These men engaged in the manufacture of these deadly weapons ought to be looked upon with more disrespect than men engaged in almost any other business. Why should it be legalized? This is a civilized country. No savage red man now roams our fields nor lurks in the alleys of our cities. No wild beasts infest our fair country. There is no reason why this business should be fostered. They supply the means which cause murderous men of civilization to be more dreaded than the savage red man or wild beast. These manufacturers of pistols, dirks, and stilettos are exercising their ingenuity to make customers for their deadly wares. They fill our newspapers and magazines with attractive advertisements to induce our boys to buy pistols that produce murderers.

Why not tax them? What good reason can we give why they should not be taxed? Whisky, cards, and pistols go together. Why not tax them together? Whisky and cards would be less harmful if there were no concealed weapons. Whisky now bears its burden of internal revenue; playing cards are also taxed. Whisky can be put to good uses. Cards may be used in innocent social amusements, but to what good use can a pistol or a dirk or a stiletto be put? They are made to kill human beings; not in the open, not to give a fair chance and equal opportunity, but to cowardly take your fellow man unawares and deprive him of his life. Why should men carry them except for this reason? There can be no other.

Let us tax pistols, not plows. [Applause.]

Let us tax dirk knives, not disk harrows. [Applause.]

Let us tax pistol cartridges, not corn planters. [Applause.]

If men will engage in manufacturing pistols, dirks, stilettos, and other such weapons for sale, let them be compelled to pay the Government something when they do it. It is not the province of the United States Government to prevent their manufacture, but it is her right to levy a tax upon them to help pay the expenses of the Government, and it should be exercised at this time. Our Treasury needs the revenue. Let us get at least $2,000,000 by taxing this evil. It can not produce any evil, but a great good.

Too many of the great daily newspapers are owned and supported by the protected interests of the country, and they discourage any movement to raise revenue except through the tariff, which enables their masters to support them, to rob the people of more than $10 where the Government gets $1 in taxes. So to raise $2,000,000 by a tax upon deadly weapons and cartridges would cost the protected manufacturer $10,000,000 in profits, because you could then put a few necessities on the free list. They would rather let these men who manufacture deadly weapons and put them into the hands of the lawless for the express purpose of murdering American citizens continue in their aiding and abetting in all the homicides in the country than to give up the protection afforded by the collection of $2,000,000 of import duties. That is, when Congress assumes this attitude, it seems that they would make it cheap for men engaged in manufacturing deadly weapons by leaving the burden upon honest consumers, the men, women, children, widows, and orphans who toil, rather than tax these men who are engaged in manufacturing these deadly weapons.

The only people who are consulted, the only advice that comes to Congress, is from the rich. Congress is too far away from the people and too close to the interests. If all the good men in America who believe in placing a tax upon deadly weapons would write to their Congressmen and Senators the mail would be loaded down. Let every minister of the Gospel, of whatever faith or persuasion, every college professor, every schoolteacher, every banker, merchant, farmer, and all law-abiding people who love life and not death, who would dispense sunshine and not shadow, who would have the wine of joy and not the blood of sorrow to flow in our land, who would remove from the human eye a tear and from the heart a pang of pain be heard from in this land in the matter of taxing these deadly weapons manufactured and sold by these men engaged in this hellish business and there will be a unanimous voice in favor of it.

My own people are sometimes charged with being "pistol toters." [Applause and laughter.] We are also charged with putting too cheap a valuation on human life. Well, why do you make these things and sell them to us? Either stop making them or stop lecturing us. [Laughter.] If you are going to continue to manufacture them, then tax them along with cards and whisky and compel those who indulge the luxury to pay for it. You can get $2,500,000 or $3,000,000 of revenue from this source.

My distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] suggests another remedy. There is now a tax of 2 cents a pack on playing cards. Why not make it 10 cents? This would tax another business to an extent that the Government would derive some real benefit from.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. What would be the effect of your tax on pistols on marksmanship? Would that tend to discourage the practice of the noble art?

Mr. SISSON. I think so; and if the mark was a human being it would be well to stop the training. Our boys shoot too true now.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I hope the gentleman is not going to put me in the position of opposing his effort to tax pistols. There is a great deal being said in the various civilized countries of the world as to making the citizen soldiery capable of handling firearms and hitting the marks at which they aim. Would it have a tendency to discourage that?

Mr. SISSON. I am glad to know that my good friend is not opposed to my bill. Let us furnish them with rifles and not with pistols. Battles are won with rifles, not pistols.

Mr. SIMS. And if you are dealing with deadly weapons, do you not think you ought to do something with automobiles in the way of tax?

Mr. SISSON. I am glad my distinguished friend suggests automobiles in connection with deadly weapons. I am a country boy, and am now living in a small town, and I have done more dodging and ducking to keep out of the way of those things than all other dangers combined since I have been in Washington. I think the gentleman from Tennessee properly classes them as deadly weapons. They, too, would be a splendid subject for an internal-revenue tax.

AGRICULTURE.

Now, gentlemen, I shall not detain the committee longer. I want to say, in concluding my remarks, that whatever injures or tends to injure agriculture, whatever tends to destroy the prosperity of the farm, will absolutely destroy the prosperity of this country. No man questions that statement. This is why I am supporting this bill. Let us give farmers free tools to work with.

The great cities can not thrive, they can not live a single month, without the produce of the farm that is carried there to feed them. The great factories can not run without that produce. There is one business that always adds to the wealth of the world, and it is the only business that adds absolutely to the wealth of the world something that did not exist before. You may take, if you please, the iron in the bowels of the earth, and you may convert it into different shapes and into usable forms, but you have produced no more iron. You may go into the gold mines and into the silver mines and you can dig out the last ounce, but there is one business that men engage in by which they always, every year, add something to the wealth of the world without taking anything from it. You plant and you reap ten, twenty, yea one hundred fold of new wealth, wealth that did not exist before, and the world is richer thereby and no wealth has been used up. The farmer is the basis of all our civilization. Upon his broad shoulders rest all the balance of the human family. It is the duty of Congress to remove from these shoulders every burden that it can. Whether we live in the country or in the city our general prosperity will be advanced by advancing the interest of agriculture.

The farmer needs more education and training than any other class of people. It requires the highest degree of intellectual development to make a successful farmer. It is necessary that he understand how to improve his land by building it up with proper cultivation. To do this requires some scientific knowledge. Farm management, to be successful, requires good business training.

In order to bring about this result the Government should furnish him with all available information that it can secure from experiment and observation. Every effort should be made to make country life desirable. People have been deserting their farms because life has not been attractive to their boys and girls. They long for better social opportunities and more lucrative avocations. To prevent our farms being deserted we must bring about a condition different from the past. The country boy and girl must be given equal opportunities with those of the towns and cities. This can only be done by giving them good roads, good schools, and good churches. This will enable the farmer not only to get the products of his farm quickly and with less cost to market, but it will enable his family to enjoy the better opportunities to worship and his children better schools to attend. The successful management of the farm, the improvement of the farm, making country life desirable, filling the country with good schools and good churches, building good roads, so that the farmers may not only get their produce cheaply to market, but that they may also enjoy the opportunities of worship, that their children may attend school, and that they may come in larger numbers and increase the efficiency of the schools—in order that you may maintain this strong foundation of all life it is absolutely essential that every acre of land be made to produce the greatest amount during each given year. In addition to this, you must remove from his shoulders every unfair and unnecessary burden, so that farm life may be made as profitable as possible.

But under the system that has been in vogue under the system of taxation which has prevailed for 50 years the farmer has been the one man who has received no benefit, but all the burden from the system of taxation which you have put in operation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is utterly impossible to devise a plan—human ingenuity can not devise a plan—where you may enable men to get enormous prices for food products unless you make somebody else suffer. I believe the farmer is entitled to a fair and full remuneration for every day's labor that he puts on the farm. But he does not get that, for under this system of protection which you have instituted, under the special privileges which have grown up under your protective system, a few men have been able to get together and control the great food markets and fix the price to the farmer and then fix the price to the consumer, and thus hurt both.

Who is there that does not believe that the price of both cattle and meat to-day in the great cities is not absolutely fixed by the Beef Trust? Who does not know that in the fixing of the price of nearly all the necessities of life they are fixed either by monopolies or by trade agreements? I have sometimes had my doubts whether the Sherman Antitrust Act was a blessing. It has proven a complete failure, because it has not been enforced. It has been a mockery. Illegal combinations have gone merrily along with full knowledge of those who should prevent it. Even Presidents have condoned its violation. Law officers and courts stand dumb and silent before their masters and decline to prosecute. If the Federal courts of the country had been in hearty sympathy with the law, if the administrations had been heartily in sympathy with the prosecutions at the very beginning of the illegal combination of capital, they might have prevented that condition which to-day confronts us and which is gradually growing to be world-wide. In other words, they have so much power to-day by the vast combination of capital that it is extremely doubtful whether, if any party that comes into power should endeavor to lay a restraining hand upon their methods, it could prevent them by a single meeting of a single board of directors of one institution from deciding to close down an industry for the sole purpose of bringing about a condition that will place the laboring man out of employment; and then, when he is helpless, appeal to his hunger and to his wants, and by this method he is coerced and forced to go with the party which will restore trust control. Whether it be a Republican Party that endeavors to deal with the situation, or whether it be the Democratic Party that deals with the situation, whatever may be the party that may attempt to regulate and control them in that business, the question is whether the trusts will not be able to drive any party out of power that will endeavor to regulate them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is one of the great problems which the people of this age have to solve. It must be solved, of course, and I believe it will be. But it is no boy's task, it is no small day's work, that has to be done. We must not invade property rights. I do not believe, however, that property rights should prevail over the rights of man. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But we must have a safe preservation of property rights, because, as Mr. Calhoun has said, men who have the acquisitive desire will exercise that desire so long as they are safe in their property under the law. Therefore we must preserve property rights, but money should yield to man, and property should yield to the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Because property, business, machinery, all the marvelous and mighty mechanism of the industrial world, if properly used and conducted, and if their products are not controlled by selfish men, are a great and everlasting blessing to mankind; but there are many of these great institutions whose titanic power is equal to the ceaseless labor of a million slaves; and if the owners of these mighty machines, the owners of the great factories and industrial enterprises, the owners of the great transportation companies, if they are selfish and are unwilling to give to labor that opportunity, that right, that fair and just division of earnings, then it is absolutely necessary to the preservation of free government and to the happiness of mankind that the strong arm of the law be laid upon these great engines of oppression and that they be compelled to do right. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is not a particle of socialism in my make-up. I am just as far from socialism as I am from anarchy, but when these people with all their power are capable of producing so much misery and woe some means must be devised for their control, and whatever that may be, whatever the wisdom of man may devise to that end, I pledge my hand and my heart to the support of that measure. [Applause.] I hope this bill will pass the House. I hope it will pass the Senate. I trust it will be but the beginning of the solution of this great problem. I do not want to wait until the power of these oppressors becomes so strong and world-wide that one nation can not deal with them. If it gets to be an international affair, then God help the people! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, when I was a boy I read the story of the Riddle of the Sphinx. The King of Thebes had been annoyed for a long time by the sphinx that lived in the rocks near one of the roads through a mountain pass that his subjects were compelled to travel in getting into and out of his kingdom. The sphinx would ask each passer-by a riddle, and if he failed to answer it the sphinx would devour him. This caused great terror to the people and great distress to the king. At last the King of Thebes heard of Œdipus, a wise and good man, and he sent for him and asked him, "Can you deliver us from the terrible sphinx?" Œdipus said he would try. So he went out, and as usual the sphinx came and asked him a question. Those of you who are familiar with the story will recall the question:

What is it that in the morning walks on four legs, at noon walks on two, and in the evening walks on three?

Œdipus very promptly replied:

Man; when he is a child he walks on all fours, when he is a man he stands upright and walks on two legs, and when he is old and decrepit with age he walks with a stick, which makes the three legs.

With a terrible cry of agony, the sphinx threw herself over the precipice on the rocks beneath, and so the Thebans were relieved of the scourge.

Now, the sphinx in this country that has been feeding upon the American people is this gigantic Republican organization. For 50 years they have been juggling with the American farmer and the American laboring man, and at the elections the farmer and the laboring man have failed to answer the question aright, because you gentlemen on the other side have been able to deceive them. But education, training, and learning on the part of the people will finally enable them through their Representatives to answer correctly this riddle of the tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When they do that, the mighty sphinx, the Republican Party, will cry aloud as it is cast from the precipice of power down upon the rocks of destruction below. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.] My friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has just given a perfect description of how this sphinx is organized and how dangerous it is to the liberty and welfare of the American people. I commend his remarks to all patriotic Americans who do not believe in the growing despotism of this trust-controlled Republican sphinx. May the Lord deliver us from this terrible monster. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, when the Canadian reciprocity bill made its appearance at the last session of Congress I believed it to be an entering wedge for the destruction of the policy of protection to American industry and voted against it. When it returned to the present session of Congress, under Democratic auspices, my original estimate of its ultimate effect was not changed, and I again voted against it. While its purpose appeared to have been benevolent, I believed it to be wrong in policy and calculated to harm both the farmer and the industrialist of this country. If annexation were coupled with reciprocity, the situation would be different, but without annexation reciprocity with Canada means a deflection of the population of the United States, unnecessary concessions to Canada and Europe, and a reduction in the wage-earning power in the United States. That undue concessions are being made to Canada would appear from the failure of anyone advocating reciprocity to propose similar terms to Mexico, which, being along our southern border, would seem to be entitled to as much consideration at our generous hands as "the fair sister to the north." While we are throwing bouquets at Canada and are preaching the uplift, it is well to remember that we are maintaining an entirely different and wholly unaltruistic attitude to a sister country along the southern border.

GIVING SOMETHING FOR NOTHING.

In the reciprocity bill we have actually given away in an exchange of revenue approximately $5,000,000 per annum, which would be just as serviceable to industry in the United States as it will be to Canada or to England, with which Canada is in sympathetic touch. And there is no apparent reason upon the Republican side for this outburst of generosity save that of altruism and the possible desire to obtain free wood pulp for the United States, a desideratum which the Canadian ministers in their letter to the Secretary of State, expressly if not emphatically, reserved to the Canadian Provinces.

Assuming the reciprocity bill passes, carrying with it the loss of trade and Federal revenue, the Democratic Party now proposes to further reduce the revenue and yet run the Government by giving effect to reciprocity in a free-trade bill presumed to be in the interest of the farmer, but especially and directly designed to benefit cotton planters, since more than half the $10,000,000 of revenue which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr.

UNDERWOOD] says is to be saved the farmer in duty upon imports, is levied against bagging for cotton, sacks, burlaps, and so forth, and cotton ties. I can not agree that either measure is in the interest of the farmer or the cotton planter, or the industrialist, and I shall vote against this properly labeled free-trade wedge with the same sincerity and earnestness that I voted against the entering wedge of reciprocity.

MAKING A CAT'S-PAW OF THE FARMER.

Throughout this whole discussion it has been apparent that the American farmer was to be made the cat's-paw of the Democratic propaganda. He has been held aloof from his co-worker in the mill and his best customer in the city, and has been made to believe he would be the sole victim of reciprocity, as the attempt is now being made to have him believe he will be a beneficiary of the so-called farmers' free list. The oft-heard cry of monopoly and exorbitant profits in the mills has been repeated in this discussion to a fulsome degree, and nowhere have our Democratic orators taken into account the wages involved in the recent wonderful progress of the Nation under the protective system, which it now seems to be the business of every competitive nation, aided by the Democratic Party, to destroy.

Democrats have taken the reins in this House and they tell us they propose to improve upon the protective system, not by razing customhouses as of old, nor even by taxing incomes quite so vigorously as hitherto proposed, but by "going gently," keeping the customhouses, cutting down the expenses as well as the revenues, and placing a reduced tax upon incomes. And all of this is to be done in the interest of the American farmer, who is expected to continue as prosperous as ever and to secure the same high prices from wage earners out of work, as he was able to obtain from wage earners employed under a protective system. Well, we have had two instances of Democratic effort to run the Government. The first was under James Buchanan, when they bonded the Government for $40,000,000, and the second and crucial test was under Grover Cleveland, when, subsequent to 1894, they were forced to issue bonds to the extent of $262,000,000 to pull the country out of the financial hole into which they had plunged it. They may be wiser now than they were then. The proof of the pudding lies in the eating of it.

REMINDER OF DEMOCRATIC TIMES.

If the American farmer would be as wise to his true interests, as I believe he will be after reciprocity and free trade have been imposed upon him by a Democratic House, he will make a few comparisons now, as those of us who have good memories and are not over-educated in populistic theories are making them in the great cities, as between that interesting former period of Democratic control and the interesting period which is now promised under the new system for which the Democratic Party will be responsible.

There is no essential difference in the problems and pretenses of the Democratic Party of 1893 and those of the present, so that it is fair to recall some of the disasters that were wrought upon the entire country—business man, farmer, and workingman alike—by the experiments put into effect in 1894. I have before me now, prepared by one of the great mercantile agencies of the country—Dun & Co.—a comparative list of mercantile and banking failures and of railroad receiverships for a long period of years. In 1893, when the Democrats in their last attempt to materialize their professions, were changing from a protective to a partial free-trade policy, the mercantile failures in the United States aggregated $346,779,889. There has been no such record in all the years before or since, and even in the financial flurry of 1907 the failures of this class did not equal one-third of the amount of that disastrous Democratic year. In the same Democratic year the banking failures in the United States amounted to $210,998,809, which was more than all the failures in the eight years from 1895 to 1902, inclusive, and was never approached by any one year, save that of 1907, a "bank-panic year," having nothing to do with the tariff, when the liabilities of failing institutions exceeded those of the Cleveland year by twenty-three millions. But the climax was capped in the railroad receiverships in 1893, when the total amount of capital involved was in excess of $1,781,000,000, an amount equal to the total involved in all railroad receiverships for the 14 subsequent years from 1894 to 1907, inclusive. In the light of these staggering figures, carrying with them a story of idleness and distress in city and country such as we never want to see again, it is fair to presume that the American farmer, who has listened complacently to stories of monopoly and outrage, will realize the meaning of that true reciprocity which some of us upon the Republican side have been preaching—the reciprocity that begins at home in a square deal between the tiller of the soil and the worker in the mill, without the interference of any foreign nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

ALTRUISM AND BREADWINNING.

Since reciprocity, as it has been communicated to us by the Democratic leaders, is now synonymous with free trade, what will it profit us as a people? Are we so prosperous that we can give away our substance without inviting the shadow? Are we not pursuing the course of him who "is worse than an infidel" if he provideth not for his own house? Or have we become so powerful, so benevolent and so altruistic, that we can take all nations to our bosom and still retain our industrial strength and fiber? And if we dared to do this, what assurance have we that any one of the great nations would do unto us as we seem willing to do unto them? Out of the Treasury of the country we spent hundreds of millions upon Cuba and the Philippines, and we are still spending lavishly for the uplift of the civilized and half-savage natives of the latter. Surely it will not be denied that we are taking of our substance for this benevolent purpose and that we are not receiving any return, either in profit or appreciation, such as we might derive if we were to put our own money amongst our own people, where it would strengthen the American fireside and give less cause for complaint as to the increase in the cost of living.

It is estimated that we shall spend four hundred millions upon the Panama Canal, and that we shall spend from forty to fifty millions per year fortifying it against the possibility of some other nation refusing to reciprocate with us in that spirit of good fellowship we now profess to entertain for other nations. Would it not seem from this mere incident, to say nothing of our precautionary measures along the border of Mexico, that although we have been generous in constructing the canal for the benefit of the world, we have not yet full faith in the amiability of one or any of the other nations that might find the canal worth taking from us?

CAN NOT DISASSOCIATE THE FARMER.

From no point of view, Mr. Chairman, have I been able to disassociate the farmer from the mechanic, or the clerk, or the industrialist of the city, so far as they will be affected by either the reciprocity or the free-trade bills. Many of those who have spoken for the farmer endeavored to make it appear that the man in the city was doing him great wrong. The truth is to the contrary, since man for man, the American farmer of to-day has every advantage in health, in domestic comfort, and in financial returns over the average urbanite. He has more of life's real comforts and by all odds is surer of his daily bread; he gets his food, whether he gets his wages or not. I have deeply regretted the efforts to show that either of these bills would mean an advantage to the dweller in the city over the dweller upon the farm, or vice versa. I am the Representative of a great industrial and mercantile district, and deem it a duty to deny that the workingman or the working woman of the city desires a reduction of the farmers' wage, and I confidently express the belief that the farmer does not desire a reduction in the wage of the workingman. We have been taught in the cities, as you have been taught in the country, that protection to a nation against unfair foreign labor and its product, is as natural as the protection of the individual or the family against the storm or the intruder. It is only when we prosper in the cities that we are enabled to buy from the farmer and pay him a fair price, and if the farmer prospers we look for a fair interchange of the commodities which we manufacture and sell to him. We understand the interests of these two great bread-winning factors of our country to be identical. That the farmer would knowingly strike down the industrialist who buys his products, or that the industrialist would knowingly strike down the farmer who buys his manufactures, is a preposterous proposition. Even though abuses may have crept into the protective system, it is equally unthinkable that because of an occasional fungus growth upon the giant oak of prosperity, we should abandon the law of our country which affords us a pruning knife and invoke the baneful aid of foreign competition to debase our home labor and lower our standard of life. [Applause on the Republican side.]

FARMERS RESPONSIBLE FOR CITIES GROWTH.

If the effect of all this legislation be to cheapen commodities, and incidentally labor, carrying with it uncertainty and distress in the business world, wherein does it advantage the industrialist more than the farmer or the farmer more than the industrialist? We were all farmers originally, but we strove for better conditions than prevailed in the hostile fields and log cabins of our forefathers. It was the farmer's boy striving to improve upon "Dad's" way that built up the cities and turned his industry and ingenuity to profit. What fault is to be found with him if he labored in new fields of industry and made labor profitable so that more money might be put into the pocket of the farmer to give him a chance to come out of the backwoods? It was the farmer's boy, for there was none other to do it, who improved the old earthen roads and made transportation possible. He saw the advantages of reaching out beyond the narrow limits of the eastern settlements, and it was he who penetrated the West with railroads that now make the farmer and the city dweller akin. He created the intermediate occupations engaged in the carrying trade between the farm and the city. It was through him that new industries, new factories, and new forges were established, and it was he, who, from the first act of the American Congress, insisted upon protection—not tariff for revenue—but protection for the industries of this country against the superior advantages in material prices, and labor conditions, in foreign lands. The farmer of the United States to-day is indebted to the farmer's boy of yesterday for the Department of Agriculture; for the advantages which have made rough farming scientific; for the advantages of this very tariff system which has relieved the farmer and the city dweller alike of direct taxes, while it has given us an opportunity to install telephones and build automobiles, which are now more in proportion a convenience to the dweller upon the farm than they are to the dweller in the city. It is due to the brains and industry of this farmer's boy who came to the city that we have been able to advance the standard of living, and it is that standard we want to see maintained.

FARM WAGES LOWER IN CANADA.

During this discussion I have been amazed at the willingness of our Democratic friends to accept Canada and her products on equal terms with those of the United States. It has been admitted that the wage of the farm laborer in Canada is less than that of the farm laborer in the United States, and it follows, if that be true, that the wages of the Canadian farmer, with cheaper lands, must be advanced to our standard, or ours must be reduced to his. I have had an inquiry made as to the building trades—which are all skilled labor—and find in nearly every instance that the hours of labor are longer and the scale of wages is lower in Canada than in the United States. Is this to the advantage of the American laborer or producer? Will the dweller in the city, brought into competition with a lower foreign wage scale, be enabled to reduce the cost of living if his own purchasing power be reduced?

Statistics furnished in the President's message of February 28, last, giving a comparison of farm wages paid in Canadian Provinces and States of the United States, along the border, become extremely interesting now in view of the Democratic proposition to follow up reciprocity with free trade. On page 85 of the President's message on "Reciprocity with Canada" the average wages of the farm laborer in the United States along the border in 1909 were $29 per month. The average Canadian wages along the border were $22.50 per month.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman.

CONGESTION AND ACREAGE.

Mr. SIMS. In view of the small number of laborers in Canada compared with the number in the United States, does not the gentleman think that wages in Canada will increase rather than bring ours down to the present Canadian scale?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have observed that many of our farmers are going to Canada, and if enough of them go there they may induce higher wages, but that, the gentleman should understand, would be sapping our own life and strength, and taking away the rich blood of this country and giving it to a country that refuses to come under our banner.

Mr. SIMS. But if we congest our country with labor, it must go somewhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no fear of congestion in our country except in the large cities. I have no fear of the prophecies of Malthus here, for we have plenty of room. Within a radius of 25 miles of my home city of Philadelphia you can secure plenty of good land with good buildings upon it, if you want to engage in farming, for as low as $60 per acre. Why should our people go to Canada, increasing in transportation rates the cost of what they would produce for the United States, when that cost must be charged up to the consumers of this country?

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. If the Canadians can buy as great a quantity of the necessaries of life for $22 in Canada as ours can for $29, how is he hurt?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is proposing to transfer the pure red blood of the American farmer into a foreign country and depopulate his own country. That is what I object to. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If the gentleman wants to ask a question concerning the manufacturer, because there is a bone of contention, I will say that the fear I have is that the bill which the gentleman advocates means that men who have capital, who have enterprise, who can find more favorable conditions of manufacture in foreign countries where the labor is cheaper, will leave the United States and thus deprive the American farmer of the market he now acquires from the wage earner who gets his wage in the existing American factory.

THE MANUFACTURER AND HIS MONEY.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman not think that it is the highest evidence of an avaricious, dollar-loving spirit to live in this country and make money out of high protection, and then the very moment the manufacturer gets the money that he wants, to go off and use it in a country where money is worth more than it is here? The manufacturer has been made rich by protection, and yet he deserts the country the moment that he has the money to go with.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman has asked that, because I am a protectionist, and I want to keep American money here. I would far rather the people in the little town the gentleman represents in Tennessee and the large farming constituency thereabouts were able to make $3 a day in a factory than to make $1 a day upon the farm. [Applause on Republican side.] I believe their standard of living would be improved, and I believe the gentleman would find that by reason of the increasing industry and activity of his own people, his duties here would be so increased that he would find little time for debate in the House.

Mr. SIMS. That does not answer my question as to why your protected manufacturer deserts this country after he has made his millions from protection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say to the gentleman that this country was sought out by our forefathers. They came here and lived for a long time in the back woods. I listened to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] a short time ago, and observed he spoke of the splendid conditions that prevailed in the days of the Washingtons and the Jeffersons.

I would say to the gentleman that in those days the men who did the labor in this country were not the aristocrats; they wore the apron as a badge of servility. There were aristocrats in those days, but popular education and the incoming of capital and the encouragement of enterprise and the incentive and genius of the American spirit have induced us to go on and become a world power. We have come out of the backwoods and the swamps where some of our forefathers lived. But since the gentleman desires an answer as to the manufacturer who makes his money and leaves the country, I will say to him that I have no sympathy with such a practice and would not encourage it by the passage of a free-trade measure. The gentleman can not go further than I do in condemning the man who makes his money here and then distributes it to the detriment of our own people, but he may find this necessary under a free-trade system.

LOSING OUT TO CANADA.

The difference in favor of the Canadian employer over the American employer of farm labor, as shown by the President's message, is, on the average, about one-fourth of the entire wage. Wherein would this reduction benefit anyone in the United States? That it is an inducement for employing farmers and of great advantage to Canada is shown in the announcement from Ottawa, immediately after the passage of the reciprocity bill by the House, that 45,000 American farmers were preparing to cross the Canadian border to get cheap land and, incidentally, cheap labor, thus depressing land and labor in the United States and transferring to Canadian Provinces no less than $30,000,000. The dispatch relating to this is taken from the Philadelphia Record, the leading Democratic newspaper of Pennsylvania, and is so significant that I present it here in full:

AMERICANS RUSH TO CANADA—45,000 FARMERS, WITH $30,000,000, CROSS BORDER.

[Special to the Record.]

Ottawa, April 22.—Reports from the Canadian west, recieved at the immigration department here, indicate that the prairie Provinces are now experiencing the greatest rush of immigration in western history. Figures compiled by the immigration authorities show that the daily average of new arrivals for four weeks show that 50,000 newcomers have entered western Canada as settlers within that time. At least 280 new towns will be put on the map of the Canadian west this year.

Information supplied the passenger department of the Canadian Pacific Railway is that already upward of 45,000 American farmers are preparing to cross over the border and settle in the Canadian west. It is estimated that they will bring in at least $30,000,000 in property and cash. The rush is nearly as great on other lines, while almost a stampede of settlers, principally Scots, has set in from the mother country.

Was it good policy to let these farmers go, and will it be good policy to send American manufactories after them, as suggested by the inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how many men of the best in this country and how much money has gone to Canada during the last 20 or 25 years to aid and encourage the industries of that country—if he has any statistics upon that subject?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have some data that I will put in the RECORD. I wrote this part of my address so that I would not have to deal with statistics offhand, but I will say to the gentleman, if he is interested, that I do know of certain concerns that have left the United States and have gone into Canada, taking over money to build enterprises there as they did to get cheap labor in England, and who did it because they could not get over the tariff barriers reared by Canada, which Canada still maintains.

Mr. BOWMAN. I would also like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I have only an hour.

CANADA WILL NOT YIELD.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Go ahead.

Mr. BOWMAN. Is it not better, in view of the fact that some of the best have gone over that lane of darkness, that a wall which is being built between these countries be taken down, so that they will be a part of this country rather than foreigners and strangers and enemies to this country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman, who, I think, has some interests in Canada.

Mr. BOWMAN. Not a dollar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think he has some customers in Canada.

Mr. BOWMAN. I have some of the best friends, and I desire them to be better.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are the friends of the gentleman, who are now in Canada, prepared to say that they will connect with this country and do business under our laws? Or do they still say they want the barrier reared as against certain American products, while they want our barriers lowered in order that their goods may come into the United States free?

Mr. BOWMAN. My friends in that country will make as good Americans as any that live in this country.

"MISS CANADA" AND MEXICO.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will agree with the gentleman that the Canadian is a fair brother, and that the pictures we see in the newspapers of "Miss Canada" are fair pictures, but I point out to the gentleman the country below us, where the bayonets of the United States are supplanting the bouquets we are throwing at Canada. I point to Mexico, which may be just as fair as Canada, to whom we will give no concessions and against whom we shut the door.

Mr. BOWMAN. And I would ask the gentleman if he desires the bayonets to be turned from that country toward this country, as they surely will, if you continue building this wall.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I had time, I would be glad to go on with the gentleman.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just one word, from my personal knowledge, that I know of men and women who have left this country and gone to the Canadian Northwest, and who have taken hundreds of millions of dollars with them for investment into that country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for that statement, which confirms what I have said. My information goes much further than the Canadian country, and I will say something about it a little later on. My information goes back to the days when under a Democratic tariff capital left the United States, mills were constructed in England, and we got their goods and they got our money; but I recall, too, that after we had put into effect a Republican tariff the investors came back to the United States, built mills, spent their money, and while we got their goods we also got their money. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, the reciprocity bill will drive away annually five millions of revenue and assist in depopulating our western country. The farmers' free-list bill will depress the wages of those who manufacture the articles that are used by the farmer, and must necessarily decrease the farmer's profit. It should be remembered, even by the farmer himself, that the wage earner in the streets and alleys of the great cities can not purchase at fair prices, the eggs and the butter and the beef and the potatoes that come from the farm, unless a fair price is obtained for the harrows and the plows and the textiles and the bagging and the cotton ties that go from the cities. Whether a manufacturer makes too much or too little, is a small part of the question. The manufacturer is only one man. The workers in the mills are thousands. What the manufacturer eats is trifling. It is what the workman eats and what the workman has to pay for what he eats that most concerns us. The farmer buys from the city occasionally, but the dweller in the city must buy from the farmer day by day, and the wage must be in hand to pay or the worker will go hungry.

WHEN THE FARMER COMES TO TOWN.

I would like to stop, if I had the time, and tell you how much the farmer buys when he comes to town. How much does he take away from one of my textile factories where you propose to reduce the wages of the men and women who are making hosiery? How many pairs of hosiery will he buy in a year? Six, a dozen, fifteen? Well, the whole bill could be settled for $2 or $3; maybe $1.50. He can get socks to-day for 10 cents. He can get two pairs for 15 cents, and they will last him for months. We have to spend vast sums of money in overhead charges, we have to rear great plants, we have to pay for rentals and advertising, we have to pay labor in order to make these socks at that price. Not even a Democrat would want them cheaper; and yet we have to pay for our eggs and potatoes and meat every day in the year. We have to go to the farmer every day. Sometimes the farmer does not visit us for six months.

How can the farmer expect to maintain the standard he now holds or to secure a continuance of fair prices if he declines to pay to the American wage-earner a fair price for manufactured articles? If he buys them from Europe on a free-list basis he puts out of employment the American worker in the mill and in the factory, and thus puts himself beyond the power of the mill worker to buy. The farmer's best market is not in Europe, but in the United States. He can not depress the wage-earning power in the city and still expect a profit upon the farm. Far better for the man in the city that the farmer should prosper, and far better for the man upon the farm that the man in the city should prosper.

NO WEALTH WITHOUT LABOR.

There are no articles upon the so-called farmers' free list which did not originally spring from the soil—metals or textiles or manufactured products. They all originated in the ground, and in their original condition were worth nothing. It was the hand of the laborer and the artificer that gave them value. Once, a long time back, in my own great State of Pennsylvania, the farms were ripe with grain, but it fell worthless in the field. The farmer had no market, except in his own environment. No protective system had aided him in building up industries and means of transportation. It cost him $10 a hundred pounds to send his products from Pittsburg to Philadelphia. The farmer was charged from 15 to 20 cents a pound for metal; he paid $5 for a bushel of salt. His grain was all he had, and the only value he could get out of it was by converting it into whisky.

He needed a market; he needed a railroad or a waterway to get to the market. He needed the city consumer to make his labor worth something. He began to get it when the engineer and the mechanic came. What thoughtful farmer will deny the value of the architect and the laborer and the textile worker who build for him and who buy from him? The story of our wonderful Western development centers in the spread of the industrial influence. Until it came there was no money value to the wealth of the farm nor to the labor employed in farm production. If we are to pay well for the products of the farm it follows that we must earn well in the cities, and if we are to continue to profitably interchange as between the cities and the farm, we must not withdraw from each other, nor permit ourselves to be alienated.

DEMOCRATS MUST RECKON WITH LABOR.

In my judgment the Democrats who are now menacing the business of the country by their insistence upon free trade, will have to account to the mechanic and wage earner of the land as well as to the farmer. They can not put him upon the plane of his competitor in England, in Germany, in France, or in Italy without hearing from him in no uncertain way.

Table 2 in the President's message gives the "Average wages of agricultural labor, with board, in specified States, eastern Canada, and British Columbia," for 1909, as follows:

	By the month.		In harvest.
	Hiring by the season.	Hiring by the year.
United States:
Maine	$27.60	$23.17	$1.63
New York	26.00	22.08	1.77
Michigan	25.10	21.57	1.75
Minnesota	29.25	23.98	2.23
Wisconsin	28.57	24.39	1.79
North Dakota	33.34	27.01	2.58
Iowa	28.93	25.63	2.08
Ohio	22.11	19.19	1.67
Vermont	26.86	24.03	1.73
Montana	39.29	35.00	2.23
Washington	36.39	31.32	2.34
Missouri	21.10	18.85	1.50
Canada:
Prince Edward Island	17.25	10.87
Nova Scotia	21.20	15.90	.40 / .50
New Brunswick	22.59	9.96
Quebec	23.33	17.58	.30 / .35
Ontario	21.52	17.63	.20 / .35
British Columbia	30.50	20.69	.35 / .50

WAGE COMPETITION WITH EUROPE.

If these differences in the wages of farm labor are calculated to stir the interest of the farmer, what shall we say of the mill workers whom the free-trade bill proposes to put in competition with the factory labor of Europe? In the textile industry the wages in Great Britain are one-half those paid in the United States. You Democrats propose to put their goods against ours and their wage scale against ours. The wages in the textile industries in Germany and in France are little more than one-third the wages in the United States. You propose to put our working men and women on a par with the workers of those countries. When you had control of this Government in 1894 you compelled American capital to leave the United States and rear factories in Germany and in England and in Canada. You propose now to enact a measure that will bring like results, and this, upon the pretense that you will reduce the cost of living. But stop a while! I want you to look before you leap. It has profited certain manufacturers to conduct establishments on both sides of the water to meet conditions arising from frequent tariff changes. They go to Europe to get cheap labor and they build here to keep within the tariff wall. They would prefer to stay here if you would let them, because the market is here. Hosiery, in particular, is manufactured in Germany for the American trade.

Against what do our American wage earners have to compete in this trade? Here is a statement now officially before the Ways and Means Committee which invites our sympathetic consideration:

The average rate of wages paid to skilled women sewing-machine operators in the United States varies from $1.50 to $2 per day. The same class of labor in France, Germany, and Switzerland receives from 30 cents to 50 cents per day.

Wages paid winders or spoolers in the United States varies from $1.50 to $1.75 per day. The same class of labor in the countries named receives from 35 cents to 40 cents per day.

Wages paid knitters in the United States varies from $1.25 to $2 per day. The same class of labor in the countries named receives from 35 cents to 75 cents per day.

The items of labor entering into the manufacture of cotton knitted underwear, over and above the actual cost of the staple, represents fully 75 per cent of the total.

In lieu of lengthy and confirmatory statistics showing the cheapness of wages in Europe as compared with better conditions in the United States I submit a letter recently published in the Protectionist. There is so much of human interest and such food for thought in this statement that a reading of it may help to a better understanding of the value of a fair American wage.

COST OF LIVING HERE AND THERE.

Intended for circulation in the British elections, this illuminating letter of Mr. Harrison Benn, of England and America, must be of intense interest to the American tariff tinker of free-trade proclivities. The statement, dated Beckside Mills, Great Norton, Bradford, follows:

In order to put before the public a correct statement of the comparative cost of living, together with the wages paid in England and America, it is advisable to have as near as possible the same conditions both as to locality and the quality of work. As chairman of a company with mills in Clayton and Bradford and president of a corporation with mills in Greystone, near Providence, R. I., America, I am in a practical position to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of free trade and protection.

The English and American mills comb, spin, and weave exactly the same classes of wool, alpaca, and mohair, and the same qualities of yarns and cloth are interchangeable. The machinery in all the mills are identically the same. Many of the work people at Greystone worked in our Bradford mills. At Clayton and Greystone are cooperative stores managed entirely by the workingmen, and it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to obtain fairer conditions for comparing the cost of living in the two countries.

A great amount of discussion is now being carried on regarding the prices of the "food of the people," and in order that every family can ascertain the difference in the cost of living between free-trade England and protectionist America, I give below a list of prices of some "everyday necessary articles of food." The Greystone price list is dated December 10, 1909, and signed by the secretary of the cooperative stores, and the Clayton price list is of a more recent date. For convenience and simplicity I have translated the American "cent" as being equal to one halfpenny.

	Clayton cooperative prices.	Greystone cooperative prices.
	s. d.	s. d.
Best flour, per stone of 14 pounds	2 1	2 3
Best butter, per pound (Danish)	1 5	[1] 1 4
Best lard, per pound	0 9	0 7½
Best cheese, per pound	0 10	0 10
Sugar	0 2½	0 2½
Currants	0 5	0 6½
Raisins	0 7	0 7½
Ceylon tea	1 11	1 10
Coffee	1 8	1 2
Onions	0 1½	0 2½
Ham	1 1	1 ½
Bacon (Irish)	1 0	0 10
Apples	0 2½	0 1½
Rice	0 3½	0 4½
Milk, per quart	0 3	0 3
Vinegar, per quart	0 4	0 3½
Nestle's Swiss milk, per tin	0 5½	0 3½
Potatoes, per stone of 14 pounds	0 8	12 5
Bananas, per dozen	0 8	0 6½

[1] American.

ENGLAND AND RHODE ISLAND COMPARED.

A Bradford butcher employed by the Greystone cooperative states the joints are not cut the same, but the prices realized for the whole animal are just about the same as in England.

Although coal is dearer, I question if the fuel cost per family for 12 months is as much as in England, owing to the general use of slow-combustion stoves.

I have ascertained the quantities of the above-named "everyday necessary articles of food" consumed by families, ranging from 2 to 13 persons, and find the average cost to each Greystonian is 3¾d. per week more than the Claytonian. A family of 5 persons will jointly have to earn 1s. 6¾d. more per week to be equal to a Claytonian.

Having arrived at the cost of living as shown above, I give below the wages paid at Clayton and Bradford for 55½ hours per week and at Greystone for 56 hours:

	Clayton and Bradford.	Greystone.
	s. d.	s. d.
Woolsorters (day work), per week	32 0	66 8
Men box minders	17 6	33 4
Noble comb minders	20 0	39 7
Can gill minders	12 6	29 2
Drawers	12 6	29 2
Rovers	11 0	29 2
Spinning overlookers	30 0	62 6
Girl spinners (according to number of spindles)	11 3	25 6
Doffers	9 0	18 9
Girl twisters	11 0	29 2
Girl warpers	13 0	33 4
Weavers	15 10	46 9
Weaving overlookers	36 0	66 8
Joiners	31 10	62 6
Mechanics	30 0	62 6
Stokers	25 0	50 0

WHICH IS BEST FOR THE TOILER?

When the extra cost of living is taken into consideration with the high wages received can the Greystone workmen's oft-repeated assertions be questioned, viz, that they "can save more in America than they could earn in England"? The "dear-loaf" bogy does not frighten the American workman. I ask the British workman whether he would not rather pay a trifle more for "everyday necessary articles of food," as the Greystonian does, and have a substantial sum to put away at the end of every week, or have a "cheap loaf," low wages, and irregular work, and, as one Yorkshire housewife put it, "a scrattin' on."

I know it is most difficult for anyone who has not visited the States to realize how well off the working classes are out there. A family who lived in very straitened circumstances in Bradford went to America and at Greystone Mills earned £17 9s. 4d. per week. I have never known a workman return to live in England, excepting for family reasons, poor health, homesickness, or through being a wastrel. Even then I doubt if 2 per cent return. The statements I have made are not based on conclusions drawn from reading either free-trade or protectionist literature. They are based on actual daily practical experience.

I say to the electors, think for yourselves, and if you desire to improve your position, receive higher wages, and have more constant employment, like hundreds who have emigrated from the Bradford district to the United States of America, then vote for the tariff-reform candidate.

I am, etc., HARRISON BENN.

AGRICULTURE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. Chairman, so often is Pennsylvania referred to as a beneficiary of the tariff that I feel it due to the misinformed farmers of the country to say a word about that State. It is true that Pennsylvania has profited by protection, but it is equally true that every other State in this Union has advanced in proportion. Witness the energetic and hustling West and the hopeful and rapidly developing South. We do not envy you, nor do we believe you can go back upon your own industries. You of the South, especially, because of your climate and resources, will some day be rivals in the great American market for manufactures. And for one I hope the day will come speedily, for I believe it will mean the regeneration of the South and a removal of those alleged barriers that sometimes seem to prevail as between us.

But Pennsylvania—she has had certain natural advantages, being the greatest anthracite coal producer of the country; she has fought her way to her present prominence by industry and thrift, so commendable and conspicuous as to make mockery of the political assaults that are often directed against her. She is small in area, one of the smallest of all the States of the Union, yet her population is equal to that of the great Canadian country about which we have given ourselves so much concern. Pennsylvania came into the Union second in population and importance, and, while yielding then to Virginia and yielding now to New York, she has maintained second place from the beginning of American history. She held first place in the production of coal, iron, steel, petroleum, and textiles, and in the output of these has contributed to the wealth and happiness of the world. She has more than that to commend her. Pennsylvania is out of debt. She spends thirty-four millions annually upon public education.

GOOD FARMS IN THE KEYSTONE STATE.

But it is to the Pennsylvania farmer that I direct your attention. We have 19,000,000 acres of farm land in Pennsylvania, and according to the census of 1900—that of 1910 not being sufficiently advanced to give complete statistics for the State—68.2 per cent of that land was improved. And I will state that very much of the unimproved land has gone into a great forest reserve of nearly a million acres, which the State maintains without regard to the Government's generosity in supporting State forest reserves in other sections of the country, where now and then the unthinking inveigh against the "great corporations" and the "grasping tendencies of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman permit a question? I understood the gentleman to say the land was worth $60 an acre.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I said you could get land at $60 an acre within 25 miles of the city of Philadelphia, just as fertile and much nearer the market than some of that for which our friends are going to Canada.

Mr. SIMS. It is good land?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very good land. There has been an extraordinary development in the western country, that great Middle West the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] so frequently and so proudly speaks about, but during the past 10 years that country has grown so rapidly that perhaps the average prosperous farmer has overlooked a little the staid and steady Quakers, who are still going on with their business enterprises and their agricultural pursuits in Pennsylvania and the East. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We wish them well. We have always wished them well. They have taken from us much of the best bone and fiber of our Commonwealth. They represent the native Americanism, and we rejoice in their prosperity. But sometimes it seems a question whether they remember all, and whether, in their youth and in their earnestness and their ability to do things, they do not forget that we are still in existence, doing the best we can and contributing our share to the progress of this Nation and to its fame throughout the world.

DESERVE WELL OF THE COUNTRY.

Think of this, my friends of the Middle West and the South! Pennsylvania, an industrial State, rich in coal and iron and steel, was tenth in the production of wheat, about which you have been telling us so much in your disputes as to whether the price was fixed at Liverpool, or Winnipeg, or Halifax. We have hardly thought of wheat in Pennsylvania, except as we have wanted to see you protected in your industry in raising wheat. We have paid the same old price per loaf of bread through all your fluctuations in the price of wheat from 60 cents to $1.25 per bushel. We have had other things to do in that State, and so many of them that wheat has been incidental, except as we have been buying it from you and feeding it to our people, proud of the knowledge that we were able to spend the money that we were making, in building you up in the Middle West and South, and taking your product rather than to have you ship it into foreign markets. [Applause.]

Our farm property in 1900 was valued at more than $1,051,000,000. That figure was exceeded then only by Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, and New York in the order named, and it represented one-twentieth of all the farm property of the country. Owing to the growth of the Middle West in the last 10 years, we may not hold that position now. But in 1909 we produced 48,000,000 bushels of corn. We were fifth in 1909 in the production of hay. The State turned out more than 3,742,000 tons, and was exceeded only by Iowa, New York; Illinois, and Ohio. The Tennessee tobacco crop for 1909 was 53,000,000 pounds. Pennsylvania produced 30,000,000 pounds. Surely we have some interest in agricultural development if we can approach so closely the output of Tennessee in her great staple. But even here I am reminded, when you talk of monopolies in the manufacturing world and shake your fists at "hydra-headed trusts and combinations," that you do not hesitate even from the agrarian point of view to limit your output of tobacco so that good prices may be obtained; nor do you hesitate farther South to pass resolutions limiting the area in which cotton shall be grown, for no other purpose in the world than to obtain not cheaper but higher prices. [Applause on the Republican side.]

GOOD PRICES VERSUS CHEAPNESS.

But I believe in fair prices for all American commodities that are the product of our labor, including cotton. Potatoes are imported through the port of Philadelphia from foreign countries. They are produced abroad in certain seasons cheaper than they are produced here. I am glad a duty is levied on these potatoes sufficient to bring the foreign price up to the American price. If we are able to make the wages to pay the American price, we would rather pay well than to grind down the grower. This question comes home to every section of the country, as it does to Pennsylvania, for in that State in 1909 we produced 24,000,000 bushels, the crop being exceeded only by those of New York, Michigan, Maine, and Wisconsin. There is another product of Pennsylvania worth mentioning. I have not the most recent census figures as to dairy products and butter and cheese, but in 1900 we produced 74,000,000 pounds of butter and cheese, yielding only to the supremacy of Ohio and New York. In fact, Pennsylvania produced about one-fourteenth of all the butter and cheese made in the United States in 1900, and during the same year only six States exceeded Pennsylvania in the production of eggs and poultry.

Now, it would seem, Mr. Chairman, that these figures would entitle any Representative of the State to speak out for Pennsylvania as an agricultural State.

WEALTH IN MANUFACTURES.

We are certainly able to discuss agriculture with the best of the Middle West or Southern States, and have no reason to be ashamed of our progress as tillers of the soil; but much of this State's substantial growth has been overlooked because of our prominent position in the industrial world. And what is our industrial status? In 1905 the census showed a wealth production in manufactures for the Nation of $15,000,000,000. In Pennsylvania alone we produced about $2,000,000,000 of that wealth, or one-seventh of the entire wealth production of this great country.

And it is this great wealth production in the factory, on the farm, and from the mine that has gone out to enrich the country through the wages and earnings we were able to make for the purchase of the products of the soil. It is idle under these circumstances to attempt to array the farmer against the industrialist in Pennsylvania, as it would be futile to attempt to line up class against class or trade against trade throughout the country. There may be evils in Pennsylvania, as there are in every other State, but we do not seek destruction of our wealth and property to remedy our defects. You and I are sent into this great House to enact laws for the government of the people and the control of lawlessness, whether it appears in the individual or in the corporate form, and we are ourselves lax if we fail to provide for the correction of abuses by law, as is the administrative arm of the Government if enacted law falls of enforcement.

KEEP THE WAGE EARNER EMPLOYED.

Oh, it is most important, Mr. Chairman, if we are to have social and domestic peace and progress, that we keep the wage earner profitably employed. Good wages and an ability to buy free and generously is far more to be preferred than cheapness and stagnation. But before we leave the farmer I want to remind him again of his duty to himself with regard to this free-trade measure. No matter what his feeling may be concerning reciprocity, no matter what the differences, aggravated by demagogy and unwisdom, may have been in the past, the farmer can not now afford, even if he would, to be inconsiderate of the industrialist, lest he "spite his own face." We have heard so much of wheat and the effect of Canadian reciprocity upon this product that I am impelled to submit a simple statement, compiled from Bradstreet's Journal, giving the average prices of bread and wheat for a period of years:

	New York.
	Bread per loaf.	Wheat per bushel.
	Cents.
July 1, 1896	4	$0.64⅜
Feb. 1, 1900	4	.64⅜
Mar. 1, 1907	4	.83
Nov. 1, 1908	4	1.08½
Nov. 1, 1909	4	1.23½
Nov. 1, 1910	4	.96

By this simple statement is the dependence of the farmer upon the city dweller clearly shown. Wheat went up, and wheat went down; but the price of bread was just the same. It mattered not to us in the cities whether you were getting 64 cents or $1.25 a bushel for wheat, we had to have the loaf and we had to pay the bill. It is beside the question to complain of the cost of transportation or the profits of the middleman. They may have been justly or unjustly earned; we had to have our daily bread, and we had to pay the same old price. I have never known the industrialist to be unreasonable when he knew the truth, and I do not believe the farmer will be. Why should he rail against the man in the city? He is better off to-day than he was yesterday; there are fewer mortgages on the farms and greater comforts and conveniences abound. Surely the farmer has been getting his share along with the man in town, but lest there be some doubting Thomas still, let me draw upon the statistics of the Bureau of Labor for a few concrete examples of the manner in which we mutually progress.

OBJECT LESSONS IN VALUES.

In 1896, 10 bushels of corn would buy 59 pounds of granulated sugar. In 1910 that same 10 bushels of corn would buy 131 pounds of granulated sugar, or more than twice as much.

In 1896, 20 bushels of rye would buy 142 yards of gingham. In 1910 that same 20 bushels of rye would buy 226 yards of gingham.

We make gingham in my city, and the question is whether we are getting as much for our gingham as we ought to get. The moment the duty is lowered, either upon gingham or hosiery, there is an influx of foreign manufactures, made at a lower wage abroad, and in the case of hosiery it has happened that, notwithstanding we obtained some additional protection in the last tariff bill, the price of production in Germany has been reduced to such an extent that they are still able to send over here large invoices of foreign-made hosiery, thus preventing the American workingman and manufacturer from getting the full measure of the protection it was intended he should have.

But here is another illustration that should have weight: In 1896, according to these same statistics of the Bureau of Labor, one hog weighing 1,300 pounds would buy 180 yards of cotton flannel. In 1910 that same hog would buy 353 yards of cotton flannel, or about twice as much. It is evident that the price of cotton flannel has gone down, due to a protective tariff, or that the price of the American hog has gone up. That the tariff is in any way responsible for the increase in prices is a proposition that will not bear scrutiny.

"THATCHED-COTTAGE" SPEECHES AND COLD FACTS.

I trust the farmer who has been listening to the "thatched-cottage" speeches of some of our Democratic friends will note from these examples, the interdependence of the two great wealth-producing factors of our country—the farmer and the man who feeds upon the products of the farm. No specious argument nor any quibbling upon constitutional questions can appease these two breadwinners when it comes to the potato bin, the smokehouse, or the family market basket. And if the actual producer in either direction permits himself to be deceived it will not take long for him to realize his error.

But some one says "What about tea and coffee and sugar and oil which the farmer uses?" Well, let us discuss them all for a moment.

We impose no duty upon tea or coffee. Wherein, therefore, is the tariff responsible for the high price of tea and coffee? Coffee comes into the United States at about 8 cents a pound. What do you pay for it? Tea comes in as low as 11 cents a pound. How much do you pay for tea? There is no tariff upon either article.

Or let us take sugar and oil, which are supposed to be controlled by the very worst kind of trusts. There is a duty upon sugar and it produces a great deal of revenue, but notwithstanding the great sums of money that have gone into the construction of sugar and oil refineries, necessitating the employment of hundreds of thousands of men and women, the making of machinery, and the construction of ships, the price of both these commodities has been enormously reduced.

When I was a boy we bought brown sugar, in brown bags, and went after it ourselves, for 13 and 14 cents a pound. Much of it was refined through the bare feet of the natives of Jamaica and the West Indies. To-day, notwithstanding the existence of large corporations, the average housewife can order sugar from the grocer over the telephone, have it sent in a highly ornamented delivery wagon, refined and purified by the most scientific processes, all wrapped up in white paper and tied with a string of white and gold, for 5½ cents a pound.

SOMETHING ABOUT SUGAR AND OIL.

Would you go back to the old method of obtaining sugar at the old price, merely to get even with the refiners who have systematized the sugar business? I guess not. And if we were to take the duty off sugar, who would be benefited? Do you think for a moment the farmer pays the $60,000,000 revenue when he buys sugar for 5 and 5½ cents a pound? If you do, be assured that the sugar importer is your best friend and the great middlemen of New York are with you in the desire to give you relief? In common with other Members of the House I have received the most pitiful appeals "in behalf of the American farmer" from the great importing warehouses, and I am persuaded that if the duty is removed there will be no reduction in the price of sugar to the consumer, but $60,000,000, which is now taken from the importer, will be transplanted from the Treasury of the United States into the capacious pockets of the combination which is now appealing so valiantly in the farmers' behalf. Would you rather the importer should pay the $60,000,000, or would you rather have it made up in some other way, yet to be devised by the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means?

But let us not forget oil. Petroleum was an unknown commodity in this country until discovered in Pennsylvania. Of what value to the owner or the tiller of the soil was the oil underneath, until the mechanic came with his drills and his pumps? And of what value was the gritty, dirty product, until the refiner came with his hundreds of thousands and millions of capital to refine and purify and market it? Oil became valuable only as it was treated by those who were not the original owners of the soil.

But the owner participated in the development, and profits and royalties followed, and farmers' sons were lifted from mediocrity and drudgery to new and laudable ambitions and occupations, which aided in our common expansion.

Punish the great corporation that violates the law, or that plays unfair in its dealings with the public, but bear in mind our modest beginnings, and the need we had for the man of genius and broad ideas to fashion the crude material into a finished product, and make it serviceable to a world in which it had hitherto been useless.

Merely for information, and to bring us back to a reasonable basis of discussion upon the question of oil, I refer to this simple incident:

Some time ago, in Troy, Pa., I met a gentleman who told me he started in business in that town 44 years ago that day. I asked him what line he pursued. He said he started to sell oil. I asked him what he got for oil 44 years ago, for that was close to the sperm-oil days. He answered that he put the oil upon the station platform and the farmer came and got it for 60 cents a gallon. That oil was not purified and refined and delivered as it is to-day, and yet that oil, under existing conditions, can be had now for 12 cents a gallon retail. Evidently our friends who are charging the tariff with the responsibility for high prices, have slipped a cog in the matter of sugar and oil and tea and coffee.

RAILROAD MONEY IN CIRCULATION.

Why, Mr. Chairman, regardless of all you say against them, when a Rogers or a Rockefeller dies the world goes on the same. Their money goes not with them. If it did, great corporations would go out of business, railroads would disband, and thousands upon thousands of men would be thrown back upon their own resources. The money of these men, whether rightfully made or wrongfully made, remains in public use. It is kept in circulation and does the whole community good. It enters directly into the wage account and establishes the farmers' market. I have often heard from this floor assaults upon such concerns as the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. No matter whether it offends in some particular or not, it is still the accumulator and the distributer of vast capital, which after all, it should be remembered, is the real inspiration of labor. If Edison had not invented the electric light we might still be without that great boon, regardless of the fact that a thousand, yea a hundred thousand, envious Edisons, now fully informed as to the value of electricity, declare they would have worked out the problem, if Edison had not. So we may account for some of the critics who can better manage railroads and corporations than they are now managed, and so it may be with those who assail the Pennsylvania Railroad. But where does the capital come from that makes the Pennsylvania Railroad? I have sent for a report, and find there are 65,000 shareholders, who have faith enough in the company to risk their money with it. They are dependent for the return of every dollar they advance, upon the developing power of the railroad to bring the factory and the farm together.

And these 65,000 shareholders are not all rich men, nor are they centered in any one State or country. More than 30,000 of them are women, and many others are executors of estates and trustees or guardians for children. You do not, when you unjustly agitate against a railroad, do it so much injury as you tend to destroy the security of the savings of tens of thousands, and the wages of hundreds of thousands of employees.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I very much regret that I can not. I would like to yield, but I have not the time. If I could be given a little more time, I would be very glad to do so.

A REMARKABLE SAVING FUND.

There is another side to this story, Mr. Chairman, which I should like to introduce. In the wage-earning, food-consuming city of Philadelphia we have 350,000 separate homes. Not apartment houses, but separate dwellings, where each man stands with his family, the sovereign of his home. These separate dwellings alone are equal to the total population of the District of Columbia. Many of them have been acquired by their occupants through the building associations and many of them through savings which they have been able to lay away.

But there is an institution in my city to which I must refer. It provides not the story of the rich man, but the story of the thrifty poor. I know of no society so unique in financial history as the Philadelphia Saving Fund Society. It is one of several of the same kind which we encourage in the city of Philadelphia and to which we refer with pride. An organization intended to encourage savings, it was incorporated in 1824, and from that time to this has accepted deposits from the working people, receiving no more than $500 from any one depositor in any one year. On the 1st of January last there were 273,320 depositors in this institution, and that number has since been increased to more than 276,000. These men, women, and children, who have no telephones or automobiles, are the owners of $111,000,000. Almost every nationality is represented by these depositors, the major number, of course, being natives of the United States. Wage earners predominate, and women and children are conspicuous amongst those who have adopted this method of saving against a rainy day.

SMALL INVESTORS BUILD RAILROADS.

I have here a table showing the occupations of the depositors who opened accounts with the society during 1910:

Males:
Wage earners	11,980
Salaried employees	6,825
Agriculturists	570
Professional men	345
Business men	1,939
Minors	484
No occupation	1,001
Total	23,144
Females:
Wage earners	3,856
Wives of wage earners	6,344
Wives of salaried employees	3,684
Business women	16
Professional women	46
Domestic servants	2,826
Salaried employees	1,562
Minors	244
No occupation	4,618
Total	23,196
Males	23,144
Females	23,196
Total	46,340

When wage earners and their wives, whose deposits are necessarily small, appear in such large numbers in one institution in one year it speaks well for the faith and stability of the breadwinners of the country; but if we look deeper into the subject we will again find that, after all, it is this same breadwinner who stands behind the great undertakings which give play to the activities of the captains of industry. Where do the deposits of the wage earners of this single institution go? There must be some earning power to those deposits, for interest is regularly paid upon them to the depositor, and he, in turn, has become the investor. The District of Columbia has $500,000 of that money. It was employed in improving and beautifying the Capital City. Sixty-five other States, cities, and boroughs throughout the country—not in Pennsylvania alone, but in all sections of the United States—have borrowed more than $25,000,000 of those savings to build schoolhouses and highways and sewers and needed public improvements. And every man who worked in any one of those communities was a consumer of the products of the farm.

But this is not all. The money of these Philadelphia savings-fund depositors—these wage earners of my city—has gone into the development of the Middle West and the South in the construction and maintenance of railroads that have made the farm profitable.

It is this substantial and unseen interest of the working people of this country in its general development that I would draw to the attention of the House. The poor man is as deeply interested in legislation affecting our national prosperity as is the man of wealth. Whatever injures one as a body will affect the other, and if by reciprocity or free trade we transfer to other countries that which we have mutually built up for ourselves we injure neither class alone—we injure all. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CONSTRUCTIVE INFLUENCE OF WAGES.

Numerous railroads enjoy the confidence of these workingmen of my city, and they are paying upon the bonds they have issued, the interest they promised to pay, which affords a return to the wage-earning depositors. That it may be understood how far-reaching and beneficial is the effect upon the whole country of the wage-earning power in a small part of a single city, I insert, without reading, a list of the railroads gridironing the country which are indirectly encouraged and promoted by the workmen depositors of the Philadelphia Saving Fund Society:

Alabama Central Railroad Co. (Southern).
Alabama Great Southern Railroad Co. (Southern).
Allegheny Valley Railway Co.
Allegheny & Western Railway Co.
Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.
Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. of South Carolina.
Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co.
Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Co. (main line).
Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Co. (tunnel).
Beech Creek Railroad Co. (New York Central).
Brooklyn & Montauk Railroad Co. (Long Island).
Camden & Atlantic Railroad Co.
Canada Southern Railway Co.
Catawissa Railroad Co.
Central of Georgia Railway Co. (Mobile division).
Central Pacific Railway Co.
Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co.
Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. (Illinois division).
Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.
Chicago & St. Louis Railway Co.
Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad Co.
Columbus & Toledo Railroad Co. (Hocking Valley).
Continental Passenger Railway Co.
Delaware River Railroad & Bridge Co. (Pennsylvania).
Easton & Amboy Railroad Co.
Elmira, Cortland & Northern Railroad Co. (Lehigh Valley).
Harrisburg, Portsmouth, Mount Joy & Lancaster Railroad Co. (Pennsylvania).
Jefferson Railroad Co. (Erie).
Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Co.
Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co.
Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.
Lehigh Valley Railway Co. of New York.
Long Island Railroad Co.
New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Co.
New York & Erie Railroad Co.
New York, Lackawanna & Western Railway Co.
Norfolk & Western Railway Co.
Northern Central Railway Co.
Northern Pacific Railway Co.
North Pennsylvania Railroad Co.
Ohio Connecting Railway Co. (Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis).
Pennsylvania Co.
Pennsylvania Railroad Co.
Pennsylvania & New York Canal & Railroad Co.
Perkiomen Railroad Co. (Reading).
Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co.
Philadelphia & Erie Railroad Co.
Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co.
Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad Co.
Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Co.
Pittsburg, Virginia & Charleston Railway Co. (Pennsylvania).
St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway Co.
Schuylkill River East Side Railroad Co.

South Carolina & Georgia Railroad Co. (Southern).
Southern Pacific Railroad Co. of California.
Southern Pacific Railroad Co. of New Mexico.
Steubenville & Indiana Railroad Co. (Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis).
Union Pacific Railroad Co.
United New Jersey Railroad & Canal Co.
Virginia Midland Railway Co. (Southern).
Wabash Railroad Co. (Detroit & Chicago extension).
Washington Terminal Co.
Western North Carolina Railroad Co. (Southern).
Western Pennsylvania Railroad Co.
West Jersey & Seashore Railroad Co.
West Shore Railroad Co.

WHAT FREE TRADE MEANS TO THE HOME.

And now, Mr. Chairman, in the short time I have remaining I want to show what this so-called farmers' free-trade bill means to the wage earner, as well as to the farmer. The excuse for this bill, as explained by the Democratic leaders, is that it will "relieve the farmer of taxation" at the customhouse. This is familiar but discredited Democratic doctrine. During the last fiscal year we collected at the customhouses a tariff upon imports from foreign countries from importers and jobbers who were well able to pay, a total approximating $330,000,000. This represented one-third of all our revenue, and the importer who felt the necessity of going abroad to spend his money paid it. In the collection of that tariff we avoided internal or direct taxation upon the people for one thing, and, for another thing, kept our mills running and our workmen employed. Now the Democrats propose to change this condition and lop off $10,000,000 of that revenue, which must be replaced in some other way, upon the pretense that farm implements and other commodities used by the farmer may be admitted free. Well, we can get at this whole question very quickly by a rough and ready calculation. If we concede the Democratic contention that the tariff is a tax, what does the whole thing amount to so far as the masses of the people are concerned? Divide the entire $330,000,000 by our 90,000,000 of population and you will find that the "great burden" upon the people of this land amounts to about $3.70 apiece per annum. Total abstinence from one hour's ride in an automobile or from one theater party in one year would wipe out that score if applied directly to the individual. Yes; one good Democratic dinner once a year in one first-class hotel in Washington would pay the bill. Or, if we were to calculate "the great economy" which reciprocity and free trade are to bring us through Democratic auspices, regardless of the direct loss to all the people in capital and labor, it would, if amounting in the aggregate to $15,000,000, represent a saving to the individual of the price of three cheap cigars in one whole year.

WHERE THE SHOE PINCHES.

But let us take up the bill which now bears the name of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and see where it leads us. It puts upon the free list, first of all, "agricultural implements." And what was the duty collected at the customhouses on these important articles during the last fiscal year, 1905, for which we are given comparative figures? Why just exactly $2,775. That was all the Government received from the importer, and that is the amount which our Democratic friends propose to save to the American farmer. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the Democratic Party which is now in control of this House would put up at public vendue the automobile which former Speaker CANNON has turned over to Speaker CLARK, and which the gentleman from Missouri thus far declines to use, the American farmer, as well as the entire country, would be immediately relieved of this awful tax. [Laughter.]

And where does the workingman come in on this proposition? Let the farmer reason this out for himself. There were 648 establishments in the United States engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements in 1905, and the total capital invested was $196,741,000. The total number of wage earners employed in these establishments was 47,394. They were all consumers in the sense that they purchased the products of the farm. You propose now to jeopardize these American manufactories and the wages of the men employed in them to save $2,775 at the customhouses.

CALCUTTA CAN MAKE CHEAP BAGGING.

But when it comes to bagging for cotton, sacks, burlaps, and so forth, which are used by the cotton planter exclusively, what are the facts? The duties here amounted to $4,879,870; on cotton ties, $2,576. Here is a full half of the entire ten millions to be saved, and I ask where the American farmer, outside of the cotton belt, comes in? I can not now give the figures showing the number of hoop and band iron workers engaged in the manufacture of cotton ties, but I shall submit a statement prepared at the Census Office bearing upon this subject.

I am able, however, to state that the census of 1905 showed that we had 16 establishments in the United States manufacturing jute and jute goods; that they had invested upward of $11,000,000, and that they employed at American wages more than 6,000 men and women. Since that census was made other establishments have been reared nearer to the cotton fields, employing labor in that vicinity, which is now distressed, because the removal of the duty upon these commodities used by the cotton planter means the elimination of the American manufactures and the introduction into this country of the output of the cheap and miserable labor of Calcutta.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One minute more.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

THE INDUSTRIES TO BE HIT.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In this last minute I propose to introduce a statement prepared by the Census Bureau at my instance, showing, paragraph by paragraph, so far as possible, the tremendous importance to industry of this free-trade "entering wedge":

Total for the United States for certain selected industries.

[Census of 1905 (calendar year 1904).]

Industry.	Number of establishments.	Capital.	Average number of wage earners.	Value of product.
Total	63,994	$2,178,109,000	1,079,052	$3,707,234,000
Agricultural implements	648	196,741,000	47,394	112,007,000
Carriages and wagons	5,588	152,345,000	77,882	155,869,000
Jute and jute goods	16	11,019,000	6,083	9,066,000
Leather, tanned, curried, and finished	1,049	242,584,000	57,239	252,621,000
Boots and shoes	1,316	122,526,000	149,924	320,107,000
Saddlery and harness	1,076	29,264,000	15,032	42,055,000
Slaughtering and meat packing, wholesale	929	237,715,000	74,134	913,914,000
Flour and grist mill products	10,051	265,117,000	39,110	713,033,000
Food preparations	766	51,784,000	11,333	61,180,000
Bread and other bakery products	18,227	122,363,000	81,284	209,609,000
Lumber and timber products	24,136	694,370,000	502,300	827,465,000
Sewing machines and attachments	46	26,695,000	12,671	20,870,000
Salt	146	25,586,000	4,666	9,438,000

Hoop and band iron and similar products are manufactured very largely in rolling mills and steel works, and it is impossible to compile statistics of capital, employees, and total value of products as distinct from other branches of work carried on in the same establishments; however, hoops, bands, and cotton ties were reported in 1904 from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Georgia, Massachusetts, and Alabama; Pennsylvania produced 200,461 tons; Ohio, 102,823 tons; and the other 4 States, the remaining 33,939 tons. Skelp was produced by Pennsylvania to the extent of 1,058,588 tons, or two-thirds of the product of the country. Ohio made 211,624 tons; West Virginia, 192,644 tons; and Illinois, Connecticut, and New York produced the remaining 94,834 tons.

Barbed fence wire, wire rods, etc., are manufactured very largely in rolling mills and steel works under the same conditions as hoop iron. The total value of wire and wire products for these mills and for other establishments manufacturing wire and wire products independently of rolling mills, was, for the year 1904, approximately $83,354,000.

MORE THAN A MILLION MEN INVOLVED.

These figures are based upon the census of 1905 and will doubtless be vastly increased when the new census is completed. They are significant, and I commend them to the careful attention of every Member of this House, and to every citizen who may hereafter be called upon to vote upon these questions at the polls. In this mere free-trade "entering wedge" you strike at 63,994 establishments, capitalized at more than $2,000,000,000, with an annual product in 1905 of more than $3,700,000,000. And the number of wage earners employed—and this, from my point of view, is the most serious aspect of the entire controversy—was in excess of 1,079,000. Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, 1,000,000 wage earners means 1,000,000 families of 5 persons each. You are striking not only the wages of 1,000,000 men, but the consuming capacity of 5,000,000 souls, and this is only the beginning!

It is no time for the man in the West or the man in the South to stand against his brother in the East. If he grieves at abuses, let him look to the law and the administration of the law. To invoke the foreign corrective of free trade will be but to hurl the deadly boomerang, which recoils upon the thrower. We can not compete against the foreign manufacturer and yet maintain the American wage. And if we can not maintain that wage, we surely can not sustain the purchasing power which has afforded prosperity to the tiller of the soil. We want to continue to buy your eggs and your beef and your flour, and we want to continue to sell to you our textiles, our machinery, and our farming implements. We have been interdependent in our industrial and agricultural relations, and it is to be hoped that the pressure of Democratic oratory may not divide us, nor prompt us, in theory or in practice, to "kill the goose that lays the golden egg." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, as a farmer I rejoice in the great interest that has been manifested in this debate in behalf of the farmers of the United States.

This safeguarding of the farmers' interests is due in large measure to the fact that the farmers of the country are organized, and it is not amiss to say that they are organized for the sole purpose of securing a square deal, which has long been denied them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I hope the day will soon come when the farmers of the Nation will come into the full possession of all the benefits which are justly due them from all branches of one great government.

As a farmer, one among the few farmers in this House, I favored Canadian reciprocity. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As a Democrat I could figure no other course consistent with the declarations of my party in national council and in caucus in this House.

As a farmer I heartily indorse the bill now pending before this body, for the main reason that the farmers of this country will receive untold benefits from its passage.

As a Democrat I favor its enactment into law, because it is the redemption of one more pledge to the people by our party. So far as this House is concerned—which is the only branch of the Government we now control—I think I can safely predict the absolute fulfillment of every promise, which, when accomplished, will give us next year absolute control of all branches of this great Government. Our record so far justifies this belief and this hope. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Canadian-reciprocity agreement, of course, only applies to Canada. This bill applies to the whole world. Should any harm come from the first, the good of the second will largely predominate.

No harm will come from the first to the farmer, but great blessings will flow to him from the second.

Canadian reciprocity will prove a blessing; this free list will prove a godsend to the American farmer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I favored Canadian reciprocity because in agricultural products the balance of trade between Canada and the United States was largely in our favor. I will vote for this bill because in great measure it weakens the power of many great trusts which have plundered the farmer.

I favored Canadian reciprocity because it was the beginning of the end of the protective-tariff system. I favor this measure because it means the prosperity of the farmer and because it shows that the Democratic Party is the only sincere friend the farmer has in this country in national legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

With no financial investment of any character save in farming operations, with no knowlege of any profession save farming—and it is one of man's noblest professions—I am willing to risk my destiny on the policies outlined by my party. If failure comes, it will not be because of Democratic policies.

I have labored hard for the welfare of the farmer. I have given my time and means for his advancement. I am here because the farmers of my district trusted me. That trust is sacred to me. Their interest and their welfare is always uppermost in my mind; and as God has given me the light to see, I will advance their interest by my vote for this measure. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The tariff-protected interests of this country have met defeat because of their greed to oppress the people upon the necessities of life. The farmers of this country produce the main sustenance of human life—bread and meat. Any policy which demands more than a reasonable price for these two great foods must bring disaster to the farmer, because he is but one-third of our population, and our form of government is majority rule. It has never been the policy of the organized farmers of this country to ask anything save a reasonable price for their products. There is nothing in this bill to prevent a reasonable and profitable price for farm products, but there are many items which insure a reasonable price for what the farmer consumes, and this will prove profitable as well as novel to the American farmer.

The protective tariff on farm products is admitted a myth by Republican leaders; the taking away of the protective tariff from farm consumption of manufactured articles is but simple justice and true reciprocity as between the farmer and other classes.

Levy no tax save for revenue only.

As the farmer receives no benefit from the nominal tax on his production, he should not be burdened with a real tax upon his consumption.

To secure profits by legislation for any class means that other classes must be oppressed. It should never be the policy of our Government to grant special favors to special classes. This bill grants no special favor to the farmer in giving him many articles on the free list for his consumption, because his production has been on the free list, in effect, at all times.

This bill perfects the Democratic idea that as the farmer has always sold in the free markets of the world he should have the right to buy in the free markets of the world.

Considering the investment in money, the uncertainty of crop maturity, the great mental and physical labor involved, the farmers as a class have reaped but small benefit compared with other lines of business in the Nation.

The main reason for this condition of affairs is due in large measure to the fact that the farmer in his consumption paid heavy tribute to all other lines of business, which under the protective tariff have organized great trusts to plunder him in nearly every article he consumes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This bill is a "trust buster" of the first magnitude, and every Member of this House who is sincere in his professions to curb or break down the trusts should support it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This bill not only secures benefit to the farmers, but to millions of people in other walks of life, and it must be considered upon a broader plane than affecting only one class of our citizens.

Boots, shoes, harness, beef, veal, mutton, pork, lard, flour, corn meal, biscuit, bread, timber, shingles, sawed boards, sewing machines, salt, and numbers of other articles which are used by every citizen of our great country are put on the free list.

Though commonly called an agricultural free-list bill, its benefits directly reach every person in our cities as well as those upon the farms.

This bill helps to break down the barrier between the city and the farm, because it means increased trade among our people at home. The farmer will know that the value of what he buys is set by the natural law of supply and demand and that he is no longer the prey of his city brother, who has had the advantage over him by the legislation of a protective tariff.

I can not impress the fact too strongly upon the farmers of this country that, in large measure, the prices of their products depends upon their own action. I am a strong believer in farmers' organizations whose object is to secure reasonable prices for farm products. I commend every organization which tries to teach the farmer intelligent methods of marketing his produce. Distribution is a prime factor in the price of farm products.

No one can complain when the farmer, under the law of the land, by legal and honorable methods, by and through his own organizations, secures a reasonable price for his labor and his product.

I will always demand for the farmer a reasonable profit for his product, but to have that profit to come by his own effort and the use of his own sense in the sale of his crop and not by some law which must oppress others to help him.

As I would tear down the legal wall of the protective tariff that oppresses the farmer, so would I vote to wipe out any law which seeks to prevent the farmers from organizing to protect their interests or the laboring man to secure good wages. [Applause on the Democratic side.)

The farmers could by organization bring the balance of the world to their feet, because they have the power to starve by organizing a great trust of meat and bread.

You can not starve the farmer. He can live by himself. He can produce his bread, his meat, his shelter, and his clothes if necessary. Let the farmers of this country issue the order that for 60 days no wheat, no cattle, no hogs, no corn should go to the market and millions of people would face starvation.

The farmer has no desire to use his great power to oppress other people, but he does demand, and rightfully so, a reasonable price for his product and the right to buy unrestricted by arbitrary laws. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The bill now pending before this House gives him this right. The Democratic Party is responsible for it, and to our party the farmer owes this freedom.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I take great pride in laying before this House certain legislation which has been enacted in my own State for the benefit of our farmers. I have copies here of State laws which I will print in the RECORD as a guide to other States, and I ask the membership of this House to give them careful consideration. I trust you will have them adopted in your States. They have rendered untold benefit to Kentucky farmers, and will bring great relief to your farmers if you will adopt them. They have been upheld by the highest court in Kentucky as constitutional. I am glad to say that I had some part in their enactment, and the gentleman from the fourth Kentucky district [Mr. JOHNSON] was largely responsible for the passage of some of these acts.

An act to amend section 3 of an act of the General Assembly of Commonwealth of Kentucky, approved March 21, 1906, entitled "An act permitting persons to combine or pool their crops of wheat, tobacco, and other products and sell same as a whole, and making contracts in pursuance thereof valid," being chapter 117 of the acts of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky for the year 1906.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. That section 3 of an act entitled "An act permitting persons to combine or pool their crops of wheat, tobacco, and other products and sell same as a whole, and making contracts in pursuance thereof valid," approved March 21, 1906, being chapter 117 of the acts of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky for the year 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

Such persons so entering into such an agreement or contract as is set out in the foregoing section are hereby permitted to select an agent or agents through or by or with whom said parties so entering into such agreement may classify, grade, store, hold, sell, or dispose of said crop, or any of them, and said agent or agents shall have the right to take, receive, hold, store, classify, grade, sell, or dispose of said crop so placed in said agreement for the purpose of accomplishing the object of such combination or agreement between such principals; and contracts and agreements entered into by such agent or agents for the purpose of classifying, grading, storing, holding, selling, or disposing of said crop so combined, united, or pooled, either in parcel or as a whole, are hereby permitted, and shall not, because of any such combination or purpose of such original agreement of such principals so entering into said combination, or of such agent or agents, be declared illegal or invalid. All contracts heretofore made by any person or persons for the purposes set out in the foregoing sections are hereby declared valid, if otherwise legally binding on the parties.

To prevent any breach or violation of any contract made for the purposes set out in the foregoing sections a restraining order and writ of injunction may be written by a proper officer, as prescribed in the Civil Code of Practice.

For any breach or violation of any contract entered into for the purposes set out in the foregoing sections the injured party may recover the damages sustained by him by reason of such violation of such contracts of the person violating the same, and also of any person who shall induce or persuade another to violate such contract, which damages shall include the reasonable expense and attorney's fees incurred by the injured party in prosecuting an action to recover such damages or to prevent a violation of such contract, if the party complaining shall succeed in doing so, which may be recovered in the same action or original proceeding. Said agent, when so selected as herein provided, shall have the sole right to sell said crop so pooled or combined, and it shall be unlawful for any owner of such crop to sell or dispose of same and for any person knowingly to purchase the same without the written consent of such agent, and upon conviction thereof he or they shall be fined in any sum or amount not exceeding $250 for each offense, to be fixed by the jury in their discretion.

SEC. 2. Whereas many crops of tobacco and other products have been combined and pooled in this State under contract and agreement entered into for the purposes set out in the above section an emergency is now declared to exist which requires that this act shall take effect from and after its passage and approval by the governor.

(Approved Mar. 13, 1908.)

An act to prevent the sale or transfer of personal property where the possession is in one person and the title thereto is vested in another.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for any person having the possession of personal property, the title to which is vested in another, to sell or otherwise dispose of such property without the written consent of the person in whom the title is vested. Any person guilty of such offense shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each offense. Any person having notice of the manner in which such property is held, who shall purchase it of the person having the possession thereof, or of any other person without the written consent of the person in whom the title is vested, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 for each offense.

SEC. 2. An emergency exists for the immediate operation of this law, therefore the same shall be in force from and after its enactment.

(Approved, Mar. 24, 1908.)

An act to amend an act entitled "An act permitting warehousemen to commingle tobacco of like grades," approved March 25, 1908.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. That section 3 of an act entitled "An act permitting warehousemen to commingle tobacco of like grades," approved March 25, 1908, be, and the same is, amended, and the said act is amended by adding at the end of section 3 thereof the following words: "And it is provided that any of such warehousemen may in such receipts agree and bind themselves to pay the person rightfully holding same and entitled thereto the value of the property described therein, in the event of loss or damage from any cause while in the possession of such warehousemen."

So that said section when amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 3. All warehouse receipts so issued by any corporation, company, partnership, or individual engaged in the business as above set forth shall be negotiable and transferrable by indorsement in blank or by special indorsement and with like liability as bills of exchange now are and with like remedy thereon. And it is provided that any of such warehousemen may in such receipts agree and bind themselves to pay the person rightfully holding the same and entitled thereto the value of the property described therein, in the event of loss or damage from any cause while in the possession of such warehousemen."

SEC. 2. Inasmuch as the tobacco crop in this Commonwealth is now being delivered to warehousemen, and the growers can not otherwise secure the benefit of this act, an emergency is declared to exist, and this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

(Approved, Mar. 4, 1910.)

An act to authorize and regulate the recordation of agreements for pooling farm products.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. It shall be lawful for any person or corporation to whom or to which any article of farm products has been pooled or pledged for any purpose to record a list of the persons pooling or pledging same, together with a general description of the land upon which same was grown, or proposed to be grown, in the office of the clerk of the county court of the county in which said land is situated.

SEC. 2. Such recordation shall have the same effect as to creditors or purchasers as the recordation of chattel mortgages.

SEC. 3. Any person buying or soliciting pool or pledged property the list of which have been recorded as herein provided, shall upon conviction be fined not less than $10 nor more than $1,000 or imprisoned not less than 15 nor more than 90 days, or both so fined and imprisoned.

SEC. 4. For recording the agreements herein provided for the clerk shall be allowed a fee of 2 cents for each 20 words.

SEC. 5. Whereas it is greatly to the interest of the farmers of the State that a public record should be kept which shall be notice that their farm products have been pooled or pledged, an emergency is declared, and this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

(Disapproved, Mar. 8, 1910.)

Passed March 8, 1910, the objections of the governor to the contrary notwithstanding.

An act to declare lawful agreements to abstain growing crops of any given kind for any definite period.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. That it shall be lawful for the growers of any kind of farm products to agree to abstain from growing any kind of crops for any given period or season.

(Neither approved nor disapproved by the governor.)

An act to further regulate the pooling of farm products.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. It is hereby declared lawful for any number of persons to combine, unite, or pool any or all of the crops of wheat, tobacco, corn, oats, hay, or other farm products raised by them, or proposed to be raised by them, whether or not the said crops have been sowed, set, pitched, or planted, for the purpose of classifying, grading, storing, holding, selling, or disposing of same, either in parcels or as a whole, in order or for the purpose of obtaining a greater or higher price therefor than they might or could obtain or receive by selling said crops separately or individually.

SEC. 2. Whereas it is greatly to the interest of the farmers of the Commonwealth and a public generally that the privilege defined in section 1 of this act should be speedily declared, an emergency is declared to exist, and this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

(Neither approved nor disapproved by the governor.)

Almost every article placed on the free list in this bill is controlled by some great trust. The American people for years have taxed themselves to build up these great trusts, and now that they have grown to be oppressive industrial giants, more than able to defend themselves in the markets of the world, it is time for the people to cease taxing themselves and demand justice from their own creations which seek to destroy them.

One of the fundamental principles of Democracy is "the greatest good to the greatest number." There will never be a downward revision of the tariff in the interest of all of the people so long as each individual Member upon this floor seeks to protect some special interest in his district. If necessity demands, we must be willing to make some personal sacrifice for the common good of our great country. I have the honor to represent the great hemp-producing district in the United States. The production of hemp in the United States has been confined almost entirely to the Blue Grass region of Kentucky. The placing of India hemp, or jute, upon the free list has, in effect, put our farmers out of business on that crop. Yet our farmers have not come to Congress with a single petition asking for a duty on jute.

The placing of a protective duty on jute means a higher price for hemp, but it also means a higher price for the twine of the grain growers, for the burlap of the cotton growers, for the cordage of the entire Nation, and our people are not selfish enough to ask that a tax be placed upon every farmer of the Nation in order that they might add some value to their hemp crop. I commend the patriotic spirit of the people whom I represent. We are willing to contribute our share to a downward revision of the tariff in order to lighten the burden of labor and agriculture, so long overburdened with unjust taxation.

I desire to add to my remarks a note on the hemp crop, which I will not take time to read, but will put it in the RECORD.

The loss of revenue to the Government under this bill is $10,028,989. This amount is inconsiderable in comparison with the great saving and advantage to all of our people. By the policy of economy which the Democratic Party proposes to inaugurate there will not be the great demand for revenue, and this amount will not be missed. The cutting off of one battleship will fill up the gap caused by this free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Kentuckians are always for peace, and especially on water. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The American farmer has been unnecessarily frightened by Canadian reciprocity. My belief is that the farmer will receive a benefit therefrom. A Republican President (not his party) and a Democratic House can share the honors of Canadian reciprocity. This bill was drawn and will be passed by the united Democratic Party upon this floor. If defeat comes in the Senate or the veto comes from the White House, it will strike a deadly blow at the home of every farmer and laboring man in the Nation. I trust for once at least the Republican Party will forget partisan politics and give agriculture and labor their just due.

The Democracy did not hesitate to vote for Canadian reciprocity for the reason that it was recommended by a Republican President. With dignity and patriotism we met the issue and saved a Republican President from disgrace and humiliation at the hands of his own party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

To-day we present this bill for the relief of labor and agriculture. Will the Republican Party, in control of every branch of the Government except this House, permit labor to prosper and agriculture to blossom and ripen into a glorious harvest?

The threat of corporate gold is beginning to be heard on account of the passage of this bill. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has told this House of the threat of the Steel Trust in his district. No doubt threats to bring on a panic in the Nation will be made in other congressional districts. It is the old story of corporate greed. If the trusts can not rule the country, they will destroy its peace and prosperity.

That threat means a broader controversy than is embodied in this bill. It reaches to the foundation of American Government. The question must be settled, "Which is the greater, the power of the people through their Government or the power of the trusts?" [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The trusts should take heed from the verdict of the American people rendered at the polls last fall. If the trusts of this country undertake to punish the American people for that verdict, they will "have sown the wind and shall reap the whirlwind."

For a great trust to deliberately and maliciously undertake to destroy the peace and prosperity of this Nation is as grave a crime as for the anarchist to strike at the very foundation of Government by murder or treason, and I for one am ready to help write upon the statute books of our land any law sufficient to prevent the deed. It has been shown repeatedly that the Steel Trust and other great trusts of this Nation need no legislative protection.

Their bluffs and their threats should be called by this House and the issue taken direct to the people as to whether they or the trusts are masters. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, by the passage of this bill agriculture will be greatly stimulated. The cry has gone up from the overcrowded cities of "back to the farm." The people now can go back to the farm with new hope and new energy. Our boys and girls can stay on the farms, because the Democratic Party proposes to see to it that they will not be driven away by unjust taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The necessities of the field and home will be put upon the free list, and the farmer boy will no longer be the serf of some great trust. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The farmer will gather new inspirations and new joys, and, with good humor and good cheer, bountifully feed the world.

Mr. Chairman, the farmer is the solid rock upon which rests the security of this Nation. It is his labor, his conservatism, his patriotism, which is the great balance wheel in the vast machinery of our national existence. Generous in nature, sound in sense, clean in morals, the American farmer turns back the tide which would sweep us either into plutocracy or into anarchy. In the American farmer is the main hope for the continuation of a democracy. May God stay the day when we forget the farmers.

Nine billions of dollars each year is the contribution of the American farmer to the national wealth!

Surely the Senate and the President will not deny the benefits of this bill to the makers of such magnificent wealth. If they do, there will be a new Senate and a new President at the next election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The farmers had a hand in the last election; in the next they will have both hands. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Just one year ago, upon the floor of this House, I warned the President against the oppression of the farmer. His administration had dragged Kentucky farmers into the Federal courts and convicted them because they dared to organize to protect themselves from the Tobacco Trust.

At that time I used this language upon the floor of this House:

> Is the President willing to go before the farmers of Ohio in the campaign to be held in that State this fall upon the issue of whether the farmers have the right to fix the price of their products themselves, either singly or collectively?
>
> Is he willing to have brought into the limelight the records of the two worthies believed to be responsible for the prosecution of the Burley Tobacco Society? This question being answered in the affirmative, Judson Harmon ought to be reelected governor of Ohio by a majority of 100,000.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I missed the figure only 377. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

As a Democrat I rejoice at the great work already done in this House for the benefit of all of the people by my party. There is more good yet to come. I rejoice at the solid front we present to the disorganized and dismembered party on the other side. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By organization and by teamwork great victories are ahead of us. Let no Democrat pull back in the harness—harness is on the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.] With free sewing machines the farmers' wives can sew up our protection friends, the standpatters, in free burlap and salt them away with free salt to keep until the final judgment day. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the hope of the American farmer is in his own organization and in the policies of the Democratic Party. I am a great believer in organization. In referring to a speech I made here in 1909 I find these words:

> When, by organization, the Democrats of the South stand side by side and divide honors with the great States of Ohio and Indiana, and other States North, West, and East that made such Democratic gains in the last election, we can land the Hon. CHAMP CLARK in the Speaker's chair and the White House after that.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

CHAMP CLARK is in the Speaker's chair [applause], and the White House is waiting for a Democrat. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, we novices in the art or profession of manufacturing Federal law, subject, of course, to revision by the Senate, the President, the Supreme Court, and the powers above, have eagerly absorbed what has been said and have learned much that can not possibly be true. How could it all be true when judged by the votes on the reciprocity treaty and by the explanations given for those votes? There is no consensus of opinion on either side of the House, even amongst the most experienced and tutored as to the causes or probable effects of that measure.

In so far as the discussion relates to the protective-tariff theory, there is, however, some unanimity on one point, at least a partial agreement that the protective tariff should be regarded as a "local issue." That this particular national policy must be wrought out of the clash of class, section, district, and other special interests, and settled by a sort of mutual give-and-take, less euphemistically known as log-rolling. This makes of the tariff a sort of a grab bag, and we may reasonably expect that the more powerful get the first, last, and biggest grabs.

I am a Republican, or what used to be a Republican [applause on the Republican side], because I believe in the protection of infant industries that stand some eventual chance of becoming self-sustaining. That many of these industries, once fostered by protection, are now self-sustaining and do not need a protective tariff is abundantly shown and notoriously confessed as to the great steel industry by Mr. Andrew Carnegie. Many industries, having outgrown the cradle, have not been required to hustle for their livelihood, but have been carried bodily to a ward in a hospital where our stand-pat friends advocate keeping them during all eternity, to be doctored, nursed, and nourished at the public expense. One is reminded of the prayer of the man who possessed a cantankerous invalid wife: "Oh, Lord, let her get well, or—or—something." [Laughter.]

It is argued that by taxing one industry for the benefit of another industry, and vice versa, we create a home market that is productive of wealth. This brings to mind a story told by David Starr Jordan concerning the eagle and the blue-tailed lizard. It seems that the eagle one day swooped down upon the lizard and bit off and ate the lizard's tail; whereupon the eagle acquired sufficient energy to lay an egg. The lizard climbed the tree, sucked the egg, and, through the encouragement thus afforded, grew a new tail. This process continued through many years, apparently, without much profit to either party save as it added to the interest of existence. [Laughter.]

A tale of similar import, but more profitable sequence, was related of a man who lived near the Petaluma marshes and started to raise carp. He was doing fairly well selling carp from his pond, when he suddenly conceived the idea of raising a side line of cats for the fur. He discovered that he could feed the carp to the cats and the cats to the carp, so that he increased mightly in his output of cats and carp and became wealthy. [Laughter.]

I have learned, Mr. Chairman, that it is customary to decorate the oratory of this floor with fruits, with flowers, with flags, and with farmers in various states of happiness and misery. [Laughter.] I respectfully submit a poem produced by a laureate of my district and which concerned itself with the tariff speeches of my esteemed opponent at the primaries:

I read these tariff speeches o'er—the more I read of them the more I do not know, but then I can rely upon our Congressman. Upon the very slightest hint he puts a red-hot speech in print, and when he prints that speech, you see, he has it mailed out here to me.

Mac makes it very clear just how if I pay more than I do now for socks and gloves and baby's dress—while I pay more they cost me less. And then he shows me where I lose by paying somewhat less for shoes, for though I pay less than before, my shoes they really cost me more.

He makes it clear to me that what I lose I gain, you see; and on such things as clothes and shoes I seem to gain but really lose. Thus, if I buy my socks too low, they'll still be higher—Dunc says so—and shoes I thought were high last fall were really low shoes after all.

[Laughter.]

Mac says if I pay less for shoes or hats, the maker has to lose. And if he loses, then, you see, he charges up the loss to me. Now, when I have to pay him more, he reckons profits to his store, and Duncan finds a share for me in all of this prosperity.

The speeches shed a radiant light upon the theme and make it bright; I merely read them o'er and o'er to find more's less and less is more. In buying hat, or coat, or vest, dear's cheap, and cheap is dear at best. High's low, low's high, far's near, near's far, white's black, black's white—and there you are.

We live in topsy-turvy land when McKinlay waves his magic wand.

[Laughter.]

Concerning the change and evolution that has come over the early Republican protective doctrine, designed to foster infant industries, I would further submit the following:

Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow;
It followed her to Pittsburg,
And now you ought to see the darned thing.

[Laughter and applause.]

The old idea of encouraging new industries is being destroyed by the present system, for, in so far as trusts and monopolies are being encouraged, individual enterprise and individual initiative are being suppressed. A monopoly need not confine its charges to a high percentage of profit on the product, but it can charge up to the public all the graft and mismanagement that may go to make up its costs. It is not compelled to be efficient. It can afford to dispense with improvements in machinery and methods. It can put valuable patents in cold storage. Thus the tariff, in so far as it aids the trusts, throttles progress instead of fostering industry.

In song and oratory we are properly reminded of the gratitude we owe to the Providence that placed us in this land of liberty and plenty. Is there not shown a lack of appreciation when we hear the solemn assertions made by some of the gentlemen that our prosperity is not due to the natural bounties of our country, not to the genius and efficiency of our people, but to a system of taxing ourselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Whenever protest is made against the existing protective tariff an argument promptly adduced in its favor is one which was best phrased by the Hon. "Bathhouse" Coughlin in the city hall of Chicago. He asked a fellow alderman how he could advocate the creation of prohibition territory and consequent loss of revenue from saloon licenses, when, as he stated it, "we are all of us heartily in need of funds." If either the Government or any interest happens to be "heartily in need of funds," there is always a means of raising revenue by boosting the tariff. I do not believe that it helps matters much to hold that we ought to lower the wall to such a point as to provide only for the higher wages of American labor plus a profit to the manufacturer or producer. This amendment still justifies the establishment in our country of industries that do not belong here. It would justify the raising of cocoanuts in hothouses. It would justify a tremendous tax upon tea in order that the laborer engaged in tea culture could be recompensed at upward of a dollar a day, while he is now receiving probably less than 10 cents a day on the other side of the ocean. I am unpatriotic enough to be grateful to the heathens who in their blindness are picking tea for us at that rate of wages, and I would not advocate forcing them to adopt our standard of living by the wearing of American clothes, or even the drinking of Missouri champagne, Mr. Chairman, for I fear they might be brought to feel the necessity of charging us more for doing us this service.

No one has ever shown any fund from which can be drawn the tax levied by the tariff and paid out in subsidies to the protected interests except the fund that resides in the pockets of the people. Those who assume that the tariff is a means of creating prosperity or of creating wealth are much better at juggling and at picking coins out of the air than was Hermann, the magician. If we can tax ourselves rich, we can prove poker to be a productive industry. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Equally, an individual may become opulent by shifting coins from one pocket to another, and the Nation can acquire wealth, if not merit, by unanimously consenting to the reciprocal picking of pockets by all the people.

Economists would doubtless urge that this universal and fairly distributed pocket-picking system would be unproductive, but we have had too much of doctrinaire teachings to listen to any more of it.

It might be surmised that should the pocket-picking system become thoroughly established it would not be equally enjoyable to all the people. There would be some more adept than others. There would probably be coteries formed in the profession that would band together in "strong-arm" or "hold-up" work, and when, if perchance through popular clamor, because of overactivity, the practice were put into partial disrepute, and there arose the question of proper limitation, it would be found that the least skilled and the unorganized would first be deprived of the privilege of picking pockets. [Laughter.]

Through many of us newly elected Members the people are protesting, not against the wealth of the country, but against the present system of distribution, which fully deserves the bitter resentment it has incurred. The evils of distribution are caused by special privileges and the protective tariff creates and licenses privilege. It would not interest the men described in the Pittsburg Survey, who are worked to death and thrown on the junk pile, to figure out and to ascertain how many wives per annum a Pittsburg millionaire could afford out of the dividends of the Steel Trust. [Laughter.] Rather would he be interested in supporting one wife and some few children with less work and more pay. There would be little satisfaction to a cash girl working for Marshall Field & Co. at a weekly wage of $3 to know that she and that corporation were jointly worth over $50,000,000. [Laughter.] The people are not satisfied with statistics of national wealth, they want better conditions for themselves.

But after all, the greatest sin that can be laid at the door of the protective tariff is the economic waste which it encourages. The fortunes piled up by the richest men of the country amount to nothing when set against the annual loss caused by the employment of men in unjustifiable occupations.

A subsidy which supports those occupations must come from other occupations which belong on our soil and in our country, and the men engaged in either the wrong thing or the right thing in the wrong place form an army which we might call the "army of the mal-employed." They have to be supported by the well employed, just as much as every standing army is a charge upon industry.

Some day I expect to hear our stand-pat Republican friends making the old confession, "We have caused to be done those things that ought not to be done; we have left undone those things that ought to be done, and there is no health in us." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The RECORD, with its vast compilation of statistics, shows a mathematical ability engaged in proving out what is logically absurd. The accuracy of the almanac does not prove the value of the nostrum it advertises, nor can questions of ethics be determined by the use of logarithms. One is rather inclined to doubt the efficacy of such figures when they are used to prove views diametrically opposed. We certainly get into "topsy-turvy land" when we try to follow the statistics. You must remember the old rhyme—

Down here below two and two make four;
Perhaps up in heaven they make six or seven.

The statement was made on this floor that the dividends paid on the stocks of the great corporations were the proof of the wealth of the country and meant prosperity. There might properly be query made as to whether dividends represent the fruit of production or extortion, whether they were produced by the use of plow and ax or spindle and loom, or whether they were "produced" at the point of a revolver or searched for in the pockets of victims rendered unconscious by sandbag or lead pipe.

As a freshman in this course of education, I can not understand how a country can get rich by sharing its natural resources with all who choose to come, dividing our patrimony, as it were, and at the same time keeping out all possible things that can be excluded that would go to increase the size of our hoard. Privilege clamors for cheap labor and immediate development of everything. Statesmanship calls for readjustment of opportunity for ourselves and our children.

The balance of trade argument is not entirely convincing to some of us. Whenever China or Russia improve their balance of trade by exporting foodstuffs in time of famine, there seems to be something the matter with the mathematical self-sufficiency of this theory. If a freezing tramp should sell his clothes, he certainly would improve his balance of trade, although not his condition. [Laughter and applause.]

Anyone who has lived on the Pacific coast can not fail to entertain profound respect for the self-helping ability of the Japanese. They are the most remarkable self-helpers in all the world, and no one need ever again invite them to help themselves. Some two years ago, in the islands of Hawaii, just at a time when the cane-grinding season was at hand, the Japanese engaged in that industry unanimously struck. They did not appear to be satisfied with their wages nor disposed to recognize the contract they had made with the planters, which procedure was not entirely original on their part. In the course of the dispute they wrote a series of resolutions to the planters to the effect "that it was the duty of the planters, in accordance with the true American principle of protection, to get an increase in the sugar duty and thereby raise the value of sugar, and then out of the added profit they should divide with the laborers." Strange that this simple and excellent and wholly American plan was not at once adopted. [Laughter.]

Let us consider some more phases of Hawaiian sugar. The business was built up first under subsidy and then under a protective tariff. The sugar land is nearly all of it in the hands of the great corporations. These corporations are paying large dividends on inflated values. This is the upper crust of the pie. Next there comes a filling of upward of 400,000 tons of sugar, for which, together with all other sugar, imported and domestic, the American people are paying heavy taxes. The lower crust consists of oriental labor. The yellow man is everywhere displacing the white man, even in the skilled occupations. The white man of small means has little or no chance to inhabit the "Paradise of the Pacific." It is to-day a country of corporations and yellow men. The white men are so greatly outnumbered that there seems danger that the pie may be turned over, to the obvious benefit of the under crust, but to the destruction of the upper crust. To prevent such an unfortunate occurrence and to protect the protected sugar industry we are taxed for an increase in our Navy. To protect the Navy, which must protect the protected sugar industry, we must be taxed to fortify Pearl Harbor. To protect Pearl Harbor, to protect the Navy, to protect the protected sugar industry, we must keep near Pearl Harbor a considerable army of men, and these must be supported out of public taxation.

This is an illustration of the "American doctrine," and the American consumer can realize as he pays his grocery bills that he is not only patriotically encouraging an American industry for the benefit of corporations and yellow labor, but that he is encouraging an indefinite increase in our Navy and a probable increase in our Army, always with the possibility that the Navy and the Army aforesaid may have to be actively used to further protect the protected sugar industry, with all the waste of life and of property incident to war, and at a very rough estimate with four hundred and eighteen thousand millions of dollars of pensions to pay in the years to come. [Laughter.]

I can not agree with those gentlemen on the majority side who believe in a tariff for revenue. There is doubtless justification for a high tariff on certain luxuries, but there is no fairness in a revenue tariff laid upon necessities. The burden is not upon the proper shoulders. Mr. Rockefeller probably pays less Government revenue on the food he consumes than does the average hod carrier. He would doubtless like to pay as much, but he can not without eating as much. For the present we must look to the tariff for revenue. Eventually we shall provide for Government funds from income tax, from heavy taxation of community-created land values, from rentals of the public domain, all of them direct and comprehensible. We shall have internal-revenue taxation on articles not necessities.

I have discussed theory without any idea that we could afford or should make any sweeping changes at once. Too many people inhabit the rickety structure to permit of its immediate demolition. A revision downward, schedule by schedule, is the beginning of the work, and a notice to make preparations to vacate. [Applause on the Democratic side.] At some time or other these patients, the "invalid industries," must leave the hospital, whether to turn their steps to self-support or to the cemetery. [Laughter.] They can not forever remain parasitic. The tariff has been too often revised upward by its friends. The people have commissioned its enemies to revise it downward. That we may have a more just system of distribution and a more equitable system of taxation, we must study the sources of our wealth and the means whereby this wealth may be saved and increased for the benefit of the many.

There is great hope in the growing ideals and the clearing outlines of the great policies of State and national conservation. By saving the common wealth for all our people and by wiping out the great special privileges in land and other natural resources, by breaking down the extortions of monopoly and by regulation of our public utilities, we shall make this country better for the average man, and no worse for any man. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] 30 minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, as a new Member of this House I am a trifle hesitant in rising for the first time to present my views in the form of a speech.

I was much interested, night before last, in the dream of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. His dream of empire in all things commercial, financial, and political, given and foreordained by the Almighty, but still needing the aid and protection of mere men for its perfect fulfillment, entranced me.

His wonderful revelation of the final purposes of All-Wisdom, under the guiding hand, however, of the owners of the soil in the cotton belt, was not, nevertheless, completely satisfying.

To my mind—developed in a harsher and less favored climate, where life is not one long, sweet dream of universal dominion, as it is a struggle to find means to keep warm most of the year and to keep cool the remainder—it left some things undisclosed or undeveloped. When his dream is fulfilled, when all people are converted from a fondness for wool, and the sheep shall have become as extinct as the dinosaur and the dodo, when the taste of mutton and of lamb shall be as forgotten as the flavor of the viands at Belshazzar's feast, will the lords of the soil in the cotton belt extend to the world and the people thereof something of the grace that has been shown to them, or will they take advantage of their monopoly and charge all the traffic will bear? [Applause on the Republican side.]

When the peoples of those portions of the earth where cotton has been grown and spun and woven and worn for ages before the soil of his empire was disclosed to the eyes of civilized man come knocking at his door seeking market for their cheaper wares, will he invoke the law for their exclusion or will he invite them to his feast? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Pending the fulfillment of the dream and during the process of construction, I am of those who can not see that harm or injustice has been done to him or his, because under a system of human laws industries have grown up here that give employment to thousands who live in less favored spots, who do not expect to enter into his kingdom, that have furnished market for enough of cotton to give a manufactured product of over $450,000,000 each year, and other industries that use cotton as a part of their product, to the value of the cotton consumed in them of over $34,000,000 more.

However, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to engage in a general debate on the question of protection versus free trade. I content myself with saying that I am a protectionist, and desire to foster every industry that needs it in this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I rose to say a few words, present a few figures, and show why the products of one industry should not be included in this or any other free list.

As I come from a manufacturing State and from a district which has a great and vital interest in this proposed bill, I do desire, however, to state why the proposed placing of boots and shoes upon the free list works a great harm to a large body of honest laboring people. I believe also that it will work harm to the people that the members of the majority of this House claim that they desire to benefit.

A protectionist by faith and by the demonstrations of recent commercial history, I have believed that the claim of the benefits of diversified industries is a sound one, and that by their growth and increase the farmer has benefited and gained an advantage by the creation of markets at his door. In my judgment the prophecy of the early exponents of the protective policy has been bountifully and wonderfully fulfilled and the faith in it of my Republican predecessors marvelously justified.

My reasoning has been done on the basis of what I have seen in the manufacturing section where we are consumers of food products and not producers.

I do not desire to trespass long on the time of this House, but I do desire to call attention to some things.

First, I want to call attention to the New England group of States, according to the last bulletin that I have been able to get. We have in that group of States wage earners in our shops and factories to the number of 940,750 people. We pay to them annually wages to the amount of $439,050,232, and they turn out products to the annual value of $2,025,998,437. The details of these figures I have set forth by States in the table, which I will not stop to read if it may be made to appear in the RECORD:

New England wage earners and wages.

	Number.	Wages.	Value of products.
Connecticut	181,605	$87,942,628	$309,082,091
Maine	74,958	32,691,759	144,030,197
Massachusetts	488,399	232,388,946	1,124,092,051
New Hampshire	65,366	27,693,203	123,610,904
Rhode Island	97,318	43,112,637	202,109,583
Vermont	33,106	15,221,059	63,083,611
Total	940,750	439,050,232	2,025,998,437

Following the usual method of calculation, but giving a margin for safety in the figures, we may allow four persons dependent on the wages of one wage earner—3,663,000 people who are looking to the work in the shops and factories for their livelihood.

These wage earners spend their money, as we do, pretty largely for food. In my section they are accustomed to three meals a day, 365 days in the year, when work is plenty. We furnish the markets for the producers of the West, the far West, and the South. The grains and meats of the Middle West, the fruits of California, the early fruits and vegetables of Georgia, Florida, and the Carolinas, come to us to be consumed and find a ready and constant market.

In the matter of the particular industry for which I wish to speak the figures are instructive, and at least furnish food for reflection. It is a widespread industry, free from trusts and combinations. It is an industry that is throughout the country:

Boot and shoe industry.

(1,316 factories.)

Capital	$122,526,093
Wage earners	149,924
Wages	$69,059,680
Materials	$197,363,495
Product	$320,107,458

This industry is distributed over 17 States, which turn out an annual product of $1,000,000 and upward, besides other States which have a smaller output.

I have prepared a table of those 17 States, showing the number of wage earners in that industry in each State and the annual value of the product of each. This table I will not read, unless it is demanded, if it may appear in the RECORD. It may be enough to say that the number of wage earners in those States varies from 579 in the smallest to 74,191 in the largest, and that the grand total employed in that industry is 171,891, and that the annual value of the boot and shoe product of those 17 States is $314,290,987.

Wage earners in the boot and shoe industry in 17 States.

California	819
Connecticut	579
Illinois	4,891
Kentucky	861
Maine	7,001
Maryland	735
Massachusetts	74,191
Michigan	2,000
Minnesota	1,930
Mississippi	11,903
New Hampshire	12,226
New Jersey	4,483
New York	19,086
Ohio	15,374
Pennsylvania	9,968
Vermont	1,943
Wisconsin	3,901
Total	171,891

Distribution of industry, States producing $1,000,000 and over.

California	$1,677,688
Connecticut	1,279,755
Illinois	9,026,238
Kentucky	1,029,939
Maine	12,351,293
Maryland	$1,011,393
Massachusetts	144,291,426
Michigan	3,531,028
Minnesota	4,169,732
Mississippi	23,493,552
New Hampshire	22,425,700
New Jersey	6,977,300
New York	34,137,049
Ohio	25,140,220
Pennsylvania	14,607,867
Virginia	2,627,244
Wisconsin	6,513,563
Total	314,290,987

In my own State of Massachusetts there are 502 establishments; there is an average number of over 62,000 people employed, which runs in good times to over 74,000 people; there are over $33,000,000 in wages paid out; there is a product of an annual value of over $144,000,000; and our average wage rate is the highest in that industry in any section in the world. Brockton, in my district, pays more than any other place. I have prepared again a table, and those figures I will now read:

Boot and shoe industry in Massachusetts.

Establishments	502
Wage earners	62,633
Wages	$33,106,667
Materials	$88,493,009
Value of product	$144,291,426
Average wage	$529.44
Above average	$68.84

When I have called your attention to the figures of the shoe industry I have told but half the story. For every wage earner in the shoe factories in the city of Brockton there are many others whose industry depends on his, but whose industrial product is mentioned in no tariff and is covered by no schedule.

Shoemakers do not build the factories in which they work, the houses in which they live, the store in which they spend their money, the bank in which they deposit their savings, the schoolhouses in which their children learn to be good citizens, or the churches in which they worship.

The craftsmen whose product is the completed structure for all of these, built upon the spot, benefits as much and often more than the workman in the factory. The duty covers him indirectly but none the less surely, and he prospers when they do and goes without work and without food and clothes when they do. [Applause on the Republican side.]

These men and their families, again, are consumers and not producers of food. They, too, form a large army; they earn a large amount of money; and they, too, make the market for the products of the soil. All of these have been hard pressed the last few years. All the protection they now have is 10 per cent on boots and shoes. It is perilously low and leaves them on the danger line now.

With Germany and France and Canada imposing duties on boots and shoes, with these countries equipped with the same machinery that our own people have, copying the style and methods, gaining in efficiency in the use of our most approved machinery, and with a wage rate only about one-half of ours, can we expect to benefit the boot and shoe worker by putting his product on the free list?

If you destroy or seriously injure so great an industry, if you send our manufacturers to Canada and Germany and England, to make there, with the same machinery but with cheaper labor, and send in here free of all duty that which has been made here and has supported so many, what answer will you make to the abandoned and desperate body of workers, and what will you say to the farmer who loses so great a food market here at home when they ask you why you have done this thing? [Applause on the Republican side.]

You are proposing to do this to placate the farmer. I have more confidence in that same farmer than you have. I have seen him in the days from 1878 down through 1879 and the early eighties, when drought parched his crops, when the grasshopper pest ate the rest, and when the resumption of specie payment imposed upon him an added burden of debt, sit down with aching but brave heart and a good conscience and refuse to follow the Democratic-Socialistic doctrine of repudiation under the guise of "greenbackism."

I have seen him from 1890 to 1896, when neither he nor the workers in our shops and factories prospered and when things pressed him hard, refuse again to follow the proposed remedy of 16 to 1.

I have seen him steadily following out and supporting the doctrine of protection because he believed that as industry grew around him he profited through his own home markets, and he relied more upon those markets than he did upon the duties set forth in the tariff schedule.

That same farmer is a wise man. He notices that in the last 10 years the population of this country has increased 12,000,000.

He believes that Mother Columbia is not yet sterile, and that in the next ten years she will add to her family some 19,000,000 more. He knows that this added 19,000,000 have got to be fed, as well as housed and employed, and that he will have his hands full in feeding the family.

I have faith to believe that in offering to him old Doctor Democrat's unvaried panacea for that "tired feeling," and every ill, from toothache to smallpox—and like that liniment that was offered to Bill Sykes after his slaughter of the hapless Nancy, also good to remove spots from the trousers and stains from the soul—your Democratic free-trade mixture, you will find he will refuse to take it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In behalf of that industry I ask you to stop and pause before you do us that harm. I live in the next town to the city of Brockton, which town is a little sister to that good city, as they are both children of the one mother, old Bridgewater. I had my office in Brockton for many years. I was there in 1892 and the years that followed. I know what happened to us when the shoe industry languished. I know what came to us when the factories closed and the work ceased. I do not want to see it again. I am speaking for the workers and not for the manufacturers.

The manufacturer will generally take care of himself, but when you say to these people that you are going to strike out that industry, you are going to open the markets of this country free to the world while every other country but England has a tariff from 17½ per cent to 35 per cent against us, I do not believe you are going to do the shoe worker or your farmer much good. In the interest of that industry and the 171,891 people engaged in it, I ask you to stop and think before you do this thing. You will answer to them if you do, and what that answer will be I think I know in my section. You are in control, and you advertise the wisdom with which you are going to deal with the affairs of the country. I invite your attention to some of the great internal questions of finance, commerce, and the regulation of these horrid monopolies, and I think you will find something there that is worthy for your great wisdom to be brought to bear upon which will bring more benefit to the country than it will to remove the tariff wall and strike down the industries we have which are of benefit to the farmer in the West and the factory worker of the East. Take out those things which keep them apart, and do not make us compete with all the world in a fair market where we have good wages and good living. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman from Massachusetts use?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixteen minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, it is a great honor to be a Member of this House and a great privilege to have the opportunity to address the Representatives of 90,000,000 free Americans. In view of this I may occupy the liberal time kindly yielded to me by my good friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and now, in the very beginning, I invite you, my brethren, to draw near and hear the true gospel of Democracy, pure and simple, as it shall be proclaimed unto you by the prophet Ezekiel. [Laughter and applause.]

Our distinguished and able Speaker, upon assuming the chair, when he was elected on the first day of this session, said this:

> My Democratic brethren, coupled with the joy of once more seeing a House a larger majority of which is of my own political faith is a keen sense of our responsibility to our country and our kind. It is an old adage worthy of acceptation that where much is given much is required.
>
> After 16 years of exclusion from power in the House and 14 years of exclusion from power in every department of Government, we are restored to power in the House of Representatives and in that alone. We are this day put upon trial, and the duty devolves upon us to demonstrate, not so much by fine phrases as by good works, that we are worthy of the confidence imposed in us by the voters of the land, and that we are also worthy of their wider confidence. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We could not if we would, and we would not if we could, escape this severe test. We will not shirk our duty. We shrink not from the responsibility. That we will prove equal to the situation in which we find ourselves placed through our own efforts and by our own desires there can be no doubt, and the way to accomplish that is to fulfill with courage, intelligence, and patriotism the promises made before the election in order to win the election. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By discharging our duty thoroughly and well, subordinating personal desires to principle and personal ambition to an exalted love of country, we will not only receive the indorsement of the people, but, what is far better, we will deserve their indorsement.
>
> Chief among these promises were:
>
> 1. An honest, intelligent revision of the tariff downward, in order to give every American citizen an equal chance in the race of life, and to pamper none by special favor or special privilege; to reduce the cost of living by eradicating the enormities and cruelties of the present tariff bill; and to raise the necessary revenue to support the Government. * * * [Applause on the Democratic side.]
>
> 2. The passage of a resolution submitting to the States for ratification a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by the popular vote. * * * [Applause.]
>
> 3. Such changes in the rules of the House as are necessary for the thorough and intelligent consideration of measures for the public good, several of which changes are accomplished facts; if other changes are deemed wise, they will be promptly made.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> 4. "Economy in the public expense that labor may be lightly burdened." The literal fulfillment of that promise which so nearly affects the comfort and happiness of millions we have begun—and we began at the proper place—by cutting down the running expenses of the House by more than $188,000 per annum. Economy, like charity, should begin at home. That is where we began. * * *
>
> The Constitution gives the House the practical control of the purse strings of the country, and the House should insist, resolutely and firmly, on exercising that control to the end that the appropriation bills may be reduced to the needs of the Government economically and effectively administered. It is our duty to provide every dollar needed for the proper and economical conduct of the Government, but it is equally our duty to prevent waste and extravagance in public expenditures, for we should never forget that it is a difficult task for millions of families to live now in decency and comfort. Surely it is the part of wisdom, statesmanship, humanitarianism, and patriotism to legislate so as to reduce their burdens to the minimum. * * * No good citizen desires to cripple the Government in any legitimate function, but no good citizen desires that the people be loaded down with unnecessary taxes.
>
> 5. The publication of campaign contributions and disbursements before the election. The bill to accomplish that desired reform has been prepared and introduced. It will be speedily passed by the House. * * *
>
> 6. The admission of both Arizona and New Mexico as States. [Applause.] I violate no confidence in stating that so far as the House is concerned, they will be speedily admitted and they will be admitted together. [Applause.]
>
> These are a few of the things which we promised. We are not only going to accomplish them, we have already begun the great task. What we have done is only an earnest of what we will do. We this day report progress to the American people. The rest will follow in due course.
>
> No man is fit to be a lawgiver for a mighty people who yields to the demands and solicititations of the few having access to his ear but is forgetful of that vast multitude who may never hear his voice or look into his face. [Applause.]
>
> I suggest to my fellow Members on both sides of the big aisle—which is the line of demarcation betwixt us as political partisans, but not as American citizens or American Representatives—that he serves his party best who serves his country best. [Applause.]

These were the words of our Democratic Speaker—a patriotic and honest sentiment, expressed in beautiful and in forceful language by a great and good man, whom we all delight to call our friend, CHAMP CLARK, whose big heart beats in unison with the throbbing hearts of the toiling masses of the American people, and who desires above everything else to do those things, and those alone, which will bring about the largest and best results for the greatest number of all the people. I was one of the first to propose his election as Speaker in a speech on the floor of this House, and I am proud of it, and I predict that the historian's record will show him to be one of the greatest Speakers who ever presided over this magnificent legislative body. [Applause.]

How are we fulfilling the promises which we made and which were enumerated in the speech which I have just read? We have already passed the bill providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people. I voted for this bill with a great deal of pleasure. I have advocated it upon the stump and in this Hall heretofore. I believe that the source of all power is the people; and if left to me, I would not only permit them to elect United States Senators, but I would permit them to elect every officer of this Government by direct vote of the people, from the President of the United States down to the constable in the neighborhoods in which they live. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The offices belong to the people, and when an officer is elected he should serve the people, and they should have a voice in selecting him, and he should be responsible to them for the performance of his duties.

We have passed the bill providing for the publication of campaign contributions. This bill provides that the publication shall be made not only before the election and up to the day of election, but that it shall be made of those contributions which may come later, subsequent to the election. The American people are honest themselves as a rule. You may take the plain citizen throughout this country, and in his heart there is integrity and honesty and sincerity and patriotism. He wants the same to be reflected by his officers in the posts which they hold, and therefore he demands that the elections in this country shall be fair, that they shall be honest, that they shall reflect the sentiments he feels, and therefore he desires that the campaign contributions shall be known before the election as well as after, in order that he may be advised of the influences that have been brought to bear in order to control elections and from what sources they come.

We have passed the Canadian reciprocity bill which came to us, the pact entered into between Canada and the United States. It has received the approval of this House and has gone to the Senate. We have passed the apportionment bill providing for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress throughout the United States.

This record has not been surpassed by Congress, since I have been a Member, in the length of time this Congress has been in session. This is but an earnest of the honest, energetic, and sincere efforts we propose to use in passing other remedial and good legislation to follow. Every promise we have made as enunciated by our distinguished Speaker will be redeemed by the party now in power in this House. We believe not only in making promises and declarations to the people, but we believe in keeping the promises and declarations when made. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We do not believe that in order to secure the support of the people at the ballot box we should deceive them like the Republican Party did before the last presidential election by promising before election to revise the tariff downward, and then, after having by this deception secured the election, with unblushing shame revise it upward. We promised to revise it downward, and we will keep that pledge. Therefore we have under consideration what is familiarly known as the farmers' free list bill. This bill I will not now take the time to read in detail, but will incorporate it in my remarks, because I feel sure that all within the sound of my voice have read it and are familiar with its provisions.

It provides, however, for placing on the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meat, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles. Do the farmers deserve consideration at our hands? Should we consider what is for their welfare and for their good? I say that of all the people in this country they deserve our highest consideration, because they do more for the Government and do more for the country and they add more wealth to the wealth which we already have than any class of people beneath the shining sun. [Applause of the Democratic side.] Therefore I say they should receive at the hands of every Representative on this floor the most careful, candid, and sincere consideration. Let us see for a few moments what they are doing for the country. I call attention to the report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1910, which I have in my hand, the last annual report published. He says:

Nothing short of omniscience can grasp the value of the farm products of this year. At no time in the world's history has a country produced farm products within one year with a value reaching $8,926,000,000, which is the value of the agricultural products of this country for 1910. This amount is larger than that of 1909 by $305,000,000, an amount of increase over the preceding year which is small for the more recent years.

Again he says:

A national asset amounting to 3,000,000,000 bushels, worth $1,500,000,000, is found in the corn crop. Its production this year was 3,121,581,000 bushels, a crop that exceeds that of even the great agricultural year 1906. It is greater than the average crop of the preceding five years by 14 per cent.

A notable feature of corn production this year is the growing importance of the South. This has been manifested in a small way in very recent years, but now the increased magnitude of the crop in that section, both absolute and relative to national production, forces itself upon the attention.

Let a comparison be made with corn production in the South in the census year 1889, or 21 years ago. At that time the South Atlantic States produced only 6.2 per cent of the national crop of corn. This year they produced 9.1 per cent, or an increase relatively of about one-half. The relative increase for the South Central States is even greater, being from 14.8 per cent of the national crop of 1889 to 23.4 per cent in 1910. Then the South produced hardly more than one-fifth of the national crop; now it produces one-third.

While the value of this corn crop is below that of 1909 and also of 1908, its amount belongs to stories of magic. It can hardly be reckoned at less than $1,500,000,000, a sum sufficient to cancel the interest-bearing debt of the United States, buy all of the gold and silver mined in all of the countries of the earth in 1909, and still leave to the farmers a little pocket money.

In reference to cotton he says:

For many years the cotton crop was fourth in value among the crops, being exceeded usually by corn, wheat, and hay. But in those days the price of cotton was very low. The crop of this year may be worth in lint and seed a round $900,000,000 at the farm, or more than the corn crop was worth in any year prior to 1901, or more than the wheat or hay crop was ever worth.

Apparently the cotton crop of this year, including seed, is worth $120,000,000 more than the crop of last year, and that crop was far above any previous one in value. During the last five years the cotton crop had an average value of $685,000,000, so that the value for this year is 13 per cent above the five-year average.

Then he discusses hay, wheat, oats, potatoes, sugar, tobacco, barley, flaxseed, rye, rice, hops, and all cereals. Then he takes up the question of exports:

The value of the exports of farm products, after constant oscillation, increased to the enormous amount of $1,017,396,404 in 1908, from which there was a decline in 1909 and another in 1910, for which latter year the amount stands at $871,107,067, a value which has been exceeded only in the years 1901 and 1906 previous to 1907.

In the exports of 1910 the principal item was cotton, with a value of $450,447,243. Next in order stands packing-house products, with a value of $135,959,373; third in order are grain and grain products, valued at $133,320,418; after which are tobacco, $38,115,386; oil and oil-cake meal, $19,251,012; fruits, $18,504,591; live animals, $17,447,735. Compared with 1909, there was a decrease in all of the principal items except in cotton, for which the increase was about $33,000,000, fruits about $2,500,000, and tobacco about $7,000,000.

Thus he discusses the balance of trade and says:

THE TRADE BALANCE.

Until 1898 there was ever a balance of trade against the United States in merchandise other than farm products; in that year for the first time the exports of merchandise other than farm products exceeded in value the imports. From 1898 to 1902 the value of exports of merchandise other than farm products exceeded that of imports, and again from 1904 to 1909. The contrary was true for 1903 and 1910, the adverse balance of the last year for manufactures and other merchandise not produced on the farm being $10,926,193.

On the other hand, in the case of farm products there has been an almost unbroken balance of trade in favor of the United States as far back as inquiry has been made. From 1851 to 1863 is found this favorable balance and also from 1866 to the present time. During the five-year period 1886–1890 the farmer's balance of trade in favor of this country averaged $206,265,002; during the next five years the average was $257,666,800; in the five years that followed the average was $386,637,041; during the period 1901–1905 the average was $431,234,941; and during the last five-year period, 1906–1910, the average was $433,683,775. The increase in this quinquennial average has been unbroken since 1886–1890.

The total balance of trade in our favor in farm products from 1886 to 1910, inclusive, amounts to the enormous sum of $8,577,437,791. But for the exportation of the products of the farm furnished by the farmers of this country to swell our foreign trade there would be a balance of trade against us from 1886 to 1910 of more than $8,000,000,000. In view of this remarkable and marvelous result I ask you the question again, Are not the farmers of this country entitled to the highest consideration at our hands?

I believe that they are, and, in view of that fact, I introduced myself in the early days of this session of Congress two free-list bills, in which was included many articles which are contained in the present bill which is pending before the House. We propose to give to the farmers of this country some relief from the enormous taxes with which they have been burdened so long. We propose to give them recognition for the marvelous service which they have performed for this great Republic. What has the Republican Party ever done for the American farmer along this line? You have required him, by the strong arm of your unrighteous and oppressive law, to pay high taxes on everything on the face of the earth, practically speaking, which he was compelled to buy, and you have forced him to sell everything, practically, which he produces in a free-trade market in competition with the world. He asked you for bread and you gave him a stone. You have pursued him through all his life, in death, and, in fact, practically to the gates of eternity. I will demonstrate the truth of that statement. In the morning the first ray of light which he sees is through a protected window glass. When he arises he puts on his protected clothes, washes his face in a protected wash pan, wipes it on a protected towel, combs his hair with a protected comb, eats his breakfast out of a protected plate, stirs his coffee with a protected spoon, drinks it out of a protected cup and saucer, and eats his food with a protected knife and fork upon a protected table while sitting in a protected chair.

When he has finished his breakfast he puts on his protected hat and goes out and takes his protected bridle and catches his horse. He leads him out and puts on him his protected plow-gear and prepares to go to the field. When he arrives there he hitches him with protected trace chains to a protected single-tree attached by a protected clevis and pin to a protected plow-stock on which there is a protected plowpoint. When he has finished his crop he hauls his corn to the crib and his cotton to the gin in a protected wagon. He gins his cotton in a protected gin, wraps it in protected bagging, binds it with protected ties, and presses and bales it in a protected press, and then he has the great and final privilege of selling it in the free-trade markets of the world. My Lord, what a dose of protection! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But you are not satisfied with that. You tax every article of clothing he and every member of his family wears. You even tax the cradle in which his good wife rocks the baby. Not only that, but when he passes off the stage of action and is cold in death, you compel him to be buried in a coffin that is protected. You screw down the lid with screws which are protected, with a screw driver which is protected, and then the minister of God, as he stands up to perform the last sad rites at the tomb, does so with the Word of God, the Bible, in his hand, that should at least be free, but alas, alas, how heartless and unsympathetic you are for it is also protected! [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

Therefore I say to you that you pursue him not only through life, but you pursue him even unto death 'and down into his grave and to the very gates of eternity itself. It seems that the only relief in life he can ever hope to obtain will have to come from the Democratic Party and the only relief even after he is cold in death must come from the final blast of old Gabriel, who will call him from his protected coffin in the grave to the home above. May the good Lord deliver us from this overdose of protection and from this heartless policy of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, this House is Democratic. It is admitted, practically, that this bill will pass. It contains in it a provision for free bagging and ties. This is a just demand——

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. SLOAN. I was interested in your speaking of what was taken from the American farmer. Was that the reason why the exception was made in the lumber schedule here where it says?—

Planks, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed, except boards, planks, deals, and other lumber of lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods.

These, I understand, are frequently used in the making of coffins, and they are excepted in your free list. Is that done so that you can make that kind of a speech, which we have heard, probably, on every stump in the United States?

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman has been fortunate in hearing so many good speeches, but unfortunate in not being profited thereby. I am sorry he did not learn something from them.

Mr. SLOAN. I asked if that was the reason for the exception.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, no; the exception was not for that reason. As a rule the plain people in this country are not buried in coffins made out of rosewood. The rich only can afford them. Free lumber was put in this bill to help the thousands, yea, millions, of our people who do not own their homes to build a modest house and own the roof over their heads, and the exception was made because the lumber excepted is not necessary for that purpose. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I was proceeding, when I was interrupted, to discuss bagging and ties for a few moments. They are put upon the free list in this bill along with other necessities for the farmer. This is a recognition of a just demand by the farmers of the South, because they furnish that great product of this country—cotton—which travels across the water and brings back the gold that furnishes prosperity to it. Last year the Secretary of Agriculture says we exported $450,447,243 worth of cotton, which means that it brought in that much gold. I say it is but just to them that they should have the bagging with which they wrap the cotton and the ties with which they bind it free of duty and free of taxation.

A few days ago the New Orleans Cotton Exchange passed a resolution upon this subject.

In a copy of a paper called the Progressive Farmer and Southern Farm Gazette, founded by Dr. Tait Butler in 1895 at Starkville, Miss., in my district, I find the following in the issue of Saturday, April 22, 1911:

That the Cotton Bagging and Tie Trust, "not satisfied with robbing the American cotton planter of nearly $1,000,000 annually through unjust tariff placed upon bagging and ties under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, are planning to increase their levy on the cotton crop to $2,800,000 annually" is declared in resolutions adopted a few days ago by the New Orleans Cotton Exchange. The resolutions appeal to Congress to place bagging and ties on the free list, and urge the enactment of the necessary legislation at the present extra session of Congress.

President W. B. Thompson, of the cotton exchange, in a letter * * * tells of the great importance to the South of this tariff steal. He says, in part:

"The cotton crop of the South yields annually an average of about 12,000,000 bales, of this total approximately five-eighths, or 7,500,000 bales, * * * are exported and exchanged for foreign gold. The mere statement of these facts attests the importance of the cotton-producing industry, emphasizes the obligation which the country owes the producer of this crop, and establishes his right to at least just treatment at the hands of the general lawmaking power.

"Under the present tariff law the duty on steel cotton ties amounts to 0.027 cent per bale, or to $324,000, on a crop of 12,000,000 bales. This tariff is prohibitive, as is shown by the fact that no steel ties are imported. Therefore, the Government has no share in this impost which constitutes simply and safely tribute levied upon cotton farmers for the benefit of the Cotton Tie Trust.

"The duty on jute bagging imposed by the present tariff law amounts to 0.05 cent per bale, or to $630,000, on a crop of 12,000,000 bales. This tariff is, to a large extent, prohibitive, inasmuch as it yields only about $100,000 revenue to the Government. The balance constitutes a tribute paid by the cotton farmers to the Bagging Trust.

"But the Bagging Trust is not satisfied with its share of this impost. It desires to raise the duty to a figure which will not only prevent the Government from receiving any revenue therefrom, but will enable the trust to take from the farm four times as much as it has been able to take heretofore.

"From the reasons stated it will incontestably appear that not only the proposed outrage, but the present tax on bagging and ties is inequitable and wrong; and because the western farmer has now, and has had for more than 15 years his binder twine on the free list, the tax upon the southern farmer stands condemned of the additional vice of discrimination."

These are the facts, succinctly and concisely stated by Mr. Thompson in this letter. I received a letter—yesterday, I believe it was—from a jute-bagging manufacturer, and in view of the present situation and in view of the further fact that they have so long had the benefit of this tariff, which they have taken from the people and put into their pockets, instead of it going as revenue into the Treasury of the United States, they are actually now down upon their knees. We have even got them to praying, because in this letter I find this expression, as he appeals that bagging and ties be not placed upon the free list. He says:

May God forbid such a result.

And not only that, he goes further and says:

We pray you, dear sir, to aid in averting such a calamity. Aid by writing your Representative to vote against free jute. Aid by asking your neighbor to do so. And pray with us that such a calamity may be averted.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Oh, you Republicans may applaud such sentiments, but you know a tax on bagging and ties is unjust, inequitable, and wrong.

The trouble with this manufacturer is that it is only the prayers of the righteous that availeth much. It is not the prayers of him who is willing by law to levy taxes on the cotton farmers and take the honest results of their toil and transfer them from their pockets to his own. The prayers of that man will never prevail. The Representatives of the people of this country will give them the relief which they ask and the relief which they ought to have.

This bill, of course, could not pass in a Republican House. If the same majority existed in this House at the present time as existed at the last session of Congress, of course this bill would not be passed. Because you Republicans refused to give the people relief and increased their tariff taxes when you promised to reduce them is one reason why you met defeat at the polls last November. We are going to give them relief, keep our promises, and reduce their taxes, and continue to defeat you at the polls until we have the Senate and the President, and then we will give the people genuine reform and permanent relief. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

How do I know this bill could not pass a Republican House? I know it because, in the first place, I hold in my hands the views of the minority, signed by S. E. PAYNE, JOHN DALZELL, S. W. MCCALL, E. J. HILL, J. C. NEEDHAM, J. W. FORDNEY, and NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, comprising all the Republican Representatives upon the Ways and Means Committee, and I take it they speak by authority and speak for the other side, and they are unanimous against this bill. I see several of these gentlemen now present, kindly giving me their attention, and by their silence I presume I state the position of their party correctly in reference to this bill. I know for another reason that it could not pass, because in 1908 I introduced a bill covering many of the articles which are contained in the bill now under consideration. It provided for placing upon the free list the following articles:

First. All kinds of agricultural machines and parts thereof, such as cotton gins, steam plows, and other high-power agricultural machinery, agricultural drills and planters, farm rollers, cultivators, manure spreaders, mowers, reapers, harvesters, hay tedders, potato diggers, fanning mills, thrashing and separating machines, and the like, including those machines dutiable at 20 per cent ad valorem according to paragraph 460 of the present tariff act of July 24, 1897.

Second. All kinds of agricultural tools and implements, such as plows, harrows, rakes, horserakes, hoes, spades, shovels, axes, hatchets, forks, and scythes, including those tools and implements dutiable at 20 per cent ad valorem according to paragraph 460 of the present tariff act; handsaws, now dutiable at 30 per cent ad valorem according to paragraph 168 of the same act; pruning knives, now dutiable at 40 per cent ad valorem and upward according to paragraph 153 of the same act; grindstones, now dutiable at $1.75 per ton according to paragraph 119 of the same act, and crowbars, hammers, sledges, wedges, and the like, now dutiable at one and five-tenths of 1 per cent per pound according to paragraph 144 of the same act.

Third. Horseshoes, muleshoes, and oxshoes, spikes, nuts, and washers, and nails of all kinds, now dutiable at from six-tenths of 1 cent to 2½ cents per pound according to paragraphs 160 to 163 of the same act.

Fourth. All kinds of vehicles peculiarly adapted to farm work, such as farm wagons, oxcarts, lumber trucks, horse sleds and sledges, wheelbarrows, and the like; also all parts thereof, including axles, wheels, tires, chains, cart and wagon skeins, and the like.

Fifth. Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity, now dutiable at five-tenths of 1 per cent per pound according to paragraph 129 of the same act.

Sixth. Iron or steel wire rods for making rivets, screws, nails, and fencing, now dutiable at four-tenths of 1 cent per pound and upward according to paragraph 136 of the same act.

Seventh. Harness and parts of harness, suitable for animals engaged in farm work, now dutiable at 45 per cent ad valorem according to paragraph 447 of the same act.

Eighth. Bagging for cotton or for wheat or other grain, gunny cloths, and similar fabrics, suitable for covering cotton or grain, composed of single yarns made of jute, jute butts, or hemp, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted or printed, not exceeding 16 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and weighing not less than 15 ounces per square yard, now dutiable at six-tenths of 1 cent per square yard according to paragraph 344 of the same act.

Ninth. Cloths, knit fabrics, flannels for underwear, and all other manufactures made wholly or in part of wool and valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, and ready-made clothing and wearing apparel of every description composed wholly or in part of wool and valued at less than $1.50 per pound, now dutiable at rates averaging 100 per cent ad valorem according to paragraphs 366, 367, and 370 of the same act.

In this connection I will insert in my remarks the text of the present bill now under consideration:

A bill (H. R. 4413) to place on the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the day following the passage of this act the following articles shall be exempt from duty when imported into the United States:

Plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, threshing machines and cotton gins, farm wagons and farm carts, and all other agricultural implements of any kind and description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar fabrics, materials, or coverings, suitable for covering and baling cotton, composed in whole or in part of jute, jute butts, hemp, flax, seg, Russian seg, New Zealand tow, Norwegian tow, aloe, mill waste, cotton tares, or any other materials or fibers suitable for covering cotton; and burlaps and bags or sacks composed wholly or in part of jute or burlaps or other material suitable for bagging or sacking agricultural products.

Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, punched or not punched, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity; and wire for baling hay, straw, and other agricultural products.

Grain, buff, split, rough and sole leather, band, bend, or belting leather, boots and shoes made wholly or in chief value of leather made from cattle hides and cattle skins of whatever weight, of cattle of the bovine species, including calfskins; and harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather; and leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps or other forms suitable for conversion into manufactured articles.

Barbed fence wire, wire rods, wire strands or wire rope, wire woven or manufactured for wire fencing, and other kinds of wire suitable for fencing, including wire staples.

Beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, and meats of all kinds, fresh, salted, pickled, dried, smoked, dressed or undressed, prepared or preserved in any manner; bacon, hams, shoulders, lard, lard compounds, and lard substitutes; and sausage and sausage meats.

Buckwheat flour, corn meal, wheat flour, and seminola, rye flour, bran, middlings, and other offals of grain; oatmeal and rolled oats, and all prepared cereal foods; and biscuits, bread, wafers, and similar articles not sweetened.

Timber, hewn, sided, or squared; round timber used for spars or in building wharves; shingles, laths, fencing posts, sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed, except boards, planks, deals, and other lumber of lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods.

Sewing machines, and all parts thereof.

Salt, whether in bulk or in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages.

A comparison of the two bills will show that they have the same purpose in view—that is, to give the farmer relief.

The bill that I introduced in the Sixtieth Congress was referred to the Ways and Means Committee, of which a large majority of the members were Republican. I made a speech upon the floor of this House, in which I advocated the passage of that bill, and I called special attention of the Ways and Means Committee to it. I made that speech on February 3, 1909, when, I understood, the Ways and Means Committee was then considering the tariff question and preparing what is now known as the Payne-Aldrich bill.

I not only introduced the bill, which went to the committee, but I emphasized it by making a speech on the floor of this House and called attention to it. But it received no consideration at their hands and was not reported by them. I appealed to deaf ears and to hardened hearts in the interest of the masses of the plain people of this country, and my appeal received the same answer as such appeals always received at the hands of Republicans. The answer was: "We will bless you; we will make you happy; we will enrich you by increasing your taxes instead of by decreasing your taxes." [Applause on the Democratic side.] And when the bill prepared by the Ways and Means Committee of the Sixty-first Congress passed the Republican House it not only did not reduce the taxes, it not only failed to put the items in my bill on the free list, but it increased the taxes from about 45 to about 50 per cent. Hence I repeat again that when the people asked you for bread you gave them a stone. You promised them reduced taxation; you gave them increased taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The pending bill will pass this House because the righteous indignation of the American people, aroused by the continued oppression of exorbitant taxes, demands its passage, and because the bill is supported by the loyal Democrats on this side, who represent the people, the masses of the American people, and represent no classes and represent no special interests and do not favor giving special privileges to anybody. Believing in equal rights to all and special privileges to none, we believe the farmers of the country should receive the relief which they are asking and which they have the right to demand. In view of that fact, we propose to pass this bill and relieve them of the burdens under which they have labored. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is estimated that the bill will reduce the revenues of the Government by the sum of $10,028,989. This, however, is a mere drop in the bucket in comparison with the other great benefits it will confer upon the American people. While it will reduce the revenues about ten million, it will take from the trusts and leave in the pockets of the people ten times that sum. We propose, by a reduction in the running expenses of this Government and by cutting off extravagant expenditures wherever we have an opportunity to reduce them without affecting the efficiency of the public service, to accomplish a saving more than sufficient to compensate for the loss of revenue which may be brought about by the passage of this bill. Not only will that amount be saved, but I dare say much more will be saved, especially if we are given a lease of power and sufficient time in which to accomplish it. As was so well stated by my distinguished colleague from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] this morning, we at present find ourselves in a situation brought about during the last session of the Republican Congress where by their legislation extravagant appropriations have already been made, and they must be met, and the revenue must be obtained necessary to meet them. We will maintain the national credit and with patriotism meet that condition and discharge those legal and binding obligations, but when that is done we can and will then give to the people an economical administration of all governmental affairs.

I appeal to you, my fellow Members in this House, regardless of party, to rise, if possible, above party lines, above self-interest, above the mere interest of your district, and to vote from a patriotic standpoint in the interest of the whole people and for this bill. A vote for this bill is a vote against the Agricultural Implement Trust, against the Bagging and Tie Trust, against the Leather Trust, against the Steel Trust, against the Beef Trust, against the Flour and Cereal Food Trust, against the Lumber Trust, against the Sewing Machine Trust, and against the Salt Trust. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A vote against this bill is a vote in favor of all these trusts. I appeal to you to vote for it, not only in the interest of the farmers and the toiling masses who make their living by honest, hard labor beneath the sun of heaven in the open field, and who produce the wealth of this country, and who have during all these years brought the balance of trade to our shores, but I appeal to you in the interest of the housewife and of the sewing woman who needs a sewing machine. The Sewing Machine Trust have been selling sewing machines abroad for a great deal less than they have been selling them to the working woman making an honest living by sewing day by day and sometimes far into the night. I appeal to you to let every sewing girl have her sewing machine without taxing it to such an extent that she is unable to pay for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In conclusion, I ask you on which side do you stand? Will you stand with the people and for the interest and welfare and development and prosperity of the whole country, or will you stand upon the other side and vote in favor of the trusts in this country? One way to destroy trusts is to put their products on the free list. This bill does that. Your vote upon this question will record you upon one side or upon the other. You profess to feel great interest in the farmer. Oh, how often did I hear that sentiment expressed during the debate upon the reciprocity bill. I do not criticize you for that. I feel an abiding interest in the farmer myself. He is among my very best friends. That is one reason why I have always stood and expect to continue to stand for everything I honestly and conscientiously believe in my heart is for his interest. In my district he is my friend and I am his friend and he knows it. I am, again, a member of the great Agricultural Committee by the unanimous vote of a Democratic Congress, and I hope by reason of that position to render him better service if possible. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Another reason why I believe in giving the farmer what he wants is that whatever is for his interest is for the interest of the whole people, and when I am serving him I am serving every class and condition throughout this country, because, as was very beautifully said by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL], he is the foundation rock upon which the whole superstructure stands. If the foundation should crumble, the whole superstructure must come down with it; but when we do those things which will give him prosperity, which will benefit him, through him you benefit every avocation, every calling, and every trade throughout this broad land, from ocean to ocean. Therefore, if you really are interested in him, if in your heart you really feel concerned in his welfare and prosperity, I appeal to you to show it and prove it by your votes. Do not try to prove it alone by your words, by your speeches, because they are easily made, and, like promises, sometimes easily broken and forgotten; but a vote upon the record stands as a monument through all the years to come as to what your sentiments and what your real purposes and intentions were.

I appeal to you to vote in the interest of the farmer, because without him the prosperity of this country would be gone. You upon the other side of the House have claimed during all these years that you were in favor of protecting the infant industries of the country. You have taxed the farmers and the masses of the American people you say to furnish revenue to run the Government? Yes; but you have taxed them in order also to furnish protection to these great manufacturing industries throughout this country, and they have received the benefits of it, and from it they have amassed and accumulated vast fortunes, some of them so great that they have found difficulty in being able even to give them away as fast as they have accumulated in their coffers. If the farmers and the mass of the people of this country have so enriched these manufacturing interests during all these years, it is an old saying that turn about is fair play. I appeal to you to take away some of that protection and give the farmers the benefit of the reduction and let the infant industries, which are no longer infants but giants and able to compete with the nations of the world, contribute something to help the farmers and the plain people and the masses of the citizenship of this great Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Without these great agricultural interests, without these farmers, the smoke would disappear from the chimneys of your factories, the fires would die out of your furnaces, railroads would cease to operate, the wheels of commerce would stand still, the merchant would close his store, the lawyer would shut up his office, the doctor would close up his office, and your cities would become waste places, and barren deserts.

Therefore, my friends, fellow Members, I appeal to you to vote for this bill and to vote as you shall answer to your constituency, to your people, to your country, and to your God. I thank you for your indulgence, your patience, and your close and kind attention. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4413, to place agricultural implements and other articles on the free list, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of James W. Belvin, Fiftieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. CARY, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of John Clark, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 29, 1911.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRIS: A bill (H. R. 7958) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SLAYDEN (by request): A bill (H. R. 7959) to fix the salaries and to provide for the retirement of certain judges of the island of Porto Rico; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 7960) appropriating $10,000 for the construction of a reservoir in Sandoval County, Territory of New Mexico; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7961) to authorize the exploration and purchase of mines within the boundaries of private land claims; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7962) to quiet title to certain lands in Dona Ana County, N. Mex.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7963) pensioning the surviving officers and enlisted men of the New Mexico and Arizona Volunteers employed in the defense of the frontier of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona against Mexican marauders and Indian depredations from 1855 to 1890, inclusive, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7964) to add to the Lincoln National Forest Reserve and to the Alamo National Forest Reserve, in New Mexico, certain portions of the Mescalero Indian Reservation in New Mexico and to provide for the sale of certain lands now embraced in said reservations for the creation of a fund for the benefit of said Mescalero Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7965) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7966) amending act of June 27, 1898, permitting payment of pensions to officers and men of Indian wars and their widows, between 1849 and 1854; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7967) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories to limit Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7968) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey the unappropriated nonmineral desert lands of the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7969) donating the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 36, township 1 south, range 34 east, New Mexico principal base and meridian, in New Mexico, to Bedford Forrest Camp, No. 1606, United Confederate Veterans; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7970) to establish a fish-cultural station at Trout Springs, Gallinas Canyon, San Miguel County, N. Mex.; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7971) to validate an act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, with reference to the issues of certain bonds; to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7972) to establish a soldiers' home at Santa Fe, Santa Fe County, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7973) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to allot agricultural lands in the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation to the Indians resident therein, and setting aside the remainder of said reservation as a national park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7974) to authorize the issue of bridge bonds by the county of Valencia, in the Territory of New Mexico; to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7975) appropriating $10,000 for the construction of a reservoir in the Manzano Mountains, Torrance County, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. LITTLEPAGE: A bill (H. R. 7976) to provide for the erection of a public building at Webster Springs, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7977) to amend section 113 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 7978) to place on the free list salt; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7979) to place on the free list sewing machines and all parts thereof; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7980) to place on the free list all timber and lumber; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7981) to place on the free list boots, shoes, harness, saddles, and saddlery; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SIMMONS: A bill (H. R. 7982) to amend section 5 of an act approved August 30, 1890, entitled "An act providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARDWICK: A bill (H. R. 7983) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Georgia; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 7984) authorizing the Public Printer to pay pro rata leave to temporary employees of the Government Printing Office; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. KIPP: A bill (H. R. 7985) providing for the admission, care, and maintenance of disabled or indigent employees of the United States of America on the Panama Canal in the several soldiers' homes of these United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GILLETT: A bill (H. R. 7986) to establish a fish-cultural station in the western part of the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 7987) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, in so far as it applies to the State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7988) providing for the erection of a public building at Portland, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 7989) to improve Lake Traverse in the States of South Dakota and Minnesota; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WEDEMEYER: A bill (H. R. 7990) granting relief to certain members of the Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, War of the Rebellion; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COX of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 7991) providing for the retirement of certain officers of the Philippine Scouts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HEALD: A bill (H. R. 7992) to provide for the acquisition and improvement of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal; to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7993) to extend the benefits of the act of June 27, 1890, as amended by the act of May 9, 1900, granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who served in the military or naval forces of the United States, their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and the act of February 6, 1907, granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico, and the general pension law granting pensions to those who contracted disabilities in the service and in the line of duty; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7994) making an appropriation for the construction of an inland waterway from Rehoboth Bay to Delaware Bay, in the State of Delaware; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HAMLIN: Resolution (H. Res. 136) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department to have printing and binding done; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LEVER: Resolution (H. Res. 137) to authorize the Committee on Education to have printing and binding done; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Resolution (H. Res. 138) to provide for necessary printing and binding by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior during the Sixty-second Congress; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. STANLEY: Resolution (H. Res. 139) to investigate violations of antitrust act of 1890; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. ANDREWS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) approving certain laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico; to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 81) disapproving certain laws of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of New Mexico; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) to provide for printing of 1,000,000 copies of what is known as Uncle Sam's Cook Book; to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 7995) granting an increase of pension to Michael Grigeois; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 7996) granting a pension to Miguel Romero; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7997) granting a pension to John H. Young; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7998) granting an increase of pension to Pascualita J. G. de Anaya; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7999) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius J. Demorest; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8000) for the relief of Capt. H. C. Smith; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8001) for the relief of Juan Estevan Vigil; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 8002) for the relief of the legal representatives of J. H. Latta, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of California: A bill (H. R. 8003) for the relief of David C. McGee; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 8004) to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the widow of the late Tranquilino Luna, in full for his contest expenses in the contested-election case of Manzanares against Luna; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8005) for the relief of the heir and legal representative of R. W. Daniels, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8006) for the relief of Nathan Bibo, sr.; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8007) for the relief of Eduardo Martinez; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8008) for the relief of Jose Antionio Barreras; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8009) for the relief of W. J. Goodwin; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8010) for the relief of Louis Kahn; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8011) for the relief of Rebecca J. Miller; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8012) for the relief of Ventura Maestas; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8013) for the relief of Pedro Salazar y Garcia; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8014) for the relief of E. H. Biernbaum; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8015) for the relief of F. Nerio Gomez; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8016) for the relief of John S. Bowie; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8017) for the relief of W. A. Walker; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8018) giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction to adjudicate two claims for Indian depredations of the estate of Blas Lucero, late of Albuquerque, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8019) granting to the Women's Missionary Union of El Paso, Tex., certain unappropriated land for a public sanatorium; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 8020) granting an increase of pension to Warren J. Hazell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8021) granting an increase of pension to Richard Murphy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8022) granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Garvin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8023) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 8024) for the relief of the estate of Joseph G. Murphy; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CAMERON: A bill (H. R. 8025) granting a pension to Susan E. Whitmore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 8026) granting a pension to Elizabeth Teets; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8027) for the relief of Emanuel Newland; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COOPER: A bill (H. R. 8028) granting an increase of pension to George W. Nobles; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CULLOP: A bill (H. R. 8029) granting an increase of pension to William Burnett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 8030) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Israel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DODDS: A bill (H. R. 8031) granting an increase of pension to Moses Casner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DONOHOE: A bill (H. R. 8032) granting an increase of pension to Bridget McAloon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRAPER: A bill (H. R. 8033) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication and determination the claims of the widow and family of Marcus P. Norton and the heirs at law, assigns, legatees, or legal representatives of others; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DUPRE: A bill (H. R. 8034) to remove the charge of desertion against Henry W. Ross; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8035) for the relief of John Streckfus; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FARR: A bill (H. R. 8036) granting an honorable discharge to William Ham; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GILLETT: A bill (H. R. 8037) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Hobbs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8038) granting an increase of pension to Herbert A. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 8039) granting an increase of pension to Horatio B. Baker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 8040) granting an increase of pension to Richard Holt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS: A bill (H. R. 8041) for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HEALD: A bill (H. R. 8042) granting an increase of pension to William H. Rust; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8043) granting an increase of pension to Thomas R. Henthorn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 8044) granting an increase of pension to Edward Skinner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8045) granting an increase of pension to Philip D. Carroll; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8046) granting an increase of pension to John A. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8047) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Cooper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUSTON: A bill (H. R. 8048) for the relief of Andrew J. McWhirter; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 8049) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Crall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIPP: A bill (H. R. 8050) granting an increase of pension to Eugene A. S. Martin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LATTA: A bill (H. R. 8051) granting an increase of pension to Thomas L. Curas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 8052) granting an increase of pension to Helen K. Krischenmann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGILLICUDDY: A bill (H. R. 8053) granting a pension to Francis G. French, alias Frank Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8054) granting a pension to Carlos Dinsmore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8055) granting an increase of pension to William Walsh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 8056) granting an increase of pension to Maria A. Van Kleek; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8057) granting a pension to Monta E. Milligan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MANN: A bill (H. R. 8058) granting an increase of pension to Luther L. Humphrey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8059) granting an increase of pension to William J. Teed; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8060) authorizing appointment of Hugh T. Reed upon retired list of the Army with rank of captain with 20 years' service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 8061) for the relief of John D. Johnson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 8062) granting an increase of pension to William M. Miner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8063) granting an increase of pension to Washington T. Alsup; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8064) granting a pension to Eliza B. Herbst; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: A bill (H. R. 8065) granting an increase of pension to Charles Larkin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 8066) for the relief of Walter F. Lockhart; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WEDEMEYER: A bill (H. R. 8067) granting an increase of pension to Augustus W. Fellows; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8068) for the relief of Deloss M. Baker, Frank W. Clay, and Herman V. C. Hart, committee, and to reimburse those who subscribed and paid for site for post-office building at Adrian, Mich; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WILLIS: A bill (H. R. 8069) granting an increase of pension to Catharine Harris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8070) granting an increase of pension to Seth Clark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 8071) for the relief of Mrs. L. A. Royster; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: Petitions of Thomas Fox Paper Co. and Richardson Paper Co., of Lockland, Ohio, against Canadian reciprocity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petitions of Parr Bros., John C. Thomas, Frank & Co., G. M. Fribley, A. J. Harris, John A. Hurst, C. W. Scott, C. E. Lashmers, William Lewis, Baad & Kline, and V. Aeme Bros. Co., all merchants of New Philadelphia, Ohio, against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of the estate of Joseph G. Murphy, of Jackson County, Tenn.; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CAMERON: Petition of citizens of Phoenix, Ariz., requesting the sum of $25,000 be appropriated for the purpose of devising means for checking the spread of the alfalfa leaf weevil; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of Local No. 270, International Molders' Union of North America, of Pittsburg, Pa., protesting against tax on oleomargarine; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of citizens of La Salle, Ill., favoring a national department of health; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

By Mr. GILLETT: Petition of South Amherst Adult Bible Class, of Amherst, Mass., requesting the passage of a bill forbidding the transmission of race gambling; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HANNA: Petition of citizens of North Dakota against Canadian reciprocity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of citizens of Mapleton, N. Dak., favoring the passage of the Hanna bill, paying additional compensation to rural free-delivery carriers; J. Pedersen, of Medora, N. Dak., against parcels post; and S. T. Henderson and W. V. Henderson, of Crystal, N. Dak., protesting against raising the rates of postage on magazines; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HEALD: Petitions of Washington Camp, No. 18, of Violi, Del.; Camp No. 3, of Kenton, Del.; and Camp No. 17, Patriotic Order Sons of America, favoring legislation restricting immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Affidavits to accompany H. R. 5239, to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John H. Hubbard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENDALL: Protest of citizens of Sigourney, Iowa, against the parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LAMB: Resolutions of Trade and Labor Assembly of Savannah, Ga., favoring amendment to the oleomargarine law reducing tax on same, and by Trade and Labor Council of Lowell, Mass., favoring amendment to the oleomargarine law, reducing the tax on same; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McGILLICUDDY: Petition of John Rice and 50 others, favoring the establishment of a national health department; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Resolutions of Washington Camp, No. 427, Patriotic Order Sons of America, urging enactment of an illiteracy test; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. OLMSTED: Resolutions of Washington Camp, No. 102, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Steelton, Pa., urging the illiteracy test with relation to the admission of aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of Division No. 57, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Providence, R. I., to admit to the mails as second-class matter periodical publications issued by or under the auspices of benevolent and fraternal societies and orders and institutions of learning or by trades unions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. PRAY: Petition of Trades and Labor Assembly of Helena, Mont., in favor of parcels-post law; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts: Petition of citizens of Massachusetts, against any legislation for a national department of health; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

By Mr. STONE: Papers to accompany a bill to increase the pension of Thomas A. Dobbins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERHILL: Petition of Avoca Manufacturing Co., of Avoca, N. Y., protesting against jute bagging for baling cotton being put on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 29, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., as follows:

Eternal and ever-living God, our Father, incline Thine ear and hear our petition. Thou art infinite; we are finite; Thou art all inclusive, while we are but integral parts of a stupendous whole. Hold us close to Thee, that we may feel the warm, life-giving currents of Thy loving heart, and believe that whatsoever Thou dost order for us is better than anything we could desire for ourselves; that we may harmonize our thoughts with Thy thoughts, our ways with Thy ways, and submit our will to Thine. In the spirit of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4413, a bill to place agricultural implements and other articles on the free list.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the free-list bill, with Mr. ALEXANDER in the chair.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the speech delivered by President Taft in New York on the evening of April 27, 1911, on Canadian reciprocity. I ask that this be done in view of the speech made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] on yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the speech delivered by President Taft in New York the night before last. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no power to consent to the publication of the speech.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print that speech as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The President's speech is as follows:

Mr. Toastmaster, and Gentlemen of the Associated Press and American Newspaper Publishers' Association:

I thank the toastmaster for his gracious and kindly introduction. He seems to expect a few candid remarks by me upon the press of the country, and has offered me this occasion as an opportunity for getting even, as it were, with some of its members. But I shall disappoint him. I have no grievance. This is the only world we have, the press is its chief instrument in the formation of public opinion, and I could not hope to change the tone of the press by what I might say here by way of suggesting improvement, and, so far as I am personally concerned, I might make it a good deal worse. I am in a position where every act of mine is fairly subject to review, and whether the comment be friendly and judicial or hostile and unfair, it goes with other burdens of the office, is the price of serving the public, and is to be taken, as every thorough and sportsmanlike golfer will understand, as a "rub of the green."

Your toastmaster has been good enough to mention, as a subject upon which our minds will meet, a general arbitration treaty with Great Britain. I believe that the proposal for this is moving along with as much rapidity as is consistent with care in drafting the agreement and securing for it as broad a scope as possible.

It may not be inappropriate for me to refer to a kindred subject that will indirectly stimulate international peace, and will be a substantial step in that direction, to wit, the reciprocity with Canada.

I am glad to have the opportunity of speaking to a body which fully represents the most important agencies for the formation of public opinion in this country upon a question which has now reached a critical point in its settlement. The agreement is a commercial one, and affects the duties on imports from each country into the other, and, therefore, it is difficult to say that a detailed discussion of tariff schedules is not relevant and important in considering its wisdom. But the general, commercial, economic, and social arguments in its favor are so convincing that I may be pardoned if I do not dwell on specific rates.

The treaty provides for free trade in all agricultural products, and in rough lumber down to the point of planing. It reduces the duties on secondary food products by a very substantial percentage, and it makes such reductions on a number of manufactured articles that those engaged in making them have assured us that the reductions will substantially increase the already large Canadian demand for them.

We tendered to the Canadian commissioners absolutely free trade in all products of either country, manufactured or natural, but the Canadian commissioners did not feel justified in going so far. It is only reasonable to infer, therefore, that with respect to those articles upon which they refused free trade to us they felt that the profitable price at which they could be sold by our manufacturers in Canada was less than the price at which their manufacturers could afford to sell the same either to their own people or to us. Hence it follows that their refusal to agree to free trade in these articles, as we proposed, is the strongest kind of evidence that if we should take off the existing duty from such articles coming into the United States it would not affect in the slightest degree the price at which those articles could be furnished to the public here. In other words, the proposition to put on the free list for entrance into the United States all articles that Canada has declined to make free in both countries would not lower the price to the consumer here. Thus the reason why meats were not put on the free list in this Canadian agreement was because Canada felt that the competition of our packers would injuriously affect the products of their packing houses. If that be true, how would it help our consumer or lower the price of meat in our markets if we let their meat in free while they retained a duty on our meat?

The same thing is true of flour. They would not consent to free trade in flour, because they knew that our flour mills could undersell their millers. If that were so, then how much competition and lowering of the price of flour could we expect from putting Canadian flour on the free list?

And yet gentlemen insist that the farmer has been unjustly treated because we have not put Canadian flour and meat on the free list. And it is proposed to satisfy the supposed grievance of the farmers by now doing so, without any compensating concession from Canada. This proposal would be legislation passed for political-platform uses, without accomplishing any real good.

In another aspect, however, the effect of the proposal might be serious. Of course a mere reduction of our tariff, or the putting of any article on our free list, without insisting on a corresponding change in the Canadian tariff, will not interfere with the contract as made with Canada. Canada can not object to our giving her greater tariff concessions than we have agreed to give her under the contract. But if we do make such concessions, without any consideration on the part of Canada, without any quid pro quo, so to speak, after the contract has been tentatively agreed upon by those authorized to make contracts for ratification in both Governments, then we are in danger of creating an obligation against us in favor of all other foreign countries with whom we have existing treaties containing what is called the "favored-nation" clause. By this clause we agree to give the same commercial privileges to the country with whom we have made the treaty as we give to any other nation. This clause has been construed by our statesmen not to involve us in an obligation to extend a privilege to all nations which we confer upon one nation in consideration of an equally valuable privilege received from that one nation. In other words, it has been held not to include special bargains or contracts where there is a consideration moving to each side for the obligation of the other.

But the serious question that would arise is whether if, now that the contract has been tentatively agreed upon and is about to be confirmed by Canada, we should grant to Canada more than the contract requires, we could claim that this extra concession was not a pure gratuity and one which was necessarily extended to all other nations under the favored-nation clause. There are two objections, therefore, to inserting in the bill confirming this Canadian contract additions to our free list from Canada. The first is that they are a concession that is of no value to those whom it is proposed to propitiate by adopting it, and the second is that it may involve us indirectly in a doubtful obligation in respect to trade with other countries. If we desire to put meat and flour and other commodities on the free list for the entire world, that is one thing; we can do it with our eyes open and with a knowledge of what it entails after an investigation, but to put such a provision in a Canadian treaty and then have it operate as a free list for the entire world is legislation necessarily ill considered.

More than this, those proposed gratuitous concessions are in the nature of an admission that in some way or other we have done an injury to a particular class by this Canadian reciprocity agreement. I deny it. It is said that it injures the farmers. I deny it. It is strictly in accordance with the protective principle that we should only have a protective tariff between us and countries in which the conditions are so dissimilar as to make a difference in the cost of production. Now, it is known of all men that the general conditions that prevail in Canada are the same as those which obtain in the United States in the matter of agricultural products. Indeed, if there is any advantage, the advantage is largely on the side of the United States, because we have much greater variety of product, in view of the varieties of our climate, than they can have in Canada.

We raise cotton as no other country does. Of course they raise none in Canada.

We raise corn, and hogs and cattle fed on corn, and with the exception of a very small part of the acreage of Canada, in Ontario, it is not possible to raise corn at all in the Dominion.

With respect to wheat and barley and oats, conditions differ in different parts of Canada and in different parts of the United States. Classing them together, and on the whole, the conditions are substantially the same. In prices of farm land the differences are no greater between Canada and the United States than between the different States in the United States. In the matter of farm wages, they differ in different parts of Canada as they do in the United States; but, on the whole, they are about the same—higher in Canada at some places than in the United States and less at others. But there is no pauper class of labor in either country, and the only difference between the two countries is that Canada is farther north than the United States, a difference which, as already said, gives the advantage agriculturally to our side of the border.

It is said that this is an agreement that affects agricultural products more than manufactures. That is true; but if we are to have an interchange of products between the two countries of any substantial amount the chief part of it must necessarily be in agricultural products. As it is we export to Canada more agricultural products than we receive from her, and so it will be afterwards. The effect is not going to lower, in my judgment, the specific prices of agricultural products in our country. It is going to steady them; it is going to reduce the rapid fluctuations, and it is going to produce an interchange of products at a profit which will be beneficial to both countries.

If objection can be made to the treaty on the ground that a particular class derive less benefit from it than other classes, then it is the manufacturer of the country who ought to object, because the treaty, in its nature, will not enlarge his market as much as it will that of the farmer.

I am quite aware that, from one motive or another, a great deal of effort and money have been spent in sending circulars to farmers to convince them that this Canadian treaty, if adopted, will do them injury. I do not know that it is possible to allay such fears by argument, pending the consideration of the treaty by the Senate. It usually takes a considerable time by argument to clarify erroneous economic views of this kind having no foundation in fact, but only in fear, stimulated by misrepresentation and exaggeration. But there is one way—and that a conclusive way—of demonstrating the fallacy and unfounded character of their fears to the farmers, or any other class that believes itself to be unjustly affected by this treaty, and that is to try it on. There is no obligation on either nation to continue the reciprocity arrangement any longer than it desires, and if it be found by actual practice that there is an injury, and a permanent injury, to the farmers of this country, everybody knows that they can sufficiently control legislation to bring about a change and a return to the old conditions. Those of us who are responsible for the Canadian treaty are willing and anxious to subject it to that kind of a test, and we have no doubt that when it is put in operation the ghosts which have been exhibited to frighten the agricultural classes will be laid forever.

Another and a very conclusive reason for closing the contract is the opportunity which it gives us to increase the supply of our natural resources which, with the wastefulness of children, we have wantonly exhausted. The timber resources of Canada, which will open themselves to us inevitably under the operation of this agreement, are now apparently inexhaustible. I say "apparently inexhaustible," for if the same procedure were to be adopted in respect to them that we have followed in respect to our own forests I presume that they, too, might be exhausted. But fortunately for Canada and for us we and they have learned much more than we realized two decades ago with respect to the necessity for proper methods of forestry and of lumber cutting. Hence, we may be safe in saying that under proper modern methods the timber resources open to us in Canada may be made inexhaustible and we may derive ample supplies of timber from Canadian sources, to the profit of Canada and for our own benefit.

There are other natural resources, which I need not stop to enumerate, that will become available to us as if our own if we adopt and maintain commercial union with Canada; and this is one of the chief reasons that ought to commend the Canadian agreement to the farseeing statesmanship of leaders of American public opinion.

But there are other, even broader, grounds than this that should lead to the adoption of the agreement. Canada's superficial area is greater than that of the United States between the oceans. Of course it has a good deal of waste land in the far north, but it has enormous tracts of unoccupied land, or land settled so sparsely as to be substantially unoccupied, which in the next two or three decades will rapidly acquire a substantial and valuable population. The Government is one entirely controlled by the people, and the bond uniting the Dominion with the mother country is light and almost imperceptible. There are no restrictions upon the trade or economic development of Canada which will interfere in the slightest with her carving out her independent future. The attitude of the people is that of affection toward the mother country, and of a sentimental loyalty toward her royal head. But for practical purposes the control exercised from England by Executive or Parliament is imponderable.

Canada has now between seven and eight millions of people. They are a hardy, temperate, persistent race, brave, intelligent, and enterprising, sharing or inheriting the good qualities of all their ancestors, and with a national pride in their Dominion that grows with the wonderful success and prosperity that have attended them in the last three decades. They are good neighbors; we could not have better neighbors. It is more than a hundred years since a hostile shot was fired across the border, and they are like us because our conditions are similar and because our traditions are similar.

They are more restrictive in their immigration laws than we, and perhaps they grow less rapidly; but they have before them a wonderful expansion in population, in agriculture, and in business, and they offer to any nation with whom they have sympathetic relations, and with whom it is profitable for them to deal, a constantly increasing market and an ever-expanding trade.

The question which we now have to answer is whether we propose to maintain an artificial wall across the country of 3,700 miles in length and of indefinite height to prevent the natural trade that would flow between two great nations of people of the same language, of similar character, tradition, business habits, and moral aspirations, when the removal of that wall would furnish to each country the economic advantage of its corresponding enlargement of prosperous population and territory without the added responsibility of government and political control.

The theory that trade is not profitable to one party unless it is done at a loss to the other party is at the bottom of a great deal of the economic fallacies of the past and the present. Trade is mutually beneficial. It is profitable to both parties, for if it is not it can not and ought not continue. As between Canada and the United States, the trade and the mutual benefit from the trade will increase.

It is amusing—and I am not sure that it has not some elements of consolation in it—to find that all the buncombe and all of the exaggeration and misrepresentation in politics and all of the political ghosts are not confined to our own country, and that there has entered into the discussion in Canada, as a reason for defeating the adoption of this contract by the Canadian Parliament, a fear that we desire to annex the Dominion; and the dreams of Americans with irresponsible imaginations, who like to talk of the starry flag's floating from Panama to the pole, are exhibited by the opponents of the Canadian treaty in Canada as the declaration of a real policy by this country and as an announcement of our purpose to push political control over our neighbor of the north.

I am not an anti-imperialist, but I have had considerable experience in the countries over which we have assumed temporary control. I do not know when that control will end, but I do know that in respect to those countries we have taken over heavy duties and obligations, the weight of which ought to destroy any temptation to further acquisition of territory.

It would be invidious to institute a comparison between the Government of Canada and this country, but there is one part of our jurisdiction and that of Canada that come together sufficiently close to enable the Canadians and ourselves to realize that the sample of government that we exhibit is not alluring. I refer to the control of Alaska as compared with the control by Canada of her northwest territory. The talk of annexation is bosh. Everyone who knows anything about it realizes that it is bosh. Canada is a great, strong youth, anxious to test his muscles, rejoicing in the race he is ready to run. The United States has all it can attend to with the territory it is now governing, and to make the possibility of the annexation of Canada to the United States a basis for objection to any steps toward their greater economic and commercial union should be treated as one of the jokes of the platform and should not enter into the consideration of serious men engaged in solving a serious problem.

Why should not we have a closer union with Canada? Think of the absurdity of separating Manitoba and Minneapolis by as great a distance as Manitoba and Liverpool when certainly Providence intended that their separation, socially and commercially, should only be that of their geographical distance. Canadians have furnished us a large number of our best citizens. We are giving them a large number of the pick of our young farmers. Let us open the gateways between us. Let us give to both countries the profit of the trade that God intended between us. Let the political governments remain as they are. Let us abolish arbitrary and artificial obstructions to our association with our friends upon the north and derive the mutual profit that it will certainly bring.

The Canadian contract has passed the House substantially as adopted and in such form that if adopted in the same way by the Senate it will go into effect as soon as the bill now pending in the Canadian Parliament shall be passed by that Parliament.

I desire to express my high appreciation of the manner in which the present House of Representatives have treated the reciprocity agreement. It has not "played politics." It has taken the statesmanlike course in respect to it.

I am very hopeful that the Senate will treat the agreement in the same way and that no amendments will there be added to the bill. For the reasons given, I think they are dangerous. It is not for me to question the good faith of those who propose to introduce and adopt them, but it is appropriate to say that the use of amendments is a very common method of defeating legislation when the responsibility for its defeat is one that the movers of such amendments do not desire openly to assume.

It may be that the Canadian contract does not go far enough. In making it we were limited by the reluctance of Canada to go as far as we would wish to have her go, but the fact that it does not go far enough is the poorest reason for not going as far as we can. We were making a contract, we were balancing considerations; we were not making a general tariff law or a general tariff revision. It was no part of our duty to reduce the tariff generally in this contract with other countries. If that is to be done, and if there is a sincere desire to have it done, then it ought to be done by separate legislation, and the passage of the present agreement, which I regard as epoch making in the commercial relations between the two countries, should not be endangered by making its passage conditioned on the passage of tariff revision or other legislation having no real relevancy to the contract.

I appeal to this company, representing as it does the press of the United States, to see to it that it is made clear to the public that this contract ought to stand or fall by its own terms, and that its passage or defeat ought not to be affected in any regard by other amendments to the tariff law. Such a method is a recurrence to the old way of making a tariff bill, which has been properly criticized and condemned, by which its passage is secured not on the merits of particular schedules, but by the support that may be secured in the House or Senate through giving a tariff on particular products of particular localities.

I think there is a general sentiment now in favor of revising the tariff, schedule by schedule, and of making this revision dependent on exact information as to each schedule, gathered by impartial investigators. To amend this Canadian contract and to make its passage dependent on other tariff legislation is to continue the old method of tariff revision characterized, not without reason, as a local issue.

I have said that this was a critical time in the solution of the question of reciprocity. It is critical, because, unless it is now decided favorably to reciprocity, it is exceedingly probable that no such opportunity will ever again come to the United States. The forces which are at work in England and in Canada to separate her by a Chinese wall from the United States and to make her part of an imperial commercial band, reaching from England around the world to England again, by a system of preferential tariffs, will derive an impetus from the rejection of this treaty, and if we would have reciprocity with all the advantages that I have described, and that I earnestly and sincerely believe will follow its adoption, we must take it now or give it up forever.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the policy of tariff for revenue only, as it is interpreted and proposed to be applied by the Democratic Party, is the most unphilosophical, the most illogical, the most inconsistent tariff policy that was ever proposed to an intelligent people. That is a broad statement, but history will attest its truth. There are two primary tariff policies—one is the policy of discriminating in the imposition of customs duties for the purpose of developing domestic industries and the other is the policy of free trade. There is no middle ground that is tenable from the standpoint of logic or experience or from any other standpoint. The policy of protection is right or it is wrong. If it is wrong, it is just as wrong if it be established under a tariff for revenue only as it is if it be properly labeled and go to the country without disguise. There is only one great free-trade country in the civilized world, and that is Great Britain. That country has a tariff-for-revenue-only policy in the real sense of the term. It levies its customs duties exclusively upon noncompetitive products. Our political adversaries insist that duties upon competitive products increase the price of the imported article to the amount of the duty exacted and likewise enables the producer of the domestic article to charge a price equal at least to the price of the imported product, including the duty. Therefore, if that contention is sound, any duty that is imposed under any pretext whatever upon competitive articles enables the producers of those articles in our own country to impose an artificially high price upon the consumer.

It does not make a bit of difference what you term the duty or the policy under which it is imposed; it is immaterial whether you call it protection or tariff for revenue only, it is identically the same thing in essence and it produces the same result. No country in the world has ever adopted a tariff-for-revenue-only policy as it is defined by the Democratic Party. Democrats are protectionists or they are free traders, and judging by the character of the bill that is before the House for consideration at this time, they should be classed as absolute free traders. If they follow their own logic, they can be nothing else than free traders. If revenue is the sole consideration in customs laws, our importations of noncompetitive articles are abundantly sufficient to yield all the revenues that we are accustomed to receive from our foreign trade. The only explanation for the inconsistent attitude of that party upon the tariff question is that they have opposed the policy of protection so long and so persistently and have denounced it so vehemently that they lack the courage to be candid now and admit that they have been wrong all of these years and that the Republican Party has been right, so they are driven to the necessity of avowing a hybrid policy—half protection and half free trade—under the cloak of tariff for revenue only.

They seek to give protection to favored industries under the policy of tariff for revenue only and at the same time they denounce protection as robbery. Take sugar, for instance. We import about one-half the sugar we consume, and the price of sugar in this country is the price of imported sugar at our ports plus the duty. There can not be one price for the home product and another price for the imported product. Sugars, foreign and home made, sell in our markets side by side at identically the same price. We receive a revenue out of sugar importations amounting to about $55,000,000 a year, and if the Democrats are right, it costs the sugar consumers of the United States over $120,000,000 a year to put $55,000,000 of revenue in the Public Treasury.

The consumer pays over $2 of bounty or duty upon sugar for every dollar that goes into the Treasury of the Government. If you Democrats are right, why do you not take the duty off of sugar altogether, put it on coffee or some other noncompetitive commodity? A tax of 5 cents a pound on coffee would produce substantially the same amount of revenue as the present duty on sugar yields, and there are no home producers of coffee to reap the unearned and undeserved benefit of the tariff, so that every dollar of additional cost that the consumer would pay on account of the tariff on coffee would go into the Treasury. You understand the philosophy of that proposition. You want a tariff for revenue only, you insist, so the home producer will not be able to rob the consumer. Then, why do you not put sugar on the free list and put your duty on coffee? You dare not do it. You run from your own logic. I believe in the policy of protection. I believe in discriminating in the imposition of customs duties upon competitive products with the view of promoting industrial growth in our own country. I believe in discriminating for the purpose of giving employment to more wage earners at good wages; for the purpose of maintaining a high standard of wages and a high standard of living among the American toilers. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, if the policy of protection should be abolished the inevitable result would be that wages in the United States would gravitate to the level of wages in European and other cheap-labor countries. Nothing could prevent it. Wages and values, like water, seek a universal level. The tariff wisely levied under the policy of protection operates like a dam in a river. It maintains a higher level above the dam than the level below it. Destroy the dam and the water above and below seeks a common level, but the water below the dam never goes up to the level of the water above, but the water above, by the immutable law of gravitation, finds the level of the water below. It has been the experience of practically every great producing country in the civilized world that the best results come from a wise and rational policy of protection.

Up to about three-quarters of a century ago Great Britain operated under that policy, and when she attained the position of industrial and commercial supremacy among the nations of the earth she abolished her protective system and established a policy of free trade, or tariff for revenue only, with customs duties upon noncompetitive commodities exclusively. And what has been the result? For 25 years Great Britain's commercial supremacy has been waning. She is no longer commercial premier among the nations. It is said that under the doctrine of Adam Smith, Ricardo, and John Stuart Mill, the great free-trade philosophers, there is a more equitable distribution between labor and capital of their joint products, that the laborer receives a more munificent return for his toil. Has that been the experience in England? Does the wage earner in England under the policy of free trade enjoy a higher degree of prosperity than the wage earner in America or the wage earner in France or in Germany under the policy of protection? I may not be well advised in relation to it, but I understand that Great Britain is the only one of the great industrial countries that has found it necessary to adopt and maintain the policy of old-age industrial pension. When her toilers have worked and struggled in factory and mine for a bare subsistence until they can work no longer, they are paid an annuity out of the public treasury. They are unable to provide for the exigencies of age and disability out of their earnings. They can not hope for assistance from the sons and daughters they have reared, for the sons and daughters are no more than able to provide for themselves and those directly dependent upon them. In the light of England's experience can it be maintained that protection takes from the toiler that just share of the joint creation of labor and capital that would be his under the policy of free trade? Under free trade there is so little to divide between labor and between labor and capital after paying the necessary expenses of production that they both share meagerly.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that they use the public funds with which to feed the school children in England and Wales?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is suggested they use the public funds to feed and support their school children in free-trade England. That, Mr. Chairman, is an object lesson of the disastrous results of free trade. If there is a just and equitable distribution of wealth under the English free-trade policy between labor and capital dividends on stocks must also be paid out of the public treasury.

The bill now under consideration is advertised throughout the country as the "farmers' free-list bill." Our political adversaries, wise and patriotic as they are, and good citizens, of course, have been for generations denouncing the Republican Party for class legislation. Judging from their preachments, they have been standing in solid phalanx against legislation for "special interests"; and now, preparing for the campaign of 1912, doubtless they have taken the American farmer to their sympathetic bosom and propose to give him the benefit of a special free-trade list. Is that class legislation?

Is this a tariff-for-revenue-only bill? Where does the revenue feature appear? It proposes to surrender $10,000,000 a year of revenue, and I am unable to discover where there is any compensating advantage in return. Are the farmers of the United States asking for special legislation? Are they asking to be made the beneficiaries of tariff discrimination? I understand not. They can not afford to be, because the farmer is one of the few producers in this country who is unable to monopolize his products, and he should stand like adamant at all times and under all conditions against legislation for special interests, against class legislation of any kind or character. If it is wise and proper to legislate specially for the benefit of the farmer, why is it not also wise and proper to legislate specially for other industries? The farmer is too wise to be fooled by any proposition that is as thinly disguised as this one. It will not only do him no good, but it will do him positive harm.

This bill, instead of being entitled a bill to put certain articles on the free list, should be entitled a bill embodying the hope of the Democratic leaders to secure the farmer vote in the campaign of 1912.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does not the gentleman believe that the farmers in his district would readily agree to have agricultural implements put on the free list?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Perhaps they would. I do not know of any farmer that would object to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you know of any manufacturers that would?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have made no inquiry. But that is not what you are proposing to do. We already have reciprocal free trade in farm implements. We already provide in our tariff that implements coming from any country that admits our implements into its ports free of duty shall be admitted without any duty in our ports. The farmers in my section of Indiana are patriots; they are sensible people, and they believe somewhat in the old Blaine policy of reciprocity—that if we can obtain something that will be of substantial benefit in return for valuable concessions to other countries, it is good statesmanship and good business to do it. You propose to open the ports free to commodities that now yield us $10,000,000 a year of revenue, without securing to the farmers of the country a market for a single additional barrel of flour or a pound of pork. You are securing nothing in return for your concessions; you will have nothing in your game bag as a result of your wild chase after votes in 1912, and you surely will not get the votes.

I can scarcely believe that the Democratic leaders prepared and introduced this bill with the intention, or even with the hope, that it would become a law. This is campaign material for 1912, and the expense of printing and distributing it will not be set out in the report of the treasurer of the campaign committee under the publicity act.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For a question.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The statement you made a moment ago I have heard made repeatedly time and time again in the last 15 days, namely, that we now have free trade in farming implements with the nations of the world. I want to correct that statement. I have consulted with Mr. Curtis, of the Customs Department of the Treasury, and he informs me that there are only two countries that give free trade—England and Russia—in farming implements.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. England manufactures and exports farm implements in considerable quantities, and her exports to this country pay no duty. I did not say that we had absolute free trade in implements; I said we had reciprocal free trade. I said that we have a law authorizing the importation of farm implements free of duty from all countries that accept our implements duty free. The American farmer does not expect this Government to open our markets to foreign countries free of charge unless they make the same or equivalent concessions in favor of our exporters. Should we admit wagons and plows from foreign countries into our ports free of duty while they exclude our wagons and plows from their ports by high tariffs? That is not reciprocity nor good business sense. This country must not become the international "goat," if you will pardon a slang term.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I believe our farmers want this bill passed with these additions to the free list. I will say that to the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think the bill will deceive anybody, either here or throughout the country. It is not the function of Congress to legislate happiness into the hearts or money into the pockets of the people if it could do so. It is the duty of the Government to create conditions under which the people may provide for themselves, having a due regard for the rights of each other. The industry, the intelligence, and the enterprise of the people, after all, must create the wealth. It is the duty of the Government to carry into effect, as far as it can do so by proper laws, the principle embodied in that great political classic, the Declaration of Independence, that all men are created equal. They should be equal before the law, and it is the duty of the Government to keep the door of opportunity open wide and on equal terms to every citizen without regard to rank or fortune.

It is the business of the Government to see that every citizen has an equal chance with every other citizen to work out his own destiny. The man with only 1 talent should be as tenderly regarded, from the standpoint of government and law, as the man with 10 talents.

When the Government shall have established conditions of that kind it will have done substantially all it can to promote the common welfare, and each citizen must then, in a large degree, be left to work out his own salvation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman stated that all men are created equal, and a moment afterwards he referred to the case of the man with 1 talent and the man with 10 talents. Does the gentleman think that the man with 10 talents and the man with 1 talent were created equal, and does he think that a man with a diseased liver or diseased mind and a man with a healthy body were created equal, and so on down the line?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not make the statement he imputes to me. I said they were created equal so far as government and law are concerned.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But the gentleman did not make that distinction.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. "A man's a man for a' that." Men are not created with the same capacities, the same aptitudes, the same tastes and ambitions. That is taken for granted. But they are all equal in the right to make the highest and best use of the faculties of mind and body. They are all equal in the right to enjoy the same opportunities under the same conditions. These rights belong to every human being, in virtue of his manhood.

There has been a marvelous increase in the aggregate wealth of the United States in the last 15 years, an increase that has not been equaled by any country in the world's history.

It is true that the accumulation of a vast amount of wealth is not in itself the highest proof of real progress. But we must bear in mind that there can be no permanent progress among any people unless there be economic and industrial independence. The man must be free, economically free, and industrially free, and he can not be either in a poverty-stricken country. So the accumulation of a great amount of wealth during the last 15 years does signify something. It does amount to a great deal in connection with other conditions. It means much if there has been a corresponding growth in the moral and intellectual lives of the people. Has there been?

Evidence abounds on every hand that our people have never progressed intellectually and morally more than they have during these recent years of good times. Note the advance that has been made in methods of production, in the employment of scientific methods, and in the substitution of mechanical power for muscular power in all the industries, including agriculture. In the enlarged application of the forces of nature, in the growing supremacy of brain over brawn in all lines of work, advancement along these lines was never more remarkable in the world's history than it has been during the last 15 or 20 years. And I appeal to Members of this House for vindication when I say that the standard of ethics, individual and social, has never been higher in the world's history than it is to-day. More is exacted of the citizen, more is required of the business man to-day in the way of righteous living and fair and honest dealing than there ever was before. So it seems certain that this large increase in wealth has been accompanied by at least an equal advancement in the moral and intellectual lives of our people. True, much must still be accomplished along these lines before there is perfection. But the world is growing better.

But now to the problem of distribution. Our political adversaries agonize over the fact that some men have grown too rich, that the accumulations of labor and capital have not been equitably distributed among the people.

I admit that if the vast increase in aggregate wealth has been centered in the hands of a comparatively few people, while the great masses have been toiling and struggling in poverty and distress, it means nothing in the way of real progress, less than nothing. What are the facts? Let us consult the statistics respecting savings institutions throughout the country. More than $4,000,000,000 are deposited in the savings banks of the country by more than 8,000,000 depositors, an average of about $420 to the depositor. Who are those depositors? Are they the plutocrats and trust promoters? No. They are the wage earners in the factories and the mines, the clerks in the stores, the schoolteachers, the telegraph operators, and others who have been able to accumulate and lay by this vast sum of money. And the deposits in the savings banks by no means constitute the full measure of the surplus earnings and accumulations of these classes of toilers.

They do not include the multiplied millions that have been invested in homes, in insurance, in building and loan establishments, and in numerous other forms of investment. So it does seem that from the standpoint of the wage earners there has been something near an equitable distribution of the joint earnings of labor and capital. Not perfect, I admit, but the situation shows marked advancement in the right direction.

What is the situation in respect to the farmer? The aggregate value of farm property during the last 15 years has more than doubled—has increased fully $14,000,000,000. Farms alone throughout the Middle West have more than doubled in value. Was there ever a time in the history of the world when the farmers have done as well as they have during these years? Has there ever been a time when the farmers have received as great a share in the distribution of accumulated wealth as they have during these years? Every farmer in the country will answer this question in the negative.

So, on analysis, we find that the wealth of the country is not all in the pockets of a few men. I admit that there are many who have not received as much as they desired, nor as much as they deserved. On the other hand there are men who, prompted by greed and avarice, by selfish motives, and endowed with great ability, have taken advantage of the opportunities that have been open to us all and appropriated to themselves much more than their fair share. It is an easy thing to find fault. It is easy to criticize an existing policy, because the creations of man are not perfect. It does not require a great deal of mental energy to discover flaws. But remember that when you come to establish a new policy, one that is an improvement upon that under which we have made such gratifying progress, the task looms large with difficulties. It is much easier to tear down than it is to build up, and it requires less character and brains.

During these years the Republican party, in power in all branches of the Government, has enacted more great historic measures, calculated to elevate the standard of business ethics, calculated to bring about a higher measure of decency and justice among the people in all their relations, than had been enacted before in all history of the Government. And, what is more, those laws have been made a living force by their faithful execution. The great and powerful lawbreakers have been taught that laws are made to be obeyed in letter and in purpose; that the Government is no respecter of persons; that the laws must be observed by the high and mighty as well as by the lowly and humble. The record of these achievements is imperishably engraved upon our national life and character.

Our civilization is not perfect. It never will be perfect until the day of the millenium, but it is moving along in the right direction. The movement of the great current of humanity is onward and upward toward a higher and better plane of existence. There are counter currents and whirlpools and eddies that retard progress, but they can not stop it. With the proper direction of the great underlying forces that make for universal good, the individual misfortunes will be ameliorated and the injustices reduced to the minimum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Can the gentleman from Indiana give us any statistics about the savings in the banks of the country and the farm values during the last Democratic tariff-for-revenue-only administration?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not have those statistics, but the deposits in the savings banks have almost doubled and the value of farm property has more than doubled since the Republican Party took charge of the Government in 1897.

They talk about the lack of opportunities for the poor. That is an effective way to excite the prejudices of the people. There are always more poor people than rich people in the world. "Riches" is a relative term. There always has been a wide disparity between the condition of the capable and the condition of the less capable, and I presume there always will be. Men of great capacity have been able to take advantage of their opportunities and accumulate large fortunes. Some of those fortunes have been made honestly and some of them by questional methods. Honestly acquired wealth is entitled to the respect and protection of the law. Dishonest wealth and dishonest poverty merit condemnation alike.

The Government can not arbitrarily equalize wealth without regard to merit or capacity to earn. That would be industrial socialism of the most objectionable character. Some men will succeed where others fail. In the profession of the law it is often seen that two or three lawyers monopolize the business in their community. Why is that possible? It is because they have the capacity. They have what the people want and are willing to pay for. That same condition exists in all lines of physical and mental activity. In literature the world has had but one Homer, one Shakespeare, one Milton, and yet the field was open to all. So in the field of invention, in the field of finance, men of great capacity will succeed while others fail, and if their success is honest and honorable there is no just ground for complaint. It is the duty of government to see that men deal honesty with each other, to see that men of craft and cunning do not monopolize the great agencies of production nor close the field of opportunity against others. It is the duty of the Government to protect the masses of the people against extortion and oppression and injustice on the part of those who occupy positions of power and influence, either private or public. This is the great work the Republican leaders have been engaged in for the last 10 or more years, and in which such splendid progress has been made.

We all believe that private corporations are indispensable to industrial progress. They are created by government for the purpose of promoting the welfare of society, and it is the duty of the Government to regulate them to the extent that is necessary to secure to society the full benefit it may justly expect. I have no prejudice against honest corporations and no respect for dishonest corporations. They should all be made to obey the law and deal honorably and justly with the people. When was railroad transportation ever in as satisfactory a condition as it is to-day? I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that any shipper with a single carload of traffic can get identically the same rate between given points anywhere in this country that is given the great shipper who may furnish millions of dollars a year to the transportation companies. The vicious system of rebates has been destroyed. Our railroad service is cleaner and better than it ever was before in the history of the country.

The policy of the Republican Party is to preserve all that is good and helpful in existing conditions, and by wise and prudent methods eliminate as rapidly as possible everything that is wrong and hurtful. A long and uninterrupted period of control of the affairs of the Government finds the Republican Party somewhat disintegrated, but that condition is only temporary. The party is fundamentally right and will, in the nature of things, be the controlling factor in national affairs. I have no sympathy with the attempt to divide the party into warring factions. While we may have different views upon matters of method, they are too unimportant to be the basis of permanent factional division. The party is progressive and always has been. It is progressive in history, tradition, and purpose. It has met and successfully handled every great problem that has arisen in American politics for the last 60 years. This is the most progressive civilization in the entire world, and no party can secure and retain for any considerable period of time control of this great Government unless it shapes and fashions the laws and policies to meet the wants and the needs of a progressive people. [Applause on the Republican side.] I do not like the terms "standpatter," "progressive," "insurgent."

I do not believe in Bourbonism. I do not believe in radicalism. The great progressive force in the Republican Party, the force that makes for permanent progress, is composed of the 85 or 90 per cent of the members of that party who believe in moving forward along safe and sane lines. They believe in taking no step in advance unless it can be held, and in making every forward movement that can be maintained. This force is always advancing, because it refuses to hearken unto the advice of either reactionary or radical. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The party has thus avoided the Scylla of Bourbonism on one side and the Charybdis of radicalism on the other side, and that is the only way permanent progress is possible in our politics. I believe in that kind of Republicanism. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our Democratic friends have consumed a lot of time and energy in denouncing the trusts, and they have promised to do all manner of things to them. I do not have any love for trusts, if I may be permitted to define them. A trust is a monopolistic combination that uses its power unfairly to satisfy its greed. It is the business of the Government to protect the people against monopolies of all kinds. It is not necessary to destroy the industrial organization; it is not necessary to execute a citizen because he may do something that is not altogether right. It was said by a distinguished statesman that the poorest use society can make of a man is to hang him, but even that may be necessary sometimes. I do not believe in hanging a man for stealing a sheep, as was the custom in England a couple of hundred years ago. I do not believe in destroying corporations because they combine and monopolize, but I do believe in destroying the monopolies and compelling the corporations to serve the interests of society. The Republican Party stands for construction rather than destruction. The Democrats prate about their ability to destroy the trusts, but their remedy is worse even than the trusts can possibly be. A farmer had a fine shepherd dog which was unfortunately infested with fleas. He saturated the dog with kerosene oil to kill the pests. One of his small boys struck a match and made a fuse of the dog's tail and in excruciating agony the dog ran under the barn for shelter. The barn was soon enveloped in flames, and with its valuable contents was completely destroyed. When it was all over the farmer surveyed the ruins and said: "Well, there is one consolation, poor Carlo will no longer be pestered with fleas." [Laughter.] I admit that the Democrats can do something to the trusts, but their remedy is altogether too expensive. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. While the policy of free trade may be able to do something to the trusts, what would it meanwhile be doing to the small independent producer?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would sweep over the country with the fury of a cyclone and leave nothing in its wake. It would do again what was done under the last Democratic administration. It would stagnate business and devastate industries from ocean to ocean, and, like the plagues of Egypt, would not discriminate between the lawful and the lawless, between the good and the bad. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Well, we know what their policy wrought in the country when it was tried before. We know something about the Democratic capacity to destroy trusts. The bill that is now up for consideration is the most grotesque proposition that has been proposed in Congress for a number of years. If the provisions of the bill could be limited exclusively to Canada I would have no objection to it, because it would supplement the reciprocity measure that has already passed the House, and we need no protection against Canada. If conditions respecting wages, standard of living, and cost of production were the same in all other countries as they are in Canada the policy of protection would not be a vital issue in our politics. We can compete with Canada in all lines of production, but we can not compete with Europe and Asia where the population is dense and wages of workmen are not more than half what they are in this country.

But this bill proposes to admit products free from all over the earth—meats from Mexico and Australia and Argentina and everywhere else. It proposes to admit bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and other fabrics free of duty from all countries. It also allows farm implements, and leather and all manufactures thereof to come to our ports without duty. I have a letter in my desk from a manufacturing concern in North Carolina appealing to the Republican side of the House to save the cotton-bagging industry from this attack upon it by the Democratic Party.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. KENDALL. Is that the industry that they claimed to have 400 men on the pay roll, and that they will all be deprived of employment if this bill shall pass?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; that factory has several hundred laborers on its pay roll, and of course they will all be deprived of employment if this bill should go into operation. That letter states also that there are four or five other cotton-bagging plants in the State of North Carolina.

Mr. KENDALL. And South Carolina.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And other States in that section of the country. I know of a number in other parts of the country employing thousands of laborers at good wages who are able to buy the products of the farm, and if this bill goes into operation those factories will be compelled to close, and who will be benefited? The cotton planter may receive a small benefit, because he may possibly get cheaper bagging for his cotton and cheaper ties. He may be benefited to the extent of 2 or 3 cents on each bale of cotton. But that benefit will come at the expense of whom? At the expense of the wheat growers, the cattle and hog raisers of the country, because it would destroy the market they now have in selling food products to the thousands of men who are now employed in those mills. The duty on cotton bagging is only six-tenths of a cent a yard. We import great quantities of it now. It is manufactured in India——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Cotton manufactured in India?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; cotton bagging. It is not made of cotton, it is made of jute, and is a cover for baled cotton. It is manufactured in India, where wages are only 50 cents a week, and our manufacturers are barely keeping their heads above water in the face of such competition with a duty of only six-tenths cent a yard. There are a number of such establishments in this country employing several thousand men.

These men must seek employment in other channels or go without work, and all that is to be done in the interest of the farmer.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. PAGE. Has the gentleman any other evidence, except the mere statement of the people who are engaged in the manufacture of jute bagging, that the removal of the duty that is now on it and placing it upon the free list will put them out of business?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do have, because under the present duty we import over 25,000,000 yards a year, chiefly from India, which is more than half our entire annual consumption. That is the very highest and best proof that is procurable. If you take the duty off, how can the manufacturers in this country subsist? Of course it means the destruction of the cotton-bagging industry in this country, and gentlemen should carefully reflect before doing a thing as serious as that. North Carolina is interested on both sides of the proposition. Then take the question of free steel and iron. There are some kinds of steel and iron, I think, which the steel mills in this country can produce as cheaply as they can be produced in any country in the world, such as pig iron, steel rails, and heavy structural steel. But when the highly wrought, completely fabricated products are considered, such as hoop and band iron and steel, finished and cut and painted and provided with buckles, all involving a great deal of handwork, it is a different question. Our mills can not compete on equal terms in making that class of products with the cheap-labor countries. I am not willing, Mr. Chairman, to vote on a mere guess for a measure that may close industries in this country that employ thousands and thousands of men. It is too serious a proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. PAGE. I merely want to suggest to the gentleman that my information, particularly in regard to those establishments which are in North Carolina that are engaged in the manufacture of cotton bagging, is that they are entirely engaged in making the product out of old bagging and——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman has said enough to get his idea into my speech.

Mr. PAGE. Well, sir, I desire to say to the gentleman that my intention in interrupting him was not to inject myself into his speech, but to see if I could bring out some information which the gentleman had not given.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Admitting that my speech might be improved from the standpoint of the gentleman, I only know this, that these manufacturers in the gentleman's State are appealing to Congress against this free-trade bill.

Mr. PAGE. Just as every other protected interest of America is appealing for protection. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not because of any necessity but from the standpoint of protection. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman knows better than I do of the character of men who are engaged in this business in his own State, but we all know this, that when the Democrats had control of the Government and put into operation their tariff policies that practically all the industries in the country were closed, and manufacturers are naturally afraid of Democratic tariff legislation. A burnt child avoids fire. [Applause on the Republican side.] Show some fruit "meet for repentance" before you ask the people to repose confidence in your wisdom respecting tariff legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to have about 15 minutes additional time.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the gentleman 15 minuter additional time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe in a just and rational protective tariff myself, and I am not ready, Mr. Chairman, to vote for this free-trade bill unless we have trustworthy information that we can produce all the articles covered by the bill as cheaply as they can be produced in foreign countries. If that can be done, I am willing to vote to take the duty off, but no one pretends that that is the case. If this bill becomes a law, a number of factories will close their doors and thousands of laborers will be out of work. I stand by the policy outlined in the last Republican platform, of maintaining a duty sufficiently high to cover the difference in cost of production here and abroad plus a reasonable profit to the American producer. I believe in a nonpartisan expert tariff commission that will ascertain with practical certainty the difference in cost of production between this country and other countries. I want to know to a moral certainty that any tariff measure proposed will not destroy our industries before I can give it my support. I am not willing to act upon guesswork, because the consequences that would follow a mistake are altogether too serious.

They want cheap meats without reducing the price of cattle and hogs, so they put meats of all kinds on the free list and leave the duty on animals. A bright idea! We had cheap meats for several years, not a great while ago.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And cheap soup.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Cheap everything. I do not know what the effect of this particular bill will be upon the cost of meats, but I know this, that we can not afford to close the mills—even the steel mills or the cotton-bagging mills—and turn labor out of employment for the purpose of making meats cheap, although that will do it. We can not afford to secure cheap living by destroying the producing capacity of our people. We never have good times in this country, and never will have good times, except when prices are good. Such a thing is impossible. I do not believe in abnormal prices, in unjust prices, but I believe in good prices as the result of natural, economic law, the law of supply and demand. When prices come that way it is evidence of prosperity. The complaint about the high cost of living seems to be general throughout the country.

I remember very well when living was cheap—that was during the last Democratic administration. Living was cheap enough then. Meats were cheap, but what good was it to a hungry man who was out of a job and who had no credit because he was out of employment, to say to him that meat was cheap? The people of this country procure the necessaries and the comforts of life much easier to-day than they did 15 or 16 years ago. That is evidenced by their greatly increased consuming capacity. If times were so hard, prices were so high, the people would not be able to consume the enormous amount of products they do now. The average American consumes more of the necessaries and the comforts of life than 10 of the average of the world's population outside of this country. Our 90,000,000 of people constitute as great a market for the products of toil and capital as 900,000,000 (more than half) of the average of the world's population in other countries.

If times were so hard and prices so high we could not buy so much. There can be no consumption without there is production. The consumer must produce something to exchange for the things that are necessary to satisfy his wants.

I remember very well the campaign following the McKinley act in 1890. That act went into operation in October. The election came in November following, and the Democrats swept the country. There were hardly enough Republican Congressmen elected to fill the "Cherokee strip" on our side of the Chamber. The critics and the faultfinders had created so much dissatisfaction and the demagogues had made so many promises that could not be performed that the people were cajoled into voting the Democratic ticket. And McKinley and McKinleyism were declared to be dead and buried forever. Even Mr. McKinley himself went down in defeat in his old Ohio district, the only time in all his illustrious career that he was beaten at a popular election. And there were others.

The campaign of 1892 was waged against the "iniquities" of the McKinley tariff and for a tariff for revenue only, that promised everybody all the good things conceivable. The result of the election seemed at the time to be the death knell of protection and the consignment of Mr. McKinley to his political sepulcher. But he never faltered in his faith. True to the traditions of his party, he went down in honorable defeat. The Republican ship was wrecked upon the shoals of prejudice and misrepresentation, but it had on board the ark of the covenant of the Republicanism of Lincoln, and of Sherman, and of Morton, and of Blaine, and of Harrison. When the country discovered what an awful mistake had been made at the election of 1892, rescue parties were organized to raise the ship and restore it to its proper position of supremacy on the sea of American politics. It required four long, long, impatient years to do it. During those years there was commercial stagnation and industrial paralysis throughout the country. In this land of plenty there was hunger and distress. But the end came, and the hopes of the people were fulfilled and their prayers were answered at the presidential election in 1896. There was joy in millions of hearts when the tidings went over the country that McKinley was elected President. "The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to know if the gentleman thinks that a high tariff was responsible for the hunger and distress that occurred after the 1907 panic, that closed up the banks of the country, so that the people could not get what little money they had there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the "hunger and distress" in 1907 was like the "milk sickness" down in Illinois when I was a boy. It was said that "milk sickness" existed in that country, but it was always over in the next county, and nobody was able to locate it. [Laughter.] In the State of Indiana we only knew of the panic in 1907 through press reports. Our people decided that if there was a real panic in 1907 as a result of Republican legislation it was far preferable to Democratic prosperity at high tide. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And it was only Democrats who called it a panic. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. The gentleman from Indiana referred to the part of the State where he lives, I presume? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I refer to conditions all over the State. I did some campaigning while the panic was at its worst down in the gentleman's section of the State. [Applause on the Republican side.]

History, it is said, sometimes repeats itself. Will the experience of 1892 repeat itself in 1912? Will the Democratic Party carry the election next year [cries of "Yes" on the Democratic side] on such measures as they are proposing to-day? I say no, because the awful experience which the country went through during the last Democratic administration is still fresh in the minds of too many people to permit it. It was burned too deeply into the lives of the citizens to be forgotten so soon. I have no fear of the result in 1912 if the Democratic House passes this bill and other bills of the same general character—free-trade bills, bills that will close industries and turn labor out of employment.

> The tumult and the shouting dies,
> The captains and the kings depart;
> Still stands thine ancient sacrifice—
> An humble and a contrite heart.
> Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet—
> Lest we forget—lest we forget!

[Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, this is the fifth of a series of important legislative measures considered in this extraordinary session of the Sixty-second Congress.

The first of these measures was a code of rules presented by the majority of the House for its government. Heretofore the Speaker of the House has possessed the power of appointing its standing committees. Here, and throughout the country, there was much criticism of the practice. It was claimed that the Speaker's influence in legislative matters was too controlling, and that one of the greatest aids to the maintenance of that influence was his power to select from the membership of the House the members of its great legislative committees. The Democratic Party was not alone in its denunciation of this power; many Members of the Republican Party have as bitterly assailed it and condemned it as did the Members of the Democratic Party. In 16 years of uninterrupted Republican control of this House, in spite of complaints and denunciation, the practice prevailed. The Democratic Party in the very beginning of its ascendancy inserted a provision in the rules of the House taking away from the Speaker the power to appoint the committees of the House and vested that power in the House itself.

Of course, the rules are not perfect; they may be, and undoubtedly will be, bettered from time to time, but those who sincerely desired a change in the manner of the selection of committees might have been expected to welcome the change made by the present rules and heartily to support them. Under the pretense, however, of making them better than they are, many of those whose support, from their previous declarations, might have been expected hindered and interfered with their adoption. Many of those who opposed the rules presented to this body admitted that they were fairly good rules, and when the final vote was reached upon the question of their adoption there were none who made manifest a desire to go on record as opposed to them.

It may then, I think, be assumed by the people of the country that in their first measure the Democratic Party lived up to its declarations and its promises and reformed the rules without the aid or the assistance of those members of the Republican Party whose principal stock in trade for the last four or five years has been the denunciation of the so-called legislative evil eliminated by the rules of the Sixty-second Congress, fashioned and put into effect by the Democratic majority of that Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Chaos, anarchy, and confusion have not followed the making of that reform, and it has been demonstrated that the House of Representatives can select its own committees without great strife, great delay, or great interference with legislative work.

The second measure was the joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States, so that Senators may be elected by the people of the various States instead of by the State legislatures. It would be untrue to say that only the Democrats favored this resolution, for similar resolutions have been favorably acted upon in this House when the Republican Party was in the majority, but it is none the less true that the only opposition that manifested itself upon the floor of the House to this resolution came from the Republican Party and the only votes against the resolution were Republican votes. It was noticeable also in the debate upon this measure that some of those who most vociferously advocated the reform here and elsewhere when the time for action came were prominent in criticism and in efforts to cripple or to injure or to destroy the legislation by amendments demanded by no condition prevailing at the present time, but which might have a tendency to drive from the support of the measure many who were earnestly for it and might also have a tendency to defeat the ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution in some of the States of the Union. But again it would appear that the unamended provision was a fairly good one, because upon the final vote 296 Representatives voted in favor of it and only 15 were recorded in opposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The third of the series to which I have referred was the bill to provide for publicity of contributions to campaigns in which Representatives in Congress are elected. The present law provides that such publicity shall be made after the election; by the new legislation it is proposed to make the publicity prior to the election as well as after it. It is an attempt to make a good law a better law. But again opposition was offered and amendments proposed of doubtful constitutionality and which could not be deemed necessary, unless it be assumed that the several States lack either the wisdom or the desire to maintain or enact wholesome and effective election laws. However, when the final vote was taken upon this Democratic bill 307

Members of the House of Representatives voted "Aye" and not one voted "No." Apparently it was a good bill without the amendments so strongly urged. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The fourth of these legislative measures was the Canadian trade agreement, prepared under the direction of President Taft and presented to the last Congress with the understanding that it should be passed without amendments save those that might be necessary to make the legislation conform to the tentative agreement entered into between the Canadian officials and the American officials who prepared it. Personally I felt unable to support the so-called reciprocity proposition, and opposed it in every caucus, committee, and Congress of which I was a member. I do not propose to discuss the trade agreement at length, but to refer to it because of its relationship to the pending free-list bill, which I most heartily support. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There has been a great deal of discussion relative to the effect of the Canadian trade agreement, if enacted into law, upon the agricultural products of this country. The farmers themselves, especially those in the Northern States, have vigorously protested against its passage, but those favoring the agreement have claimed that the farmers were misled by published statements and articles emanating from persons who were not interested in agriculture itself, but in other things. It is, of course, true that others than farmers bitterly opposed the reciprocity proposition. The lumbermen and the print-paper manufacturers opposed it; so did a number of gentlemen upon this floor who felt that it was a blow at the system of protection, to which they were devoted as a national policy. On the other hand, it was claimed that the brewers of the country, because they would be benefited by free barley; the flour manufacturers, because they wanted free wheat; the railroads, because they wanted the Canadian hauls; and a number of gentlemen who believe in free trade were earnest in their advocacy of the measure. Tables of figures showing exports and imports of the various commodities that may be affected by the agreement and other tables of market quotations have been read and reread during the discussion. It was shown that the price of wheat in the Winnipeg market is less than the price of wheat in the Minneapolis market, and I suppose it is admitted that the Canadian farmer will sell his wheat in the best market, and unless the price in Winnipeg increases or the price in Minneapolis decreases, so that the markets will be about the same, the Canadian wheat, free of duty, will seek the American market. The State of Minnesota produces in the neighborhood of 90,000,000 bushels of wheat each year, about one-eighth of the total production of the United States. It is what is known as hard wheat. Canada produces about twice as much as the State of Minnesota, but with its great area of untilled lands and its great increase in immigration, its production will increase in amount very rapidly, while we can not look for so great an increase in production in this country. If the Canadian farmer is permitted to sell his wheat in the Minneapolis market, it is not an exaggeration to say that twice as much wheat will be offered for sale in that market as at the present time, and it can not be denied that the greater the quantity of any commodity offered for sale in any market the less the price of that commodity is likely to be.

The gentleman from North Dakota, during the debate, called attention to the fact that a village located on the boundary line between North Dakota and Canada had two wheat markets—one on the American side and one on the Canadian side—and the price paid for wheat on the American side was much in excess of the price paid on the Canadian side. There was nothing between the two selling places except the boundary line and a tariff of 25 cents a bushel upon wheat; and inasmuch as transportation facilities from each selling point were the same it would look as though either the line or the 25 cents a bushel tariff made the difference in price. The gentleman from North Dakota asked an advocate of the reciprocity agreement to tell him why the price was higher on the American side of the line than on the Canadian side, and the reply was, "It is a local condition." That is an easy answer, but not very convincing. If, as the advocates of reciprocity have claimed, Liverpool fixes the price of wheat, it is strange that it would fix the price much lower on one side of the line than on the other. It is singular that it would fix the price less at Winnipeg than at Minneapolis, for it must be remembered that Winnipeg is nearer to Liverpool than Minneapolis and the transportation rates are no greater. It is pointed out, however, that the United States exports wheat, and because of that fact it is claimed that the export price governs the price in this country. I do not admit that the export price is so controlling; but even if it were, it would not affect the condition in the Northwestern States. The wheat that is exported from this country is not the kind of wheat that is raised in Minnesota and in North and South Dakota and in Canada. Minnesota wheat is not quoted in the Liverpool market. No appreciable quantity of hard wheat is exported from the United States. There is demand enough for it here. The export wheat is soft wheat and durum wheat.

We export barley, too, but the barley we export is not the barley raised in the Northwestern States; it is the barley raised on the Pacific coast, and it is exported largely for food purposes, while the barley raised in the Northwestern States is used to make barley malt, and the domestic market demands all that is produced. Turn into this country the products of the barley fields of Canada and, in my opinion, the barley raisers of Minnesota and the Northwestern States must quit raising barley or sell it at a less price than that which they have been receiving.

Because I do believe that the farmers of this country will suffer loss if the Canadian trade agreement becomes a law I am in favor of the present farmers' free-list bill, believing that it will tend, to some extent at least, to compensate the farmer for his loss on account of the reciprocity agreement.

I have listened with much pleasure, as well as profit, to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, the leader of the majority in this House. I have heard him more than once declare himself to be in favor of a tariff for revenue—a low tariff, necessarily covering a great many articles, raw as well as manufactured.

My own views accord with those I have often had the pleasure of hearing him express. I have listened, also, to statements of their positions made by gentlemen of the minority who have declared themselves in favor of a tariff for protection, but a low tariff, and a tariff distributing its advantages among all classes of our people. It seems to me that the man who favors a low tariff for revenue and the man who favors a low tariff for protection are really working to the same end. Suppose you put a tax upon wheat of 10 cents a bushel and call it a revenue tax; suppose you put a tax upon wheat of 10 cents a bushel and call it a tariff for protection, you may indulge in all the academic discussion you please, but after all is said and done you have 10 cents a bushel on wheat. It is for revenue, for if wheat is imported there will be revenue. It is for protection, because to the extent of 10 cents a bushel it prohibits importations into our domestic markets, and to that extent lessens competition in those markets. Every vendor of a commodity knows that the market where there is the least competition is the best market for him.

I am in favor of low tariff duties, and do not deem it very material whether you call them revenue duties or protection duties. My own purpose in voting for such duties would be to obtain revenue for the country. But I believe that such duties imposed upon articles and products similar to those made or produced in our own country tend to a greater or less degree to give to our domestic makers or producers a better market, because of the exclusion of competition, than there would be if their competitors were permitted to enter our markets freely with their goods and products. Believing, then, that certain advantages to manufacturers and producers come from the imposition of tariff taxes, great or small, I think those advantages should be distributed as well as may be among the different classes and sections of this country. I think the farmers should have them just as well as the manufacturers. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the northern part of Minnesota we have a great tract of land rich in iron ore. Beneath its surface untold millions of mineral wealth are stored, and a great corporation employs an army of laborers to take that wealth from the ground and ship it to the manufacturing centers. For many years there was a tariff tax on iron ore of 40 cents a ton; it is now, under the Payne law, 15 cents a ton, I believe. The corporation, it is said, pays to the workingmen better wages than workingmen of the same class receive in other countries, and for that reason these workingmen live better and are able to adopt a higher standard of living than similar workingmen in other countries. If it be true, and for the purpose of argument let it be admitted, suppose another corporation should possess itself of another great tract of land in the southern portion of that State, a tract of land in which there is no hidden mineral wealth, and suppose it should employ a great army of workers to plow the land and to harrow and to seed and to plant it, to care for the crops raised upon it, and to harvest and thresh them and to take them away to the markets of the country, is there any reason why that corporation should not pay wages as large as the wages paid by the iron-ore corporation?

Should not the workingmen in the southern part of the State be permitted to enjoy the same high standard of living? And how can anyone, really believing that the tariff tax brings about improved conditions among the workingmen, favor the imposition of a tax in favor of the iron-ore corporation but not a tax in favor of the corporation cultivating the land for crops? [Applause.] It is said that corporations are necessary, but few claim that they are in themselves blessings. Suppose the agricultural corporation should be dissolved and the workingmen, instead of working the land for the corporation, should work the land for themselves; no one would claim that they are less deserving of all the advantages this country may furnish them through its legislation.

We hear a great deal about equal rights for all and equal laws for all. I think when laws give advantages the advantages should be distributed as widely as possible among as many classes of our people as may be. I opposed the Canadian trade agreement because it seems to me that it takes away from the American farmer advantages given other classes of our people under our tariff laws, and I favor the present farmers' free-list bill because it is an attempt to give to the farmer the same kind of a market in which to buy as he is obliged to enter when he has to sell. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Believing that a great part of the revenue of the country must come from the imposition of tariff duties, and that by taxing imported commodities like those manufactured or produced in this country an advantage is given to the American manufacturer or producer of such commodities in our markets; holding that these duties should be low, so that all competition may not be excluded from our markets, and that they should be widely distributed and should be imposed upon a great number of articles the like of which are produced in this country, so that the privileges and advantages resulting from the tariff charges should be as widely distributed among the people of this country as is possible, I am not inclined to favor additions to the free list. If it were not for the Canadian trade agreement, which, it seems to me, absolutely deprives one class of our citizens, and a very large and important class, too, of advantages which other classes obtain under our tariff laws, I would not deem it so necessary or advisable to enact the legislation now under consideration.

The views I have expressed accord with the declarations of the Democratic Party as I read them. Section 4 of the national Democratic platform for 1892 is as follows:

SEC. 4. Trade interchange on the basis of reciprocal advantages to the countries participating is a time-honored doctrine of the Democratic faith, but we denounce the sham reciprocity which juggles with the people's desire for enlarged foreign markets and freer exchanges by pretending to establish closer trade relations for a country whose articles of export are almost exclusively agricultural products with other countries that are also agricultural, while erecting a customhouse barrier of prohibitive tariff taxes against the richest countries of the world, that stand ready to take our entire surplus of products and to exchange therefor commodities which are necessaries and comforts of life among our own people.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

In 1892 it seems clear that the Democratic Party did not stand for closer trade relations between this country, whose articles of export are almost exclusively agricultural products, and other countries, like the Dominion of Canada, that are also agricultural, while tariff barriers were maintained against other countries that would take our surplus and exchange therefor the things necessary for the comforts of life among our own people. But now that these closer trade relations are likely to be made between this country and the Dominion of Canada, some of the barriers between this country and the other great nations of the world ought to be removed.

Again, in the national Democratic platform of 1896 we find this statement:

We hold that tariff duties should be levied for purposes of revenue, such duties to be so adjusted as to operate equally throughout the country and not discriminate between class or section, and that taxation should be limited by the needs of the Government, honestly and economically administered.

Here is a declaration for a revenue tariff. Nothing said about protection, but the privileges and advantages arising from a revenue tariff are recognized, and it is stated that the duties should be so adjusted as to offer equal advantages throughout the country; to do that best the duties must affect a great number of articles, because the greater the number of articles affected by it the better the tariff will operate equally among the people of this country who make and produce those articles. It is stated that the tariff duties ought not to discriminate between class or section; the more than ten millions of agriculturists ought not to be discriminated against; the section of this country occupied by our northern farmers ought not to be discriminated against.

Again, in the national Democratic platform of 1904, we read:

We favor a revision and a gradual reduction of the tariff by the friends of the masses and for the common weal, and not by the friends of its abuses, its extortions, and its discriminations, keeping in view the ultimate ends of "equality of burdens and equality of opportunities" and the constitutional purpose of raising a revenue by taxation, to wit, the support of the Federal Government in all its integrity and virility, but in simplicity.

Here the principle which I believe should underlie all tariff legislation is expressed in the seven words, "equality of burdens and equality of opportunities."

I have endeavored to present to the House my reasons for supporting this measure, although not inclined to extend the free list. The circumstances are exceptional, and because of their exceptional character, brought about by the passage of the Canadian trade agreement, I think it is the duty of Congress to enact into law the legislation now proposed.

This bill is called the farmers' free-list bill because it removes the tariff duties from a great many articles used by the agricultural classes. The measure should be considered from three viewpoints—first, from that of the farmer himself; second, from that of the manufacturer or producer of the things affected; and, third, from the viewpoint of the Federal Government. The Government is interested in the matter of revenue. Its expenditures in the past have been enormous, and, although we hope that economies will be inaugurated and the annual charges of the Nation may be materially decreased, nevertheless, the expenses of maintaining the Government will be very large, and an income great enough in amount to cover those expenses must be provided. No doubt, in line with what has heretofore been done, many amendments will be proposed adding other articles to the free list, in many cases, perhaps, articles with tariff rates that can not be defended, but so connected with other articles that it would be unwise to legislate concerning them independently of the schedules in which they are placed. There will be legislation proposed to revise the woolen schedule, and I think that it would be best to take up that schedule as a whole and not pick from it an item here and an item there and put them in the free list. I believe that legislation will be presented affecting the sugar schedule. It would be folly, it seems to me, to amend this free list to include raw sugar. The Government can not afford to decrease its annual income by $60,000,000, which would be the result of putting sugar upon the free list, unless some way is presented of obtaining that amount of income from another source. The Government will lose by admitting free the articles named in the measure now under consideration about $10,000,000 per annum. The exact amount, based upon the importations during the year ending June 30, 1910, is $10,028,989, but some portion of this amount will be lost through the Canadian trade agreement—that is to say, included in the amount I have stated are duties collected upon importations from Canada that will not, after the Canadian trade agreement goes into effect, give us revenue. This loss of revenue is, of course, considerable, but, in view of the great number of articles placed upon the free list, it is not large, and more than one-half of the loss will result from cotton bagging, sacks, burlap, and so forth, going upon the free list. Therefore, so far as the Government is concerned, although by the passage of this bill the revenue will be reduced, the reduction will be small when compared with the large number of articles that will be affected.

Now, as to the manufacturers and producers of these articles. Of course they are not enthusiastic about the removal of the tariff duties. As I have endeavored to point out the effect of a tariff duty upon articles like those produced in this country is to give to the domestic producer a better market, and this better market is furnished him by making it more difficult for his competitor to enter it. The fewer the vendors and the greater the number of buyers, the greater vendors' market it is. It has been the claim of protectionists that, although foreign competitors might find it more difficult to enter our domestic markets by reason of our tariff duties, the number of domestic producers would increase so that we would still have a competitive market. It happens that many of the producers of the articles mentioned in this free list have found a way to secure themselves against competition without the aid of a protective tariff, and because of that fact, the advantages they might derive from the tariff they have more than secured by means of combinations, trusts, and business agreements. For instance, agricultural implements are placed upon the free list, and the makers of agricultural implements will, of course, lose whatever advantage the present tariff duties give them. But they have successfully restricted competition in our home market. In 1880 there were in this country 1,943 agricultural-implement establishments, having a total capital of $62,109,668. Ten years later, in 1890, the total capital had increased to $145,313,997, but the number of establishments had decreased to 910. Ten years later, in 1900, the capital had increased to $157,707,951, but the number of establishments had decreased to 715; and in 1905 the capital had increased to $196,740,700, and the establishments had decreased to 648. It looks as though the makers of agricultural implements do not need the protective tariff in order to protect themselves from competition. Now, as to the producers of salt: In 1880 there were 276 salt establishments in this country, with a total capital of $8,548,640. In 1890 the capital had increased to over $13,000,000, and the establishments had decreased to 200. In 1900 the capital had increased to over $27,000,000, and the establishments had decreased to 159; and in 1905 the total capital employed was $25,586,282, and the total establishments numbered 146. So far as the American people are concerned, looking at this question from the viewpoint of certain of the manufacturers and producers of the articles included in this free list, they may, with much reason, claim that there is no necessity of giving to such manufacturers and producers the benefits of a tariff tax, since their own methods have proved so effective in securing much greater advantages in the way of destroying competition than could possibly be secured by the imposition of a moderate tariff tax.

And now from the viewpoint of the farmer. It is only necessary to name the articles included in this bill: Agricultural implements; cotton bagging, sacks, burlap, etc.; cotton ties; leather, boots, shoes, and saddlery; barbed and other fence wire, wire rods, strands, ropes, etc.; fresh and preserved meats; flour, cereals, and bread; lumber, laths, and shingles; sewing machines; and salt.

No one can look into the future and determine to an absolute certainty just what effect upon the selling price of this article or that article a tariff change will make. Those who say the Canadian trade agreement will not seriously hurt the farmer may be correct; I hope they are. Those who say the passage of the free list will not be of benefit to the farmer may be correct; I hope not. I fear, however, that the effect of the Canadian trade agreement will be bad for the American farmer, and I believe that this measure, if enacted into law, will do him some good. In any event I believe it is a sincere and honest attempt to modify the existing tariff law for the benefit of the agricultural interests of the United States. I think, in view of other enactments, they are entitled to the benefits, and all the benefits, that can possibly be derived from this legislation. Therefore I support it, and hope it will be enacted into law without material amendment. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield 30 minutes on this side, if agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, a democratic form of government is founded upon principles that in their exemplification are alike to all—the rich and poor—to all classes of men in every latitude and under all conditions, commercial and social. Do you inquire what the great Democratic Party stands for? I answer, first of all, "equal rights for all and special privileges to none." We believe alone in the Constitution as a rule of legislative action. Democracy is forever opposed to the theory, to that new exegesis of the Constitution that the Federal power may appropriate and exercise those powers originally conferred upon the States if the States choose not to exercise them. Democracy refuses to recognize the right of any correlative branch of the Government to encroach upon or usurp the functions of a coordinate branch. We would keep forever separate the functions prescribed in the Constitution, believing that in a strict adherence to that doctrine lies the safety of republican institutions. The Democratic doctrine of construction is that the individual citizen is the unit in the Federal structure, and that in his equality before the law in every particular is the Nation's safeguard. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Section 8 of the Constitution, among other things, prescribes that—> the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the defenses and general welfare of the United States.

Under the authority therein granted more battles have been waged than under any other provision of the Constitution. The greatest question that has always confronted the legislator is, and always will be, how to equitably and justly raise sufficient revenue to defray the expenses of the Government.

It is not, Mr. Chairman, a question of how much we shall raise, but in what manner we shall raise it and how it shall be disbursed. I believe in an economical administration, but that economy does not mean to impair the revenues necessary to develop our widely diversified natural resources. It means that however much we shall take out of the pockets of the people shall be wisely and directly expended. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Because of the taxing power under this section of the Constitution parties have sprung up advocating methods they believed would be remedial of the abuses and advance the interests of the people. The "general-welfare" clause of the Constitution has, in the latitude given to its construction, sufficient scope to admit all parties.

I want to pause here, Mr. Chairman, to say that this country is committed to the theory of raising money to defray the expenses of the Government by a duty on imports. We shall never get away from that theory. Our expenses are so enormous and constantly increasing that in all probability our retrenchment and reformation will be, not in raising much less revenue, but in more judiciously expending it. The Democratic Party has stood for a duty on imports from the very beginning of the Government. It believes in a tariff for revenue only, the only difference between Democrats being the manner in which the rate shall be laid and not in the theory under which it shall be laid. I have no consideration for the demagogue who charges that the Democratic Party is a free-trade party. Its whole history impeaches that declaration, and those charges are only made when reason and argument fail and always with a vicious motive. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Democratic Party has stood for a hundred years for a tariff for revenue only. It has seen parties and "isms" founded upon unscientific economic theories come and go, and it continues to advocate with popular favor those essential principles announced by its founder.

And I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who has just spoken, to the fact that the difference between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party in laying a rate of duty to produce revenue is that we of the Democratic Party lay the rate of duty with the express purpose of raising revenue, while the Republican Party lays a rate of duty for the purpose of protection, and the revenue is an incident to the levying and not its main and original purpose. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No tariff has been written by the Republican Party in 20 years in this House that did not have as its chief feature and its controlling purpose the protection of the manufacturer and not simply the raising of revenue as the principal purpose of that rate.

But, Mr. Chairman, what is the contention here? Are there out in the open advocates and sympathizers with the trusts and combinations in the discussion of this bill? Men who are in favor of confiscation of property under the guise of high protection? As a rule its advocates hide behind some pretext to accomplish by indirection that which they will not espouse in the open. It has taken 50 years to precipitate this contest. It has taken all these years to force the Republican Party into the open on the question of tariff taxation. It fled to its last ambush in the declaration made in its platform in the national convention in 1908; prior to that time we had driven it from one stand to another until there was no further escape. The theory of protection never was a wise and equitable philosophy. It always has been an expedient and an auxiliary to constitute the Government a party in private enterprises. You stood for it first as a war measure, then as a protector of infant industries, then as a protection to American labor, when you invited the foreigners to come to his shop door and bid for his job. You said the foreigner paid the tax, and for a while deceived the people. When you have been routed from all these positions you declared that you were in favor of a rate of protection equal to the difference in the cost of production plus a reasonable profit to the manufacturer.

Two great parties constructed upon widely different theories have prepared for this present contest. Our purpose is to put an end to the colossal fraud of high protection where only the beneficiaries of that tariff are the trusts and combinations for whom it was created. For 14 years the people have sought to free themselves from their unjust burdens. Platform promises made under the most solemn engagements were broken reeds. Driven from the last stand, the Republican Party took refuge in an ambush from which it thought it could not be routed. It declared as a new departure that it stood for the difference in cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to the manufacturer. That was an announcement to the country that the Republican Party had cast its lot with the manufacturer and against the rest of the country. There is not a man in the party but what knows that if the Payne-Aldrich bill had been constructed upon the old doctrine so long promulgated, viz, that the rate should be expressed in the difference between the cost at home and abroad, that we would not have collected a dollar of revenue from the steel schedule, the boot and shoe schedule, the cotton schedule, and but a small amount from the woolen schedule. No man, to my recollection, has risen on the floor of this House to defend his party in the monstrous proposition of levying a tax against all the people to make a private business profitable much less to fix the rate per cent to express a reasonable profit.

Mr. Chairman, the dollar I receive as a payment for labor honestly performed is my dollar, subject only to a lien first of the General Government to pay my just proportion of the expenses of the Government that protects me and my property, subject next to the law of my State to defray its necessary expenses, then to the demands of my county and municipality to meet my just share of their burdens. When I have done that, the balance of that dollar belongs to me, and the right to possess it is an inalienable right that no constitution can either give or take away from me; and yet, in violation of that right, you assume to take my money and that of every other citizen of the 90,000,000 to swell the profits of the Beef Trust, the Steel Trust, and the Rubber Trust, for which the prohibitive tariff of your party is directly responsible. You guarantee the manufacturer a reasonable profit. Why did you not guarantee the carpenter, who puts his money and his brains into his work in the construction of homes and business houses, a reasonable profit on his business? Why did you not guarantee the miner, a thousand feet under ground, putting his money and ability into his business, a reasonable profit?

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CLINE. I do.

Mr. BOWMAN. May I ask the gentleman if there is any better way to pay the miner a good wage than by having the industries of the country flourish?

Mr. CLINE. I assume that, according to the reports from the Bureau of Commerce and Labor, in Pennsylvania you do not pay the miner there any more than he earns.

Mr. BOWMAN. May I inform the gentleman that they pay a higher rate of wages than are paid to any other laborers performing the same amount of labor anywhere in the United States, according to the records?

Mr. CLINE. Not in Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOWMAN. In Pennsylvania they do, and I will read you from the records which I have in my desk in a moment.

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman can read them in his own time. I am simply stating the facts as brought out on the floor here the other day in a colloquy between the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and one of the gentleman's colleagues from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOWMAN. A question of veracity. It was stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and controverted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. CLINE. And the gentleman from North Carolina produced a voucher for the pay for 12 days' labor, and the amount was eight dollars and some cents. That is the kind of living wages they are paying to the miners in Pennsylvania. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOWMAN. I will produce to the gentleman a voucher for two weeks' work of over $100.

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman can do that some other time.

Mr. BOWMAN. And I will repeat that the labor in the anthracite and bituminous districts of Pennsylvania is paid as much or more for the labor performed than in any other place in the United States or in the world.

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman's declaration does not make it any stronger in the face of the bills issued by the companies at a good deal lower rate. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why did you not guarantee the farmer, with his savings of a lifetime invested in his business, with his ability, his integrity, a reasonable profit in his business? Why this deep solicitude for the manufacturer? You stand for an unjust and discriminatory system of taxation. You demand that some of us shall make enough out of our unprotected business, exposed to the competition of all the world, to take a part out of our profits and make on the manufacturer's business, who has no competition, a "reasonable" profit, whatever that may be. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] tauntingly asks in the different "saws" he plays on the phrase "Equal rights for all and special privileges to none," whether we believe the proposition to protect every large industrial division and leave the farmer exposed to competition is equal rights for all and special privileges to none. No; we do not. And yet the gentleman from Michigan and the party to which he belongs has steered the farmer up against every brace game that the Dingley law and the Payne Act is capable of housing.

A Member of this House that assisted in passing the late tariff act that exposes the products of the farm to the competition of the world's markets, that is assisting the Woolen Trust to destroy all competition and looks on complacently while that trust gathers a profit of 164 per cent on woolen blankets, ought to be modest in the use of the phrase "Equal rights for all and special privileges for none." The Republican that helped to frame up the present tariff act and forced the American producer and American farmer to reap his profits in world-wide competition and then forces him to submit to the exactions of the Meat Trust so that it reaps a profit of 16 to 32 per cent on its stock, watered and otherwise, ought to feel sensitive in the use of the expression "Equal rights for all and special privileges to none." The party that makes common merchandise of the farmer and consumer in a tariff bill like the Payne bill, under which the American Steel Trust, with a billion and a half of capital, two-thirds of which is water, can double its capital every four years, ought to deny itself the right to comment upon the language "Equal rights for all and special privileges to none." If there is a prohibitive protected industry in this country that has not had its inning on the farmer I would like to know what one it is. These generous tears shed for the farmer! It is urged that this is a sectional bill. What foundation is there for that criticism? The course of Republican legislation invites a comparison. What kind of treatment has the cotton farmer received at the hands of the Republican Party? Scourged with four long years of bloody war of his own choosing, the most terrific in all the history of the race, that swept the fair southland with its blackness, punished by the "black hand" of Republican reconstruction that withered his credit like a simoon from off the desert; yet in two generations out of the ashes of that fierce fire and out of the humiliation of defeat, she redeemed her credit and stands like a colossus astride this commercial continent. Rose by the very power of her might against prejudice and wicked legislation until now she grows the cotton and well nigh weaves the cloth to clothe the world. A million spindles are now making a melody of revolutions in the march of progress of this happy and chivalric people. They were entitled to your consideration. When they came to ask you to give her free bagging and free cotton ties at the time you made up the Payne bill they found, in the language of the street, that the Bagging Trust and the Steel Trust had "beat them to it," and the cotton farmer did not get it. He was only asking that you give him free bagging and ties for his cotton crop, as you had given his northern brother farmer free binding twine for his wheat crop. He comes back with his just claim, and we are going to give it to them in this bill.

But we as a party are charged by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] that we came into power by telling the people that they were paying too much for their living and that the price of living could be reduced without reducing the wages of the workingman. The gentleman was fair in many of his statements, but with that characteristic grapevine logic for which the New Englander is noted, he did not charge that the statements were misrepresentations. Mr. GARDNER is an agnostic; he neither affirmed nor denied. I confess we did say so to the consumer who was working for a fixed wage, that the price of living had advanced without lawful reasons and ought to be reduced. Now, I am going to prove it by Republican authority. I am going to take the manufacturers of woolen goods, agricultural implements, tobacco (including chewing, smoking, and snuff), wholesale meat slaughtering, upholstering material, four of the largest businesses in the country, and inquire what the results of combinations in these trades were upon the consumer, and consequently upon the wage earner?

I take the reports of 1905, the last available:

Woolen goods.

Years.	Number of factories.	Capital.	Employees.	Value of product.
1900	1,035	$124,386,262	68,893	$118,474,158
1905	792	140,303,488	72,747	142,196,658
	[1] 243	[2] 15,916,229	[2] 3,654	23,796,500

[1] Decrease. [2] Increase.

What does this show? That in the woolen business these concerns reduced the number of establishments in five years from 1,035 to 793, but increased their capital nearly sixteen millions, and with only an increase of 3,654 workmen increased the value of their output nearly $24,000,000.

Take upholstering materials, and a still greater showing is made. I give the table as I did for woolen goods:

Upholstering materials.

Years.	Number of factories.	Capital.	Employees.	Value of product.
1900	270	$7,593,298	5,096	$10,048,164
1905	236	9,293,120	4,712	12,677,519
	[1] 34	1,699,822	[1] 386	2,629,355

[1] Decrease.

A reduction of 34 establishments, a reduction of 386 employees, but an increase of watered capital of nearly two millions and an increase in value of products of 2,629,336. Why have not we a right to charge that these combinations through the grace of the Republican Party were fleecing the ultimate consumer?

Take tobacco, including chewing, smoking, and snuff, and give this trust the same treatment:

Tobacco, including chewing, smoking, and snuff.

Years.	Number of factories.	Capital.	Employees.	Value of product.
1900	437	$43,856,370	29,161	$103,754,362
1905	433	178,847,556	23,990	116,767,630
	[1] 4	134,990,986	[1] 5,171	13,013,268

[1] Decrease.

A reduction of 4 establishments, a reduction of 5,171 employees, but an increase of $134,990,986 in watered capital and an increase of more than thirteen millions in value of the output.

Let me take the wholesale slaughtering houses and apply the same test:

Wholesale slaughtering houses.

Years.	Number of establishments.	Capital.	Employees.	Value of output.
1900	557	$173,866,377	64,681	$697,056,055
1905	559	219,818,627	69,593	801,757,137
	2	45,952,250	4,912	104,701,072

With the addition of only 5,000 employees on an increased capital of forty-six millions the trust increased their value of products one hundred and five millions.

Take the American Harvester Trust:

Years.	Number of establishments.	Capital.	Employees.	Value of output.
1900	715	$157,708,951	46,582	$101,207,428
1905	648	196,740,749	47,394	112,007,344
	[1] 67	[2] 39,032,749	[2] 812	[2] 10,799,916

[1] Decrease. [2] Increase.

I have a right to say to the consumer that when you amalgamate these great concerns into one combination, decrease the number of employees, increase the stock with all the water it will carry, increase the value of their output by the millions, we correctly charged that, under your Republican theory of government that has bred this nest of commercial conscripts which you confess you are unable to exterminate, they do increase the cost of living to the millions of consumers. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You say that to take off the tariff will not affect these criminal combinations or reduce the price of their commodities. Well, I will tell you what we can do and what we are going to do—we are going to dissolve the copartnership between them and this Government that you have created and let the trusts violate the law on their own responsibility. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Is that not worth while trying? Is this country so far in the vicelike grip of these corporations that there is no relief from them? You confessed to the people your inability to control the situation, and the people have commissioned the Democratic Party to try it. I know you say you have prosecuted the Beef Trust, and a greater farce comedy was never enacted by any court of justice. These are the legitimate fruits of a prohibitive protective theory. Protection is an unjust civic principle, because its fullest development depends upon discriminating between citizens of a common country. Any system of economics or any element entering into such a system that reaches its fullest development in the civil state by prejudicing the interests and rights of one class of citizens in favor of another class is an imperfect and unjust system. Protection, in its essence, is socialism, because it implies a benefit to one class of citizens by taxing another class to produce the benefit for which the citizen receiving the benefit gives no compensation. The greater the scope you give to a protective tariff the wider the injustice and the more exclusive it becomes with its benefits. You gentlemen across the aisle stand for and defend a character of government under this iniquitous theory of absolute protection that permits these vast unlimited capitalized combinations to crush out small competition in trade as remorselessly and with as much apparent satisfaction as a wild beast crushes and devours its prey. You permit and encourage, as a part of your system, these immense concerns to scatter ruin and disaster in their pathway when honest citizenship attempts to compete, unless they capitulate and yield to their demands.

No Republican in this House has risen and denounced the covert threat of these great organizations to create a national stress in business if the Democratic Party seeks to enact legislation touching their interests. No Republican has condemned the cowardly act of the American Steel Co. in the Birmingham district in Alabama turning hundreds of men out of employment. The act could have had but one purpose, and that was to terrorize and bulldoze the Democratic Party into a surrender of its purpose to revise the steel schedule. Your attitude toward and sympathy with this concern and those of its kind may be inferred by the country from your conduct.

What is the duty that the Democratic Party owes the country? In the political clearing house the Republican Party has been discounted and charged off so far as the tariff is concerned. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The people issued a new proclamation in 1910, and they demand that patriotism shall be above party and party alignment, and that the good of all the people shall be first in the mind of the citizen. Standpatism must learn that a blind and fatuous idolatry of a party name is not a license to usurp the rights of the people and destroy personal liberty of trade. The time has come when the demagogue can not fan into sectional hate and prejudice for his own selfish ends the firing on Fort Sumter. A new alignment of the electorate of this people is at hand, and it is not along sectional lines. The evangel that shall call the people in the future will be the evangel of equity and justice. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to make an observation or two on a new theory of economics proposed in this House by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. In a pessimistic speech on the Canadian reciprocity that gentleman announced a doctrine so at variance with the history of the whole Anglo-Saxon race that it ought not to go unchallenged—a doctrine that would turn backward the wheels of industrial and social progress of this Republic; a doctrine shocking to a man who believes and wants to know that his country is a world power in the opening dawn of this twentieth century. I do not desire to misquote him, so I read from the RECORD, beginning at the closing paragraph on page 290:

INDEPENDENCE OF THE FARM HOME AND ITS RELATION TO MANUFACTURES.

A century ago the farm home was more preeminently the unit of civilization than to-day. It was almost independent within itself. The father and sons tilled the fields, cared for the cattle, and especially the sheep, while the mother and daughters kept the house and spun and wove the clothing. The daughters were the spinsters, and to this day an unmarried woman, whether she dwell in humble cottage or princely castle, is a spinster—living monument of the old independence of the farm home. In process of time the factory has taken over the family industries, as well as most of the village trades. The farmer and his family devote themselves to the simpler products, the raw materials; and after their own food supply is secure, must sell enough surplus to pay for the manufactured goods, professional services, and so forth, which are needed to satisfy their wants and tastes. It is obvious that if all in the world were farmers, there would be no people to buy the surplus. It is evident, then, that there must be other people, not engaged in farming, to buy and consume this surplus of the farmer, else he will be unable to purchase manufactured articles. It seems most consistent with reason that these other people who are to purchase the farmer's surplus should be his own neighbors, or, at least, of his own Nation or region, and especially those of his neighbors who are engaged in manufacturing the very articles which he needs to buy. And it is evident that both farmers and artisans will be most prosperous and the happiest when there are enough farmers to take the artisan's goods at a fair price, and enough artisans, professional men, and so forth, to take the farmer's surplus at a fair price.

EQUILIBRIUM BETWEEN AGRICULTURE AND MANUFACTURES.

This brings us to the question of proportion, or equilibrium, of manufactured and agricultural products. And it is right here on this point that the whole situation likely to be created by this reciprocity treaty develops itself. Our manufactures, syndicated as they are by trusts and associations, are easily controllable and do not tend to run into an overproduction, disastrous to profits on capital or the wages of labor. But the farms, being an aggregation of homes, disorganized, and each impelled by its own necessities, tend constantly to overproduce. And this overproduction becomes disastrous unless the limitation of acreage possible to be cultivated intervenes to prevent. Therefore the element of prime importance in this discussion is the relation of acreage to the capacity of the home market furnished by the nonagricultural classes.

And this is the definition of equilibrium, the new Utopian philosophy of economics. Equilibrium means stagnation, commercial paralysis. It means the destruction of commercial activity. The only country believing in and practicing the theory of equilibrium between agriculture and mechanical production is China, and she has followed it for 40 centuries. It means a country without a commerce and without the greatest possible civilization, for commerce is the mightiest civilizing power in the world. The gentleman yearns for the independence of the "homespun and flax-wheel period," the time when the farmer must produce only what surplus his neighbor can consume and the manufacturer only what his farmer friend can take. Those were the times when the farmer took his surplus wheat or pork 50 miles to market and slept under his wagon on the road both coming and going. Those were the days of puncheon floors and greased paper window lights. Great God! do we want that kind of independence and equilibrium? Under this new theory there is an overproduction in agriculture if the local manufacturer can not use it, and the production ought to be limited, so he says, when in the markets of the world are the hungry millions asking for bread. There can be no overproduction when there are hungry mouths to feed. That is a narrow and selfish policy that shuts the doors of the graneries of the Egypt of this continent in the face of the world when men are crying for bread. Last year we exported 1,800 millions of agricultural and mechanical products, a very large portion of it coming from the farm direct to the coast and much of it being the raw material for the manufacturer. As against this theory of equanimity that would take our foreign trade from the ocean, let me say that if the farmer did not export his products, stimulate our manufactures, and thereby induce imports this country would go into the hands of a receiver under the present system of collecting revenue. I come from the greatest agricultural section in this country. We raise more corn in a township in Indiana than they raise in the entire State of Maine. Indiana took the sweepstakes in the world's contest, not only for the best and most perfect corn, but for the greatest production to the single acre.

The 12 upper Mississippi Valley States produce six-tenths of all the agricultural products of the United States. We raise our share of the 3,000,000,000 bushels of corn in the United States and we want a market for it. The gentleman says they have abandoned their farms in Maine and gone into the truck business, and we must not raise any more corn than we can sell to "our neighbors or to our Nation, or in this region." If this equilibrium teeter board philosophy is to be adopted, lock up the Panama Canal, through which we were to have opened up our trade with the South American Republics. If this policy is to rule, take down the customhouses and abandon the seas. If this political heresy is to obtain, tell the world we have no use for the open door to the trade of China and Japan. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Take out the maximum and minimum tariff section of the Payne bill and abandon your colonial policy in which you have embarked. Such a policy would stifle and destroy our commerce, and as an economic theory, in its fullest analysis, has no more stability than a cob house in a Kansas cyclone. My friend says that his theory has not been heard from among English-speaking races since the time of the Napoleonic wars. It is to be hoped that it will not be heard from for another century. To brace up this propaganda its author says that the English statesmen recommend a tariff on agriculture. Who are the English statesmen? They are the English high-tariff leagues, headed by Sir Joseph Chamberlain. This was in a report on social economics, so I am informed, from which this gentleman quoted, and Mr. Chamberlain undertook to change the current of English doctrine that had prevailed for a century. He saw our cutlery in Sheffield. He saw shoes made in this country on the counters of English shopkeepers. He saw our cotton cloth on the shelves of English merchants. He knew the English colonies that England had scattered ocean wide in both hemispheres were buying more goods made by us than from the mother country. He tried to obstruct our trade, just as the gentleman from Maine is trying to do now, by erecting a wall that we could not get over. Why should England lay an import duty on the bread that she must buy abroad—lay a tax on the bread that goes into the children's mouths? A suicidal policy. Let me remind the gentleman who advances the new dogma that in all the history of the race no nation ever attained prominence without a great export trade. Our trade abroad is second only to that of the British Empire, that carries to every harbor on the globe a part of two and one-half billions of trade. We reached the enormous export trade last year of $1,800,000,000. We gained this last February—February, 1911—over February, 1910, $51,387,775; and if we shall continue to make that gain for the entire year we shall gain more than $600,000,000, and we shall sell to the nations of the world from the farm and factories more than $2,400,000,000 worth. And that, too, after a Democratic Congress was elected for the express purpose of revising our fiscal policy.

I represent a district through which more than 40 per cent of all transcontinental roads pass. Last year they carried from the interior of this country more than 250,000,000 tons of freight produced in the shops and on the farms. The spreading farms of agricultural richness in northern Indiana, unsurpassed in fertility and grandeur, constitute the home of a great, industrious, and happy people. Luxury and magnificence is theirs through their own toil. Her cities are scattered closely along more than 130 miles of territory, out of the chimneys of whose factories the belching smoke clouds the "sky by day, and by night her furnace fires light up the heavens like the bonfires of welcome to the returning victor of a Roman conquest." Yet all this thing the "man from Maine" would change under the theory of equilibrium to save the truck patches around Portland. [Laughter and applause.] Such a policy would shrink the value of every acre of corn land and every acre of cotton land in the United States. Consider but for a moment the 11 cotton States in the South that produce the cotton of the world limiting its growth and commerce to conform to the theory of equilibrium. Think of the 12 upper Mississippi Valley States that produce, as I said before, six-tenths of all our products—that constitute the meat and bread basket of the continent halting in their mighty conquest for trade for the evolution of the theory of equilibrium! No Anglo-Saxon community, building for itself and its country ever indorsed or practiced such economic heresy. Such a teaching strikes at the very vitals of our agricultural supremacy; and yet this sophistry was applauded by the minority contingent as a wise exhibition of statesmanship.

Let me say to the farmer who is inclined to fear the effect of the reciprocity bill that of the eighteen hundred millions of export trade we had last year more than twelve hundred millions of it was foodstuffs from your farms. What would you do with that vast amount if you did not have a foreign market in which to sell it? Why not open up trade relations with 9,000,000 of new customers just across the line for a part of this trade instead of carrying all of it over seas? Of what value is your export beef, pork, and mutton—the finished products of your farms—if you have no market for it?

Give us a broad, liberal, unrestricted market where the genius, thrift, and skill of the American citizen can enter the race for supremacy in trade without a hobble or handicap. Competition with Canada! We have developed 92,000,000 of population in less time than Canada has developed a population of 8,000,000. We have accumulated one hundred and thirty billions of capital while Canada has accumulated ten billions. Every additional market that comes to this 92,000,000 of people enlarges their opportunities for trade. It is said that we are offering this free list as a salve to the wounds we have inflicted upon the farmer. Let me show you how seriously the farmer is being wounded under the present trade agreements between Canada and ourselves, which no man denies are against him. I call your attention to the increase of trade with Canada in the month of February, 1911, just passed with that of February, 1910—a comparison for just one single month. We sold to Canada in February, 1910, and in February, 1911, as follows:

	February, 1910.	February, 1911.
Potatoes.....bushels..	32,301	[1] 189,181
Lumber.....feet..	26,621	220,407
Tobacco.....pounds..	1,046,435	2,541,034
Paper, books, etc.....	$249,932	$292,305
Illuminating oil.....gallons..	524,509	1,511,192
Hams and shoulders.....	$114,644	$152,792
Boots and shoes.....pairs..	91,295	101,276
Electrical machinery.....	$29,561	$48,888
Iron and steel.....	$3,768,202	$5,142,535
Electrical appliances.....	$137,536	$208,358
Cotton cloth.....yards..	814,106	865,945
Unmanufactured cotton.....pounds..	7,401,523	9,182,549
Wheat.....bushels..	2,882	11,516
Corn.....	$689,930	$1,310,004
Agricultural implements.....	$264,994	$437,363

[1] In 8 months ending February, 1911, 1,717,253 bushels.

Do these figures look like calamity to our trade with Canada? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The men who opposed the reciprocity pact are opposing the free-list bill, not so much on the theory that it will injure any class of citizens, but because it is a blow at the exclusiveness of high protection. Let me have a word on the wheat question. Wheat is one of the greatest cereal products of the United States. We produce more wheat than any other country in the world. Then, in the order of their production, come Russia, France, India, Austria-Hungary, and Canada. Liverpool is the world's market for the surplus of all these countries, and it fixes the price of that surplus brought there, and that price governs the price of what we consume at home. The price of wheat in New York, Paris, Moscow, Vienna, and Bombay, for their respective countries, under normal conditions is the Liverpool price, less the cost of transportation, insurance, brokerage, and other proper charges.

Every man against the reciprocity agreement denied that proposition, and he did it in the face of every respectable authority and in the face of the actual fact. They were compelled to deny it, because to admit that the Liverpool market fixed the price, both in our market and Canada, meant the abandonment of the argument. For the purpose of securing the most reliable information on this point, yesterday I telegraphed to the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce and the Chicago Chamber of Commerce this inquiry: "What is the cash price of wheat to-day in your market and on what basis is this price fixed." I have received answers to these telegrams, and they are as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 26, 1911.

Hon. CYRUS CLINE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

One and two red, 91. Liverpool and Continental markets prominent factors in establishing values, but do not control absolutely.

J. C. F. MERRILL, President.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

You are applauding a little too quick over there; wait until you get another one:

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, April 26, 1911.

CYRUS CLINE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

One red winter 90 cents on basis Liverpool; our 1 northern, 94. All our prices generally based on Liverpool markets. Those prices are in store Fort William.

N. BAWLF.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me submit a proposition that a boy in the first year of his high school ought to have no difficulty with. Granted that both the United States and Canada are exporters of wheat and eliminate the question as to how the price is fixed here, except that the price in the world's market is governed by world-wide demand and supply. If Canada has two hundred millions of wheat for export and refuses to sell in the Liverpool market, and concludes to dump her surplus in our market, then is it not true that the world's supply would be that much short and the price in Liverpool go up corresponding to that shortage? What difference could it make, then, whether we market this surplus or whether Canada markets it, except so far as the facilities for shipping in one country or the other may affect its local market? A singular feature in this contest is presented when the farmers in Canada are passing resolutions against the adoption of the reciprocity agreement for fear that the cheap wheat from the States will ruin their market, and the American farmers are passing the same kind of resolutions for fear that the cheap wheat from Canada will destroy their market.

I call your attention to the articles of the free list in this bill and the enormous value of the product of each of them for a single year:

Salt	$9,540,824
Agricultural implements	112,707,544
Bagging for cotton, sacks, and burlaps	26,031,644
Cotton ties, hoops, and band iron	12,639,953
Leather, boots and shoes, harness and saddlery	493,005,263
Barbed and other fence wire	113,027,205
Fresh and preserved meats	801,757,137
Flour and grits, cereals, and bread	713,033,395
Lumber, laths, and shingles	580,022,690
Sewing machines and parts	20,869,547
Total	2,881,945,002

The rates of duty on these articles under the Payne-Aldrich bill are as follows:

Salt, 11 cents per 100.

Agricultural impements, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Bagging for cotton, sacks, and burlaps, 0.6 cent per square yard.

Cotton ties, hoops, and band iron, 0.3 cent per pound.

Leather, boots and shoes, harness and saddlery, 10 per cent ad valorem and up.

Barbed and other wire fencing, ¼ cent per pound.

Fresh and preserved meats, 1½ cents per pound.

Bacon and ham, 4 cents per pound.

Flour, grits, cereals, and baked bread, 25 per cent ad valorem and up.

Lumber, $1.25 per thousand feet.

Laths, 20 cents per thousand pieces.

Shingles, 50 cents per thousand pieces.

Sewing machines and parts thereof, 45 per cent ad valorem.

The rates of duty on these products have been high enough to keep out all importations, practically, and consequently give to the producers power to fix the prices in a market where there is no competition. The products of these few industries alone amount to the enormous sum of three thousand millions of dollars in a single year, and every one of these articles enters into the daily use of the farmer and ultimate consumer. There is not an article in this list but what the manufacturer of it has been able to enter into combination to advance the price of the article. The truth of that statement is confirmed by the fact that these same organizations sell the same goods cheaper abroad than they sell them to the farmer at the very door of the manufacturing concerns, and no one denies it who is correctly informed. We propose to remove the prohibitive rate on these goods and give the farmer competition for his money or compel these combinations to sell as cheap to the farmer as they do to the foreigner.

What does it cost the Government to do this? We lose in revenue on importations that have gotten over the tariff wall with a few goods in these lines, behind which these combinations have been concealed, less, probably, than $10,000,000, but if we can reduce the price through competition, by putting these productions on the free list, by even 10 per cent of the duty now levied under existing law, we can save the farmers and consumers of this country $300,000,000 a year. Is there a man representing an agricultural district that dares to withhold with his vote this benefit from the farmers in his district? The inquiry has been made why we did not amend the reciprocity measure by adding the free list as a separate section, if we were not playing politics. We did not for two reasons: We proposed to save the reciprocity measure by sending it to the Senate as it had been agreed upon by those who negotiated it, so as to insure its passage; and, secondly, we proposed to hand this free list up to you stripped of all conditions and compel you to elect whether you would stand by the farmer and the great consuming class or whether you were against them and with these great commercial combinations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We did not propose to combine these bills and give you a chance to vote against both of them and protect these combinations under the plea that we wanted to give the farmer Canadian competition in his wheat market for which you would not stand. The farmers of this country are going to have a record made, so that they may know where the men who represent them and volubly profess their friendship really stand. We propose to smoke you out and make you stand up and be counted.

If you are for reciprocity and the free list, you ought to want these measures presented in such a way that both will pass. If you are against either of these measures, it does not come within your province to criticize the manner in which they are presented. I have no complaint to make against manufacturers or corporations that obey the law and do not violate it by combining in restraint of trade. This is a progressive age, and I recognize the benefits that flow to all classes of citizens through a thorough system in business methods. Honest capital and honest corporate interests that obey the law in the conduct of their business have nothing to fear from the Democratic Party. We are their friends and want to protect their business by giving to them all the encouragement that legislation can provide, if such legislation creates no favoritism. We know and understand that the small business interests of the country are as tired of commercial domination as the common people are. We know that they are with the Democratic Party. Their rights shall not be prejudiced by any unfair legislation.

The United States, more than any other nation, is self-supporting. The very vastness of her territorial expanse, the multiplicity of her industries, the interdependence of the millions engaged in them but serve to exaggerate the demand that there shall be fair and equal legislative treatment to all. The sovereignty of the Nation rests with the people; they can not long suffer injustice and wrong that legislation can correct, if they but will it so. The great problem of the age is to keep in steady and equal march all the heterogeneous forces that make for our national life. Commercial favoritism by governmental agency must cease.

The great Democratic Party is the sure refuge of every humble citizen as well as the possessor of wealth. The Anglo-Saxon race has struggled for personal liberty for a thousand years, and at last finds its surest type a nation on "the crown of all the continents of the world" and the conservator of the personal liberty of every race. The greatest duty God ever gave to man is a patriotic preservation of that liberty. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in yielding me liberal time on this debate from the fact that while I agree with my Republican colleagues as to the principle of protection, and as to the policy that ought to control in the application of that principle to all American industries, yet I can not agree with many of them, probably not the majority of them, as to what ought to be the attitude of Members of Congress representing agricultural States toward this particular measure.

Now that a minority of high-protection Republicans have joined with the majority of free-trade Democrats to place all agricultural products on the free list so far as our great competitor to the north, Canada, is concerned, it is not an easy matter for a Republican who believes implicitly in scientific protection as defined in the Chicago national platform of 1908, to keep his bearings at all times in this Chamber. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I certainly shall not oppose the course of the Democracy in this bill to administer some free-trade medicine to the high-tariff manufacturer protectionists on this side of the Chamber, and the probability is that when the time comes for me to cast a vote on this measure the vote will be in accordance with that suggestion.

I trust I shall make it plain before I shall have consumed the hour yielded to me that if, perchance, I should record a vote in favor of this measure it will not be because I believe it will bring any great direct benefits to the farming population of the United States, but rather that it may bring some confusion, which I think it due, to the high protectionists who are interpreting the policy of protection to mean a high protection upon the articles manufactured in their districts and no protection upon the rest of the industries of the country. A man who stands on the Chicago platform and believes that for the first time in history a scientific definition has been evolved that ought to control the application of the principle of protection to all American industries is, since the passage of the so-called Canadian reciprocity agreement and the introduction of this pending legislation, figuratively speaking, between the devil and the deep sea. It is more than likely that I shall conclude between these alternatives, neither of which I take easily to, by taking a plunge temporarily into the Democratic deep sea of free trade. But in doing so it will not be because I enjoy the cold bath by any means, but that I may take down with us as we are going down the second time some high protectionist Republicans who have forgotten the principles that ought to be observed in applying protection to American industries.

A man was very much disturbed and broken of his sleep by the perpetual howling of a dog under his window outside. His wrath finally reached a pitch where he could stand it no longer. He jumped from his bed and, without making a proper toilet for the cold winter night, rushed out and succeeded in grabbing the dog. "There," he said, "you brute; I will hold you here until you freeze to death." He in a measure succeeded, but he got extremely cold himself. [Laughter.] I had a client—a farmer—whose crop was destroyed by a hailstorm. I happened to be driving down in his neighborhood shortly thereafter and was very much shocked by the evidence of devastation upon all sides. He was a plain German, with clear intellectual processes, but with imperfect English. In describing one of his predicaments, where he had tried to reach the barn from the house in the midst of the storm, he said: "A hailstone the size of my fist struck me on the head and knocked me sensible."

Mr. Chairman, I think some Massachusetts Foss Republicans who have come to the conclusion that protection is made for them alone and not for the great Northwest and the farming industry, wherever it is being carried on, would be benefited by a hailstorm. [Laughter and applause.] It is an heroic case, requiring heroic remedies. I have great hopes that a cold-water plunge, a hard frost, and a hailstorm may bring some of our Republican brethren to their senses.

You may say that retaliation is not a high order of statesmanship. It is sometimes the only effectual statesmanship. The boot and shoe interests and the leather interests were extremely clamorous for free hides. They got free hides in the Payne bill, but the prices of boots and shoes and leather products are maintained at the old standards. The same interests are now exceedingly anxious to try the free-trade experiment on the balance of the products of the farm. My idea is that it will be instructive to try the free-trade experiment on boots and shoes and on some other manufactured articles at the same time. This will hasten our return to Republican sanity and fair play.

It was particularly unfortunate, from a Republican standpoint—and I will be frank in all I have to say—that following the splendid progress that had been made in the enunciation of the scientific basis for the application of protection in the Chicago platform, following the legislation that the Republicans were seeking against Democratic opposition to place permanently on the statute books in the form of a law which would aid in the carrying out of that application to all industries by the creation of a permanent Tariff Board, which in an impartial way would gather the facts as to all American industries and the difference in the cost of production of all commodities here and abroad—I say it was, to say the least, unfortunate from the standpoint of the country and certainly from the standpoint of Republicanism—that in the very initiative of the application of that policy we should be confronted with a bill such as the so-called Canadian reciprocity bill, which proposed, under whip and spur, to immediately pass legislation seriously affecting the basis of our greatest industry, agriculture, without a report from our Tariff Board as to the difference in cost of production in the two countries of the articles to be affected by this important and far-reaching agreement.

We were expected to legislate upon that agreement without investigation, and the suggestion was made that as to any other schedules—the woolen or the cotton or the manufacturing schedules generally—it would be in good form if we would wait until the facts could be collected by the Tariff Board.

It was entertaining this afternoon to hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] plead for delay in the consideration of the bill now pending until the Tariff Board could investigate the facts affecting the cost of production of jute, hemp, and certain iron and steel products that this bill would put on the free list. His counsel against destroying or crippling any American industry without knowledge of the facts was touching and pathetic. But he and some other Republicans from manufacturing districts, equally inconsistent, when the Canadian bill first passed the House, were not restrained in their zeal to put farm products on the free list by the consideration that the Tariff Board had made no report on the facts. No information upon this great question was furnished us by the so-called agents who negotiated this remarkable agreement on behalf of the United States, and none was offered from our Tariff Board. Between the first and second passage of the bill through the House a report of the Tariff Board was obtained. This was brought forth by a corkscrew process in the form of a resolution from the Senate of the United States asking for this information. And when it was placed before this Congress for its consideration it appeared that there was a great difference in the cost of the production of agricultural products in Canada and in the United States amounting to at least 20 per cent in favor of lower cost of production in Canada than in this country.

It is indeed unfortunate that a piece of legislation resulting so completely in class and sectional advantage should have been forced through this body almost without consideration. That it is simply class legislation, if not apparent to every Member of this body, will become so by the merest perusal of the vote on both sides of this Chamber upon the question. It is a clear case of the city dweller against the farmer, the city districts against the country districts. Take our neighboring State of Minnesota, for example. Nine high-minded Members represent the constituencies of Minnesota upon this floor. Three of them hail from city districts—Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth. Six of them come from the districts over the balance of the State. The three from the city districts, representing the sentiment, as they believe, of the people in those districts, are all recorded in favor of the reciprocity agreement. The six from the country are all against it. One of them is a Democrat, is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and while this involves partisan politics, he is not able to blind his eyes to the fact that this is a sectional measure. It is a controversy between country life and city life, and this House has gone on record as supporting the city side of that proposition at a time in our history when, if there ought to be one American policy more prominent than another on both sides of this Chamber, which ought to be espoused independent of politics, it is some well-conceived policy that will check the mad rush of population from the country to the cities.

Now, my friends, I see no reasonable expectation that there will be any modification of this Canadian pact unless it be modified before it becomes a law. Once fixed, in my opinion, it will have to remain until it is repealed. It is perfectly evident that the people of the north, the Canadians, have obtained in this agreement all that they desire in the adjustment of trade relations between the two countries. Perhaps your attention has already been called to an extract from the speech of the Hon. John Charlton made in the Canadian Parliament in 1903, in which, referring to the great prosperity of the United States and the great disadvantage of Canada in business relations between the two countries, he spoke as follows:

> The American policy has been applied not only to us but to all the world. The object of the United States has been to sell all that it possibly could of the products of its soil and its mills and its workshops and to buy just as little as it could from other countries, and thus having as much of the balance of trade in its own favor as possible. The result has been that the balance of trade in favor of the United States last year amounted to $600,000,000 against the whole world—$71,000,000 against Canada. That is a good thing for the United States and will be her policy as long as the rest of the whole world will permit her to do it, but it is not a good thing for us.

He goes on to say:

Something must be done to change the trade relations that exist between the United States and Canada. Free trade in natural products would afford a reasonable adjustment. Nothing short of this will do it, and this condition of free trade of natural products must be granted by the United States without a solitary concession from Canada further than it has already made. We can not afford any more.

The present trade agreement gives to Canada precisely what is disclosed by that statement as being desired by Canada, and certainly no reasonable man can expect at any time to get more favorable concessions from Canada than in this agreement unless obtained here and now before this legislation is concluded by the two Houses of Congress.

This campaign in favor of a new trade policy with Canada, aside from such influence as may have been brought into the campaign in the interest of the great newspapers of the country who were not satisfied with what they were obtaining in the way of print-paper concessions in the Payne-Aldrich Act, has been brought about and promoted in large part, and almost entirely, upon the outcry against the high cost of living. We might make the same complaint against the high cost of dying as we do against the high cost of living.

We are living in times of great prosperity. High prices always prevail in eras of prosperity. Eras of low prices have always been eras of hard times, and instead of adopting the policy of bringing down the general prosperity to a lower level, the course of statesmanship would have been to adopt a policy that would lift the scale of wages of the wage earner and of men on fixed salaries, up to a level of the great era of prosperity in which we are living.

We, following the Democratic leadership, have started upon the other course, the killing of the goose that lays the golden eggs, instead of a more equitable distribution of the eggs.

There can be no doubt that the agreement with Canada, if adopted in its present form, will work some degree of injury to the great agricultural interests of the country. To what extent and with what measure of disaster it might apply we can only guess. I think it would be difficult to find any subject upon which so much sophistry has been spent as upon the effort by the friends of this pact to show that, in the first place, the American farmer will not have to take any lower prices for his commodities, but that the American consumer would be benefited as the result.

The truth is, if we can safely anticipate the truth, that the very reverse of that is likely to happen under the bill in its present form. The American farmer will be compelled to take less for his commodities; but it is, indeed, extremely doubtful whether any portion of that reduction will filter through for the benefit of the ultimate consumer. As long as the middlemen in this country are organized to appropriate whatever additional advantage may arise from a lower purchase price the consumer is not likely to reap the benefits.

In the case of the reduction recently of the rates in the wood-pulp schedule in the Payne bill the Paper Trust simply appropriated the reduction. When we placed a reduction of practically $2.75 per ton on wood pulp in the Payne-Aldrich bill, it was anticipated it would bring about a reduction in the price of print paper in this country. My information is that exactly the reverse has been the case, and the price of print paper to the consumers of that product is higher to-day than it was when the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed.

Mr. KAHN. Two dollars and twenty-five cents.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. My understanding is that the final effect of it is $2.75; but that is unimportant.

But it is said, and by so able a gentleman as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL], that the price of wheat in this country is fixed by Liverpool and not by the competition in this country. I questioned the gentleman from Massachusetts on that subject when he was on the floor. Some of you may remember that I asked him, if the price of wheat is fixed, not in the United States but in Liverpool, whether the passage of this Canadian reciprocity agreement would affect the price of wheat in this country; and his reply was:

When I say the price of wheat is fixed in Liverpool, of course that is only popularly correct.

Whatever that may mean.

The price of wheat is fixed,
Said he,
Compared with the world's demand and the world's supply.

What is the fact about this price of wheat in Liverpool? Is it absolutely necessary that when we approach the discussion of a great economic question we must abandon our common sense and our usual methods of reasoning? The United States produces 700,000,000 bushels of wheat every year. It consumes 600,000,000 bushels, shipping about 100,000,000 bushels to other countries. The price of wheat in Liverpool may have a very marked effect upon the price of that 100,000,000 bushels that must be sold outside of the United States, but the price of the 600,000,000 bushels that must be consumed in the United States will depend upon the competition that the American market has to supply the 600,000,000 bushels. If Liverpool could buy wheat and import it into the United States, she might become a competitor in this market and have something to say as to what would be the price of that 600,000,000 bushels.

But as long as we have an export the price of what we export will necessarily be controlled very much by the export market; and if you look through the Liverpool, Winnipeg, and Minneapolis market reports upon wheat from time to time you will find that it is very rare indeed that the price of wheat in Liverpool is sufficiently higher than the price of the northern grade of spring wheat in the United States to permit of exportation at all. It requires a difference of price in favor of Liverpool of at least 15 cents before the American farmer can get his No. 1 hard wheat into the Liverpool market, and in these tables, prepared by our own Tariff Board, I find that in the entire year 1910 there was not a month, according to the official figures here given, when the difference in price between the United States and Liverpool upon that grade of wheat was such as to justify its exportation at all. During the one month of July, 1910, the price of wheat of that grade was actually higher in the United States than in Liverpool.

That old saw about the price of wheat being fixed in Liverpool, and not in the competitive market where it is used, I have had handed out to me in debating clubs since I was a boy. It is so old and ancient and unphilosophic that it has not only whiskers, but gray, shaggy whiskers upon it. [Laughter.] The price of wheat consumed in this country is never fixed in Liverpool, although it may be somewhat influenced by it, until a time when that price is such that Liverpool could become, in a sense, a competitor in supplying what we consume here at home. On the other hand, if you examine these same tables, prepared by our Tariff Board, you will find that the difference in price between Winnipeg and Liverpool, from month to month, generally represents just about the difference in freight that it would take to carry a bushel of wheat from Winnipeg to Liverpool. That country produces vastly more than it can consume, and therefore Canadian wheat is much more influenced by the market in Liverpool than is the wheat grown in the United States.

But I have taken too much time in the discussion of these matters in detail. I believe in a protective policy in the adjustment of tariff rates in the United States. If I were to undertake to state my reasons therefor you would say that they are academic. That may be true, but I believe, my Republican friends, that this is one of the times when academic principles and fundamental doctrines had better be tried out before we make radical changes in the basis of a great industry.

I was pleased to hear the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND]. I think it was as fair a statement of the fundamental differences between the Democratic doctrine of a tariff and the Republican doctrine of a tariff as could be made. The gentleman reminded you Democrats on that side, as I like to remind my Republican colleagues on this side, that a great part of the discussion which we engage in with such heat, not only in these legislative debates but also upon the stump, is a mere confusion of terms. When you place a tariff upon any article that is or can be produced in this country, whether you call that a tariff for revenue or a tariff for protection, it in effect is a protection upon that commodity to the amount of the tax, and any other statement is a mere parley over definitions and terms. If I am engaged in a manufacturing industry in the United States, if I am engaged in a farming industry in the United States, and as between the United States and our main competitor in that article of production a tariff rate is placed upon the commodity, as, for example, 10 cents a bushel on wheat or 50 cents a barrel on flour, it protects my American market in that commodity just to that extent, whether you call it a tariff for revenue or a tariff for protection.

And right here is the essential difference between the Democratic and Republican theories of the tariff. We must raise over $300,000,000 per year by tariff duties to help pay the expenses of Government. The Democrats ignore the protective principle and would apportion rates to different articles solely with a view to their revenue-producing quality. Republicans, while raising the revenue, would apportion the rates in a manner to foster and protect all industries that can be profitably carried on in this country.

There are disadvantages and perils in the protective system as well as great advantages, and it has become incumbent upon us as members of the Republican Party to eliminate, so far as practicable, those perils and dangers from the system. The perils of protection—and they grow out of any tariff, no matter what you call it—are, first, the difficulty of preventing protection which is too high, and, secondly, the fact that if the protection is too high, it encourages the formation of trusts or combinations in the United States to control that particular line of industry. Primarily it has been the Republican doctrine that protection was made, in its chief purpose, for infant industries. Yet we find in practice that an industry may grow gray with age, and still when you reduce the tariff upon that industry it will be done under protest; and we have not always, as Republicans, exercised the proper judgment and firmness in scaling down protective rates which have become too high for the best good of the industry and the people of the country.

When the conference committee was appointed by this House after the Payne bill had passed the House and gone to the Senate and had there been amended in many particulars, I made a brief address upon the floor of this House, not anticipating, of course, that my view would control, but still stating plainly my convictions upon the subject, that the Republican Party had undertaken, in the campaign, to hold out reasonable assurances that the revision of the tariff which we were to make would be a revision downward; and I suggested, in the face of a condition whereby many of the schedules had been placed much lower in the House than in the Senate amendments, and many other schedules had been placed in the Senate lower than in the House—I suggested as a Republican policy that the conference committee, just as far as possible, should accept the lower rates where the Senate had made an amendment downward, and insist upon our rates when our rates were lower than the Senate rates.

That may have been done in some instances. It was not done in all. If that course had been generally followed it would have spared the party much of the criticism that has since been made against the tariff act. It would have given us the pulp and paper schedule in a form generally satisfactory to the great newspaper interests. It would have saved the Republican Party from the absurdity of increasing the Dingley rates on cotton cloth.

I made personally a very careful investigation of the changes that were made in the Senate upon the cotton-cloth schedule. Very full hearings were had before the Ways and Means Committee. We have not an older manufacturing industry than the cotton industry. If I mistake not, the centennial anniversary of that great industry in this country is being celebrated this year, or will be. Witnesses came before the committee from the cotton mills of the South and the cotton mills of the North. Every witness before that committee, without an exception, stated that that industry was in a healthy and normal condition; that they did not need any increase of rates, but they asked that no reduction should be made. Amendments were made in the Senate which very much increased the rates upon countable cotton cloths. Some of you know something of the effort that was made to get the schedule back again to the Dingley rates, with the result that when the conference report came in, while some slight modifications were made, the Republicans were placed in the absurd light upon a very important schedule of materially advancing the Dingley rates on an industry that every witness from the industry said ought not be increased; that they were large enough.

It is not necessary for me to guess what influences made those changes. They were made, and our efforts to reduce them seemed ineffectual. When, in the face of that sort of proceeding on the cotton-cloth schedule, we see Members from districts very closely related to the cotton industries coming upon the floor of this House as ardent and active champions of a trade pact with Canada that will bring about free trade with our principal competitor upon farm products, there need be no surprise that the American farmer is hastening to the conclusion that something is necessary to bring about consistency again upon the part of our Republican colleagues in the manufacturing districts. I said then, and I say again, that it is such instances of greed that bring the American protective tariff system into disrepute in the house of its friends.

This particular bill will bring no great good to the farmer. The man who named this the farmers' free-list bill had a very fine sense of humor. The Canadian pact places all the products of the farm upon the free list, so far as Canada is concerned. This proposed farmers' free-list bill in effect places all of his products upon a free-trade basis with the balance of the world. That is probably a logical justification for calling it the farmers' free-list bill.

Agricultural implements are proposed to be placed upon the free list. An American farmer would not use any other implements than those made in this country if he could get them imported free. The wooden plow of India or the agricultural machinery of most civilized countries, indeed, would have little place upon an up-to-date American farm. It developed in the debate to-day that already by the reciprocal exchange provision under the terms of the Payne bill we can now get agricultural implements from Germany and from England free of duty, and if there is any country in the world that would be likely to make any implements that an American farmer would use in this country and maintain his self-respect, it would be one of those. There were only $79,000 worth of agricultural implements imported into the United States in 1910. We make in this country the agricultural implements of the world, and during 1910 $28,000,000 worth of agricultural implements were exported from the United States to other countries. The benefits that an American farmer can get out of that Democratic sop of free agricultural implements, under a condition in which they may now come in from England and Germany free, is so negligible that he will never be able to realize it.

Lumber is to be placed upon the free list. That will benefit western farmers a little. We from the Middle Western States have stood for free lumber. If in that we have seemed inconsistent, I think it can be argued that the question of free lumber is one of high public policy; that is, there are other considerations surrounding it than that alone of tariff rates. It is well known that it has become a question of public policy to conserve the American forests. A forest does not grow in a lifetime; it takes generations to develop a forest. By careless and wasteful methods in this country, under private greed and enterprise, we were fast reaching a point when the American forests would disappear from view. A forest has ethical and utilitarian purposes besides furnishing lumber. The forest on the mountain is an ornamentation to the landscape; it holds back the snow, fills the springs, and conserves the safety of the valley below. We are spending millions of dollars a year in an effort to conserve the American forests, and that is being done because we have reached the place in our development where it has become necessary in order that great elements that enter into civilization and progress shall not disappear from this country.

Now, then, the reduction of the tariff upon lumber may make a reduction to that extent, but the $1.25 upon lumber that is now levied since the Payne bill went into operation, is an insignificant element in determining the price of lumber, even if it is all applied directly to the purchaser of lumber. The price of lumber is inevitably high because of the conditions to which I have referred, and therefore I think it should be the policy to invite free transmission of lumber from other countries having great forests into our own, in order that we may conserve the remaining forests as far as we can for the generations coming after us until other forests can be grown. That will be for the self-interest of the American farmer. But it will be nothing to compensate him for what he will suffer by reason of going into free-trade markets upon his great products.

It is, indeed, a very narrow policy to throw a great American industry, an industry which has in the value of its capital more money invested than all of our manufactures and all of our railway capitalization combined, I say it is a very narrow policy that will throw a great industry of that kind into a free-trade market with Canada on all of its products while preserving protection upon manufactured products. I say it is a very narrow, unrepublican, and, I believe, un-American policy.

It is a very little consolation to the American farmer after you have reduced, perchance, by sharp competition from other countries that can produce cheaper the profits of his business—because usually 20 per cent in cost of production is the difference between prosperity and adversity—I say it is very little consolation after in a measure you have injured the chief, prime industry of the United States to cheapen the cost of the tools the farmer works with.

I do not believe, however, that this bill will at least immediately seriously injure the American farmer beyond what he will already be injured by the Canadian pact, if it shall go into law. It is true that all grain products and all meat products are placed on the free list. But under present economic conditions in the United States, as compared with other countries in the world, it is at least doubtful whether we will attract from countries south of us—Australia, Argentina, and Mexico—so sharp a competition upon meat products as to further impair the American price to the American producer. I find upon examination that we imported from all countries of the world during 1910 less than a million dollars' worth of meat products of all kinds—smoked meats, preserved meats, and fresh meats altogether. We only imported about $700,000 worth in 1910. On the other hand, the United States exported to help feed the hungry mouths of continental Europe and Great Britain $106,000,000 worth.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I understand the gentleman is in favor of putting up the home market so as to get a high price for agricultural products. Does he think that it would be fair to the people to sell them their products at a very high price and to sell the surplus to foreign countries at a lower price?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Not at all. My view is that every important American industry that has sufficient dignity for its development as an American enterprise should be protected to the extent of the difference in cost between the production abroad and at home, and the only question is how it should be applied so as to get only a reasonable profit and still preserve the advantage to the American producer. But I certainly do not favor any policy that would give any better opportunities to the American producer of manufactured products than to the American producer of agricultural products. I simply say, as a matter of fundamental American policy, if we are to abandon the protective principle to American industries, considering the magnitude of agriculture, its importance in this country——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But the gentleman does not come to the point that I made.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Oh, let me finish the sentence first and then I will come to it. Considering the importance of agriculture in this country, I say it should be the last industry, if we are to have an order of procedure, from which protection should be removed.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In defending this home market and exploiting it as the gentleman does, is it the notion of the gentleman that we should sell to each other, farmer to the manufacturer and artisan, and artisan and manufacturer in turn to the farmer, at higher prices than we sell the same products, either manufactured or natural, abroad? Do you want to sell to our home market at a higher price than you would sell our surplus for to a foreign market?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I want the American manufacturer and farmer to sell his product in the best market in the world, which is the American market. I want him to have a little advantage in getting into this market, because I insist that we should have the American market primarily for the American producer. He is an American citizen, and we have a higher standard of living in this country than in any other country. It is the best market in all the world. The internal commerce of the United States is as great as all of the foreign commerce of all of the countries of the civilized world.

I say this market should be in the first place protected at least to the extent of the difference in the cost of production here and elsewhere, making a liberal provision for the American wage earner, who ought, as an American citizen, to be paid a larger wage than any other citizen of the world, and he ought not to be thrown into competition with the labor of monarchical countries that do not undertake to have the high standards of citizenship and living that we have.

I know in actual practice it is not possible always to gauge the manufactured output, for example, precisely to the local demand, if an effort be made to do it. I know, furthermore, as to agricultural products, it is impossible to gauge the supply precisely to the demand. The industrious American farmer always raises all that he can of anything that he thinks will be of value. Therefore, we have a surplus in this country. It ought to be our policy to continue to have a surplus in this country, and thereby, from the exigencies of the market, the manufacturer will be glad to take from some foreign country a lower price for his surplus than he has succeeded in getting in a live American market. There are many times when the agriculturist, the grower of wheat, accepts a less price for his surplus in the Liverpool market than he has obtained for what he has sold in the American market.

It is nothing against the American system, it is nothing against the producer or the manufacturer of these articles. It is simply due to natural business conditions. We can afford to sell our accidental surplus in a foreign market for a quick return, even though it does bring somewhat less than the prevailing prices for the portion of the commodity needed in this country.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman refers to our accidental surplus. Does he not think that we ought to have an intentional surplus both of manufactured and farm products, and does he not think it would be manifestly unfair to that farmer, for whom he assumes to be speaking this afternoon, to charge him for agricultural implements that he uses in raising his wheat a higher price than those same implements sold to his Argentine, Canadian, or Russian competitor, who is selling with him in open competition at the Liverpool market?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. You can have an answer either way to that question, whatever side suits you best.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I suppose the gentleman will make the answer that suits him best.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. My answer is already made. I think the American farmer ought to be able to sell the products produced in this country with a reasonable margin of profit, and I say that if we apply the Republican doctrine of protection as we have announced it, and apply it to each American industry, whether agriculture or manufacture, on the basis of the difference in cost of production here and elsewhere, with a reasonable margin of profit—a question not always easy to determine, although I think in most instances the difference of freight, particularly from Europe, will perhaps be a reasonable margin of profit—there will be no danger of the American producer receiving an unreasonable price from the American consumer. And I say, if we will apply the Republican doctrine of protection as we have announced it in our platform, we will refuse to enact any legislation, as Republicans, that is not consistent with this doctrine; we will eliminate the high tariff that may apply to certain specific industries under the present schedules, and we will proceed with a successful relation between all American industries, whether farm or factory.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Just along that line. There is a high excise tax upon alcohol and a high internal tax upon whisky, upon tobacco, and upon cigars that the American consumer buys, yet the whisky that is made from the corn that is raised in Missouri, when it is sent abroad, is relieved of a tax of $1.10 a gallon, or two dollars and something if it be alcohol, under our system, and it has always been so. Last year, in round numbers, $7,000,000 that was exported was relieved from the excise tax, and yet the gentleman from Missouri, perhaps, is not happy.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I also suggest to the gentleman, in reply to the question asked by the gentleman from Missouri, that the practice of selling a small proportion of the surplus abroad is by no means an American institution. It is done by every nation in the civilized world, with a tariff or without a tariff; in fact, the expression "dumping process," by which term this method is known, was invented to apply to free-trade England.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think entirely too much is sought to be made by our Democratic opponents. We have radical differences on the subject of the tariff——

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Not until I get through with this sentence, then I will be glad to yield to anyone—of the fact that in certain isolated instances, and perhaps quite often, less is accepted for the surplus of a manufactured article abroad than at home. It is one of the exigencies of trade. As any man of business knows, it is difficult at the end of the year to dispose of his surplus if he has manufactured more than can be consumed at home, and he sells, even at a disadvantage, abroad in order that he may get in the ready money to set into operation active business for the coming year. Now, with farm products it is practically the same way. You might as well criticize the farmer because he sells grain cheaper abroad than at home.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina rose.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Let me finish the sentence. You take the Liverpool market of wheat for the month of January, 1910, a year ago this last January. The market in Minneapolis of No. 1 hard, the average for the month, was $1.15½. The price in Liverpool was $1.22, a difference of only 6½ cents. Now, if a bushel of No. 1 hard wheat had been marketed in that month by the American farmer in Liverpool he would have lost the difference between 6½ cents and 15½ cents, which it would cost to get it over there, and then you would have put to the American farmer that he was scandalizing the industry by selling his wheat cheaper abroad than at home. There was no month during 1910 that the American farmer, who grows northern spring wheat, if he had sold in Liverpool, would not have accepted a less price, after taking out the freight, than he would have gotten at home; not a single month.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman believe that a bushel of wheat ever went to Liverpool when wheat was cheaper in Liverpoool than it was in the United States?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Well, "ever" is a long time; and if it did, it was an economic mistake.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Then it is not true he sells in Liverpool cheaper than in America.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have just made the statement that any month of 1910 he would sell in Liverpool at a lower price than here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And he would accept it?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do not know whether he would or not, but——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am not——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I said he would get a better price here——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I happen to live in an export State——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have yielded freely to the gentleman, and I do not care for the gentleman to make a speech in my time, but if he has a further question I will be happy to meet it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We sell about 7,000,000 bales of cotton from the South, and we get for every bale of it in Europe more than we can get in America.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. There is reason for that, and that reason is a splendid protection for our southern brethren, and I do not criticize at all their advantage in it. I am glad for them. But the United States grows three-fourths of all the cotton of the world, and why should it sell any abroad unless it got as good a price as could be gotten here? On the other hand, we do not grow three-fourths of the wheat, and have only 100,000,000 bushels more than we consume, and we have to seek a foreign market for a little of our product, and have to accept that price after we pay the freight.

I do not wish to be misunderstood on the subject of Canadian reciprocity. I said at the beginning of that controversy that I was favorable to the general idea of Canadian reciprocity, and I would be in favor of either of two horns of a dilemma. I would be willing to have Canadian reciprocity on all American-produced products and Canadian-produced products upon the principle of the Republican doctrine of protection, or difference in cost of production, whichever way it might be; or I would be willing to accept the other alternative and have free trade with Canada on every product produced in the two countries. I am not opposed to either idea. I am opposed to a reciprocity, so-called, with Canada that gives free trade on the products of the farm, but retains our high protective duties on the products of the factories.

I am, in other words, opposed to a Canadian reciprocity that must be purchased at the cost of the disturbance and overthrow of our reciprocity here in the United States. I want that we shall have the same proper adjustment between the industries of the farm and of the factories as heretofore, and do not want them sacrificed to a scheme that will place one great industry on the free list while preserving a protective tariff upon the balance.

Now, we as Republicans have long ago, I think, or at least in part, declared in favor of schedule-by-schedule revision of the tariff. Certainly, very prominent leaders have done so, and the prominent leaders upon the Democratic side, at least of this body, appear to have come to about the same conclusion. Schedule-by-schedule revision of the tariff is all right if we have a principle to guide us in that revision. The criticism upon the old system is that no principle fundamentally believed in by either party has controlled in a revision en masse; that the revision of the tariff has often become—and it is as much chargeable to Democratic tariffs as to Republican tariffs—too much influenced by the practice of compromise and barter and sale, the keeping of one industry upon a high-protection schedule if another one can be put there or kept there.

But I want to remind Members on both sides of this Chamber that there can be no worse revision of any tariff than a revision by schedule that has no fundamental principle to determine it except the brute force of votes.

If we were proceeding as Republicans to revise the tariff, we should revise it upon the principle of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. There is no place for free lists in either a Democratic or a Republican revision of the tariff, unless you can place some principle at the basis of it. There is no basis for a free list in a Republican revision of the tariff, whether by schedule or any other way, unless it should be applied to an American commodity that can be produced here as cheaply as abroad, or to some article that can not be economically produced here. I think it can be applied to many. We applied it to some additional articles in the Payne bill. My opinion is that agricultural implements can be manufactured in this country just as cheaply as anywhere in the world. If so, they ought to be put upon the free list, not because the American farmer wants it to be done, but because, fundamentally, the principle of protection, that we as Republicans subscribe to, has placed them there. I suppose a Democratic free list—although some Democrats can better define it than myself, for they have a consistent doctrine that the tariff should be adjusted simply for the purpose of raising revenue, and the principle of protection should be lost sight of entirely—I suppose, logically, a Democratic free list would consist of articles that the placing of a tariff upon them would destroy their revenue-producing quality; that is, would prevent importation. If there is any other Democratic idea to be conserved in a free list, we will find it out from Democratic definition.

There are fundamental differences, my friends, between the two parties upon this question, and as a Republican I am anxious that we shall not lose sight of these differences in the legislation which is pending and that may be brought before the consideration of both these legislative bodies.

I concede that the Republican doctrine of protection is made primarily for the American producer instead of for the American consumer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. May I have 10 minutes more?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I concede, I say, that the Republican policy of protection has in view, first of all, the American producer. Our theory is to encourage production, to reward generously every man who will labor, either with his hands or his head. Our theory, further, is that if you will make every able-bodied American a producer and give him a good wage or price for his products he will be able to purchase all that he can consume.

Of what avail are low prices of living or of dying if you have not the price? All American citizens are consumers. All American citizens ought to be producers. And one advantage of the Republican policy is that it has always kept our factories at work; it has kept everybody busy, and the rewards of comfort and a good support have come to the man who will toil. The Republican policy has always worked well in experience. On the other hand, the policy of our Democratic friends has, so far as I have observed, worked poorly in practice.

We have had investigations, official investigations, as to the reasons for the high cost of living or the high cost of food products. The Secretary of Agriculture made a thorough investigation upon this subject. He reported that the difficulty, so far as the price of food products was concerned, was not that the American farmer was receiving an unreasonable price for his commodities. As I remember, the result of that investigation showed that it could not be said that the American farmer, even in these prosperous times, was receiving to exceed 6 per cent on his investment. Practically the same conclusion was reached by the Senate committee—the Lodge committee—investigating the high cost of living. From both of these investigations it would appear that between the farmer and the consumer the organized corporations and industries organized for the purpose of handling the farmer's products, changing their form, perhaps, and passing them on to the consumer, are adding to the original price all the way from 50 per cent to 150 per cent.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is a very interesting statement, and I state that truthfully. Does the gentleman take into consideration this fact in connection with the ultimate price that the ultimate consumer pays a great rate of interest upon watered stock?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes. There is a great deal of truth in that, but that is only a remote phase of the question. But it is very well worth consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have already said that the provision in this pending bill to place all meat products upon the free list will, to some extent, further cripple the advantages of the American producer of beef—the farmer. It has, however, some advantages, and I want to do it justice. Those of you who took interest enough to observe know that I sought to amend the Canadian pact in this House so as to place meat products, so far as our trade relations with Canada are concerned, upon the free list. I have said at different times that this Canadian agreement did not go far enough. By that I meant to say that if we were to have free trade at all with Canada, it should go all along the line, and I am not at all deaf to the altruistic arguments that are produced to show that we ought to have closer trade relations with Canada.

But in saying that it ought to go all along the line I have always referred to our trade relations with Canada and not our trade relations with the whole world. But under this bill meat products from all over the world are placed on the free list. My opinion is that that will not, at least for a few years, injure the American producer of meats. When you load meat on a ship, either from Australia or Argentina, and start it on its destination to market, it will not naturally seek the American market first, where we are already exporting $106,000,000 worth of preserved and dressed meat annually, but it will seek the world's market.

There is plenty of opportunity to market meat in Germany, which must buy every year of some countries at least $100,000,000 of food products, and my judgment is that any injury to the American farmer by reason of extending these particular provisions will not be serious, at least for some years to come.

On the other hand, we are gaining something in the economic adjustment of our relations with Canada. I believe that agreement ought to have provided for free meats with Canada if we are going to have free live stock. This legislation, while a very roundabout method, would give us at least free flour, free bread products, free meat products from Canada as well as from the rest of the world, and therefore would have a very marked effect on the system, so far as the present Canadian pact is concerned; and my candid judgment is that the consumer, by reason of bringing this element of competition in against the American Flour Trust and the American Meat Trust in our relations with Canada, will gain sufficient in the matter of meat and lower-priced flour and bread products to compensate, probably, for any additional danger to the American producer of live stock by reason of bringing in competition from the other countries.

I have tried to speak candidly of this bill. I believe it is radically wrong in the principle that it starts out upon. It is a companion piece of another piece of legislation that is radically wrong in principle. We either should have trade relations with Canada that preserve for the American producer the difference in cost of production here and there, or if for altruistic and fraternal reasons we should treat them as brethren and bring them in under one industrial system, we ought to have universal free trade with Canada.

Now, you are seeking to cure a latent and inevitable defect in that system by another bill, in the nature of a reprisal. Inasmuch as you have given a hard blow to the American farmer in that piece of legislation, you are now seeking to give a hard blow to some American manufacturers, in order that the farmer may even up. I do not believe that legislation of this character can be permanent. The present bill is justified, from a Republican standpoint, only upon the ground that it will hasten our return to industrial justice and fair play.

The worst is yet to come. We shall have a fair test of Democratic tinkering with the tariff, as we have already had once in my lifetime. History will repeat itself. Republicans will come back again to their faith. They will realize that they can not, and that they ought not if they could, place in operation a protective system that ignores the American producer of food products. Out of it all we will have a political revolution that will bring back, without its former defects, the American Republican protective system. The tariff hog and the free trader will both be repudiated. American markets will be primarily for American producers, and the United States will again resume its march as leader among the great commercial nations of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the exercise of the taxing power is and has always been one of great moment to the American people. It was the arbitrary exercise of that power by Great Britain that plunged the United Colonies into war with the mother country. England laid a tax on tea, and our fathers resented it. It was not because English tea was so delicious that our people objected to the tax; it was the principle involved. We really had here a substitute far better than English tea, and that was the old-fashioned sassafras tea. [Laughter.] In my youth time I used to dig the red roots from the ground, and I thought that they made the finest tea that ever tickled the palate of man. How sweet its memory still! Does it seem strange to you on that side of the House now to think that the thirteen Colonies staked so much and dared to do so much because England taxed just one item—tea? What would the fathers think if they could come back to this Republic and see this Government under the control of the Republican Party laying a tax on more than 4,000 items of the necessaries of life? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota] boldly said that there is no place in a Republican schedule for a free list. Mr. Chairman, Henry Clay, the ablest champion of the protective theory that this country has ever produced, predicted nearly 70 years ago that the day was not far distant when protective duties would be abandoned. He pointed to the day when the industries of America could get along without taxing the consumers to support them. He asked the people in that early time to submit to this extraordinary tax only temporarily, and he assured them that in a little while these industries could compete with the world. Henry Clay has been dead more than half a century, and has the Republican Party abandoned the policy that he said should only live while our industries were in their infancy? No, Mr. Chairman; that party has become the tool, the handy instrument, of the interests that Clay sought to help when they needed help. I can not believe that Clay ever dreamed that the temporary protective system that he helped to establish would produce such evils as afflict and curse our country to-day. The captains of these industries led Clay to believe that they would voluntarily request the abolishment of protective tariff duties in a very short time. Did they do so? No, sir. They had grown rich, and they wanted the American masses to continue to work for them. Instead of doing as they had induced Clay and the people to believe that they would do—cease to ask the public to contribute to them under the requirements of law—they went into politics, formed combinations of special interests, and spent money helping to elect men who would serve them and helping to defeat men who opposed them, and to-day they have grown so powerful that they hold up the producer with one hand and rob the consumer with the other. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, this is a great battle that we have to fight. The powers that oppose us are tremendous, but the people are more powerful than they. All that we have to do is to reach them with the truth and the whole truth. God grant us the strength and the courage to keep up the fight. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

> Work on bravely God's own daughters,
> Work on bravely God's own sons,
> But till you have smoother waters,
> Let truth fire her minute guns.

We hear it noised around this Capitol and whispered throughout the country that if the representatives of the people undertake to reduce the tariff tax so that the average man can have a decent chance in the struggle for existence, the haughty barons of high protection will cause trouble in the business world. Aye, we are told of their power to create panics. Mr. Chairman, have we reached that awful time in the history of our country when a few men, grown fat on special privileges, can frighten us away from our patriotic duty? Shall these men continue to rob and plunder the American people because they desire to do so, and because they would become offended and create temporary disturbances in the business world if we dared to disturb the cruel power that they now employ to oppress the people? Did the fathers who followed Clay in the early days as he gathered tariff taxes from the people for the benefit of infant industries dream that they were inaugurating a system that would one day control national legislation in perpetuating its existence to the detriment of the rights and liberties of the people? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The time is ripe for us to educate the people regarding this great evil, and they are being educated. There are subsidized newspapers doing all they can to keep the truth from the people. I do not mean that all the newspapers are subsidized—not at all—for a great many of them helped us in the battle for the people in 1910. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I mean a great number of them are subsidized or owned by this vast tariff money power, and that the purpose of their existence is to deceive the people with regard to tariff blessings, and to keep them in the dark regarding the awful evils of high protection. Mr. Chairman, we have had a hard time in reaching the people because so many of these vehicles of information, the newspapers, have been owned or controlled by the interests that want to keep the people ignorant of conditions as they are. The people are at last waking up, and we intend to continue our war against this band of tariff marauders who collect taxes on everything that we use, from the cradle to the grave. When I came to Congress we had only 127 Democrats.

But to-day 227 Democrats respond in the name of the people in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This great change in party representation in this branch of Congress is indeed significant. It means that the principles for which we have so long contended are at last commanding the approval of the people. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Republicans had been beating us so long that two years ago a Republican ball team, composed of Members of this House, challenged nine of us Democrats to meet them on the diamond. I took part in that game. Speaker CANNON was there to encourage the Republicans and to rejoice with them in their victory—if victory they should achieve. But, Mr. Chairman, we met them and we conquered them. And I then and there made the prediction that our victory over the Republican players was a forerunner of Democratic victory in 1910. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If I may be permitted to indulge in prophecy on this occasion, I will say that the victory achieved for the Democratic Party in 1910 is the forerunner of a glorious Democratic victory in 1912. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The high protective theory has been condemned by the American people. The system has grown in greed and avarice, until to-day its withering, blighting influence is felt in every avenue of American life and its evil agents are here in the Congress of the United States pleading to be permitted to continue in the name of the law their robbery of the American consumers. This is a deplorable and a humiliating situation. The lamented Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, a Republican, in a great speech condemning the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, said: "Congress has become a bargain counter." Mr. Chairman, that was an awful indictment of the Republican Congress, made by a Republican Senator. Congress a bargain counter—a place where the privilege to increase the tariff tax is sold to the highest bidder! The American people believed, with Senator Dolliver, that Congress had become a bargain counter, where those who fattened on the Republican tariff system could by the aid of their swollen fortunes have a Republican Congress put tariff taxes on new articles or raise them on old ones. "Make a fat contribution to the Republican campaign fund—help to perpetuate the system—and tell us what you want in the way of a tariff tax, and we will make the people pay it; make out your check and turn it over to the campaign committee, and all will be well." This, I imagine, is what took place, in view of what Senator Dolliver said about the Republican Congress being a bargain counter. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What else could he mean? A bargain counter where the people's rights were bartered away. Ninety-odd millions of people taxed to build up colossal fortunes for men like Carnegie, whose whole property when the Dingley tariff law went in effect, in 1897, was valued at $10,000,000, and in less than three years, under the higher tariff tax granted him at the bargain counter, his property had increased so marvelously that it was estimated to be worth $360,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is the sort of legislation that you have placed upon the statute books of this Nation. These men who contribute so generously and lavishly to the Republican campaign fund get it back multiplied thousands of times in tariff taxes from the people. Mr. Chairman, I have heard Republicans in this House laugh and make merry when we have from time to time assailed the protective theory that has caused so much trouble and distress among the masses of our people. But, sir, the time for their mirth and laughter has passed. Behold the haughty agents of these tariff taxgatherers, frowning upon us for the last few years for daring to suggest a revision of the tariff downward, coming out in 1908 with their faces wreathed in deceptive smiles proclaiming that they, too, believed that the tariff should be revised, but they said, "We will revise it downward, trust us once more"; and the people trusted them once more, and what did they do? They broke their platform promises and crucified their campaign pledges. [Applause on the Democratic side.] President Taft called an extra session of Congress. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], the high priest of protection in the Republican Party, said that he did not know whether the tariff would be revised up or down. Another Republican in this House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE], said the whole country knows that we met here to revise the tariff downward. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, if there is any one thing that the American people know and know well, it is the sad fact that the Republican Congress did not revise the tariff downward. The bill that they put through the House vastly increased the tariff burdens of the people, and when it got through the Senate it was the worst tariff law ever written. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When it reached the President, he admitted that it was not a full compliance with the promises made to the people by the Republican Party, but later on, in his Winona speech, he said it was the best tariff bill ever written by the Republican Party, which goes to prove the saying that—

> Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
> As to be hated needs but to be seen;
> Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me quote a Republican authority upon your failure to keep your promise to revise the tariff downward. The Philadelphia North American, a Republican paper published in Philadelphia, said just after the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill became a law, speaking of the Republicans:

> They have kicked the national platform into the wastebasket.

And then, speaking of the bill, said:

> It is a revision drawn only to fatten the profits of the trusts, to grind every consumer a little nearer to poverty, and juggle duties so that they become prohibitory. The party is shamed as no party ever was before.

Concluding, the paper says:

> The law will be a cheat and the burden will be laid upon the consumer and the wage earner to pay more toll to special privilege.

Mr. Chairman, this Republican newspaper's criticism of the Republican Party is justified by the facts of that party's broken promises to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The election following your betrayal of the people returned a majority of Democrats to this House, and this, I repeat, is the forerunner of what we are going to do unto you in the entire country next year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I must hasten. The gentleman on the other side said a few days ago that the reciprocity agreement with Canada would take seven or eight million dollars of revenue from the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I had rather let this seven or eight millions of dollars in revenue remain in the pockets of the American consumers than to take it from them to be squandered in useless and extravagant expenditures by Republican Party officials. We have charged the Republican Party with having wasted millions of the people's money. We have charged them with reckless extravagance. And what did they say? They smiled and said that we did not know what we were talking about. We continued to cry out to the American people that they were taxing them to obtain money to meet useless expenditures, and when the people were convinced that we were right President Taft, a Republican, admitted that they were expending annually a hundred million dollars more than was necessary for the conduct of the Government. This admission on the part of a Republican President puts the Republican Party in an awful ugly predicament. It brands that party with willful extravagance or with utter inability to run this Government in an economic, business way. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another Republican whose familiarity with the necessary and unnecessary expenditures of this Government is greater than that of the President. I refer to Senator Aldrich, who was the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate until March 4, 1911. He said that we are uselessly expending or wasting $300,000,000 of the people's money every year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Yes, Senator Aldrich has admitted that if the Government were honestly and economically administered $300,000,000 could be saved to the tariff taxpayers of America. You are taxing the American masses to put $300,000,000 into the hands of extravagant Republican officials, and these custodians of the people's funds are squandering them in a shameful and reckless way. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Payne-Aldrich tariff law collects about $335,000,000 a year from the pockets of the American people, and a Republican, Senator Aldrich, says that you are squandering $300,000,000 of this money. So we have only $35,000,000 of this vast sum left to aid in defraying the legitimate expenditures of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What else do you Republicans do? You try to deceive the laboring man by telling him that tariff taxes are laid upon the American people for his benefit. God of our fathers, how many crimes have been committed by the Republican Party in the name of the laboring men of this country? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The high protective tariff system that now so afflicts the American people is the worst enemy that the laboring man has. What is the treatment that you accord the laboring man of America? You say the manufacturer gives him employment. Well, that is true, but he does so because he needs his labor and profits tremendously by it. The laboring man obtains fairly good wages because he is organized and is constantly demanding a living wage, but in spite of all your boasted benefits accruing to the laboring man under the present tariff system, the laboring man continues to have a hard struggle and to live in humble surroundings, while the trust magnate for whom he toils lives in a mansion surrounded by all the comforts and luxuries that go to make up a life of ease. Mr. Chairman, that is not all; you bring foreigners here by the hundreds and thousands—yes, by the millions. And if the organization of the laboring man demands of your trust kings greater wages, saying that the cost of living has so increased that he can not support himself and wife and children on the wage that he receives, what happens to him? Why you turn him out of your factory and you take these foreigners from whose labor in Europe you have promised to protect him and you bring them here and put them in the place of the man whose only offense was a demand for decent wages. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And that is not all. You make him a slave. When election time comes around and the people are demanding that the tariff tax be reduced on the common necessities of life, your tariff-fattened captains of industry tell him, "Unless you vote as I vote, you lose your job."

And that is not all. You sell the product of the American laborer in the foreign land to the foreigner cheaper than you sell it to the laboring man here at home, and cheaper than you sell to any man in America. So, Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party brings the cheap labor of Europe here to take the place of the American laborer whenever he manifests a desire to better his condition by demanding a better wage. [Applause on the Democratic side]. The capital of the laboring man in this country is his manhood, his skill, and his energy. But you do not care for that. The Republican Party has never manifested much concern about such things. When Henry George said, "I am for men," he struck a note that rang around this Republic like a trumpet call. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To protect and preserve the rights of the people will continue to be the chief end and aim of the Democratic Party. This country needs an old-fashioned revival of patriotism, and, Mr. Chairman, the way for this Government to have and hold the affections of its people is to be so just and fair that no man can truthfully assail it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Did you ever hear any talk like that on the other side of this House?

No; you are always talking about reasonable profits for the purse-proud plutocrats that your tariff system has created. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This reasonable profit for a favored few is the rock upon which your party is breaking. You now have the standpatter, the insurgent. What is a standpatter? Why, the very name suggests inactivity and decay. There is no standstill place in life. We progress or we retrograde. The power unused is the power that perishes, and the stand-pat Republican is like the Irishman's turtle—dead and don't know it. [Laughter and applause.] Then there is the insurgent. The trouble with him is he does not insurge long enough. Now and then he breaks away from the old guard and, like a bantam rooster mounting an ash hopper, crows vigorously for awhile, displaying, you would think, considerable courage; but let him see a trust hawk circling in his direction and right under the Republican barn house he goes and you do not see him any more. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] They are clever fellows, some of them, but they will not insurge far enough.

An insurgent Republican studies more about his immediate political future than all other things put together. And now I am going to tell him how to save himself and serve his country. Let him leave the time-serving Republican Party and he will obey the Scripture, which says:

> Come ye out from among them and be ye separate from them.

[Laughter and applause.]

The Republican Party's claim that high-tariff taxes are levied to protect the laboring man is a delusion and a snare. It is a fact well known to the Republicans of this House and to the country that when the McKinley tariff law went into effect, tariff duties were increased and yet wages were cut all over the country, and this was true when the Dingley law went into effect, and the Payne law also. Would the same thing have happened if the tariff had been reduced? Again, you threaten us with a panic if we dare to disturb your robber band as they go about the Republic gathering enormous tariff taxes from the people. You threatened us in 1892 and 1893, and your tariff clans gathered and put into operation forces that brought on a panic in 1894.

It was a Republican panic. You had the steel plates ready for printing the bonds, which were later issued and this before the Republican President went out of office. You held the panic back until President Cleveland went into office, and then you let it go, and when you saw that Republican panic afflicting the country you called it a Democratic panic. But the distress and suffering that the country experienced in 1894 were the bitter fruits of the tree that you had planted. For years you deceived the country by proclaiming it from the housetops that the Republican Party produced prosperity and that the Democratic Party produced panics. But the Republican panic of 1907 when you were in control of every branch of the Government has exposed your false claim to the world. Yes, you boasted that your protective system brought prosperity. Mr. Chairman, I am reminded of the story told by Mr. Bryan about the chanticleer, who told his sweetheart, the pheasant, that his crowing brought the dawn. For months and years she believed him. She heard his shrill voice ringing out in the darkness before day and then she saw the east radiant with the dawn. She gazed proudly upon the handsome chanticleer and firmly believed that his crowing brought the dawn. But one morning he was boasting of his power—still deceiving his sweetheart—and the dawn came before he crowed.

The long-deceived pheasant showed her embarrassment and her disappointment, and there in her presence stood discredited and humiliated the once-proud chanticleer, whose hypocrisy had made him contemptible in the eyes of her who had loved and trusted him. [Laughter and applause.] You were in power in every branch of the Government in 1907 when the panic came, and your claim of power to produce prosperity and prevent panics was proven to be false; and your party stood discredited before the American people and your hypocrisy stood exposed to the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The American people who had believed you and trusted you so long said, "Away with the Republican Party. We will trust it no more." And then you said, "Trust us once more; give us one more chance and we will revise the tariff downward." [Laughter and applause.] You made that promise to the people, and they gave you another chance, and what did you do? You broke that promise, and they drove you from power in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We have not had a lick at the Republicans in the other branch of Congress who helped you to break your promise to the people, but we will have soon. I am reminded of the story of a tramp who, while walking along the road, came upon a crowd of people at a picnic. He was very hungry, and he said to them, "Won't you give me something to eat?" And they gave him some cake and some pie, and if there is anything on this earth that a Republican loves it is pie. [Laughter and applause.] And they gave him some meat and fruit and a little of everything good to eat. They put it in a large napkin and told him to take it with him. He was very grateful and went his way rejoicing. Not far down the road he took a seat under a mulberry tree and ate his lunch. After he had eaten it he felt drowsy and fell asleep. The mosquitoes came around and lit upon his hands and upon his bare feet. The flies crawled over his face and over his feet and hands. He determined at first to drive them away, and then he said, "No; the people who gave me that lunch have been exceedingly kind, and I will let these insects enjoy themselves for awhile." [Laughter and applause.] And so he lay there and slept. Finally a yellow jacket came along and struck him square between the eyes. Smarting with the sting, he smote the yellow jacket and said, "For that you will all get off." [Laughter and applause.]

As I have said, you Republicans in this House are the only ones that we have had a lick at. For your broken promises and for the increased cost of living caused by your service to the trusts you have gone out of power in this House, and now for these sins and others you will all soon get out. [Laughter and applause.] The Republican Party has raised up here a gang of tariff barons who, when we want to put a stop to their oppression of the people, threaten us with a panic. They threaten us in order to frighten us away from a revision of the tariff. And when they do bring on a panic like the one that came in 1907, the big fish eat up the little fish. [Laughter and applause.] If there is any one thing that delights a Republican—a trust-tagged and tariff-owned Republican—it is to see the big fish mercilessly devour the little fish. [Laughter and applause.] In these panicky times money becomes scarce and then trouble begins for many of the stockholders in the trust-controlled concerns. The big man says to the little man, "You must buy my stock or sell me yours." And the little man says, "I can not buy your stock, and I would like to keep mine." And then the big man fastens the bony fingers of the panic around the little man's throat and chokes him to death. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The little man is crushed and a few big men profit by reason of the hard times produced by Republican panics. When the people cry out for a change in conditions a trust Goliath stalks around and defies the American people. He tells us that if we interfere with him and his gang, as they go about reaping where they have not sown, and gathering where they have not labored, he will punish us by producing a panic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a Democratic David in the land, armed with sling and pebble, representing the courage and determination of the people and a righteous cause, who will come along next year and destroy this cruel giant of the trust magnates. I want to see the day come, and I expect to see it come, when the changing of this Government from one political party to another will not affect legitimate business in this country. I want to see the time come when the platform of each party will declare for governmental honesty, for rigid economy, for justice and fairness to all the people, and that only those laws shall be enacted which will bring about the greatest good to the greatest number. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And I trust that we shall never see again those truckling lines to the trusts written in the Republican platform of 1908, where you guarantee to the tariff barons a reasonable profit. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] referred the other day to the fact that when we have war with other countries, we call on all the people to fight our battles. I was glad to hear him say that. It is refreshing now and then, although it may be a dropstitch remark to hear a Republican say something that suggests his friendship for the people. Republicans only think of the people when they want them to go to war or to bear increased tariff-tax burdens. But when it comes to dispensing blessings they think only of a few men who make large contributions to their campaign fund. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, some amusing things have occurred during this debate. The other day a gentleman on the other side of this House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], undertook to frighten the farmers of this country into opposing the reciprocity agreement with Canada. And after that bill passed the House he tried to frighten all of the Canadians by threatening to annex them to the United States if they dared to ratify the reciprocity agreement. [Laughter.] Another gentleman on that side of the House urges us not to mistreat the American farmer on this side of the Canadian line. Let us see, Mr. Chairman, how the Republican Party has treated these same farmers and sheep owners. Here is what you do in the interest of the Wool Trust. If an American farmer owns a flock of sheep on this side of the line between the United States and Canada, and if he owns land just on the other side of this line in Canada, the Republican Party will not allow him to take his own sheep out of the United States and graze them on his own land in Canada and keep them there over six months and return them to the United States without paying a tariff tax to the tariff barons of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Do you blame the intelligent farmer out there for going into Canada to live? How can you? Who are they that have increased the population of Canada so rapidly in the last few years? I will tell you. They are the farmers who live near the Canadian line. And why have they gone in such large numbers to Canada? Because they have found your talk of tariff protection to the farmer to be a delusion and a fraud. These so-called tariff-protected farmers of America are flocking over to Canada by the hundreds and thousands. They have gone there because they wanted to get away from the tariff burdens of the United States. You have pretended always that you were protecting them here and making them rich. From time to time they have gone into Canada, and when they returned they told their neighbors that all this talk about tariff helping the farmer is bosh. And they said to their friends and relatives here, "Come, go with us to Canada. We have made more money there than we could make in the tariff-cursed United States."

And some of them go there to get away from the criminal horde that you are pouring into this country every year from foreign lands. Mr. Chairman, under the reign of the Republican Party more than a million foreigners come into our country every year. I have nothing to say against the men who come, in limited numbers, of their own accord, with the desire to better their condition, and who will love and support our institutions. But I protest against the black hand, the bomb thrower, and the anarchist who are being poured into our country by the thousands. Under the reign of the Republican Party this criminal horde is being emptied into the United States every 12 months. They make life cheap in our country, and they constitute a great menace to the peace and happiness of our people. They make life miserable for thousands of Americans. And why does the Republican Party permit them to come in such large and alarming numbers? I will tell you why. You permit it because the steamship companies have found that this traffic in these criminal beings furnishes to them a lucrative trade and they contribute to the campaign fund of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When will this evil end? That is not all that you do. You sell to the foreigner cheaper than you sell to the people at home, and you violate that principle of Scripture which says charity should begin at home. [Laughter and applause.] You sell the farmer's wife a sewing machine here for $29 and you sell the same machine in Scotland or in any other foreign country for $19.

A friend of Mr. BURNETT, of the seventh Alabama district, was in New York some time ago and he saw a sewing machine that he liked very much. Upon inquiry he found that it would cost him $29 to purchase that machine. He decided to do so, and when they asked him for his address, he said he desired to send it to his mother in Edinburgh, Scotland. And then to his surprise he was told that it was not necessary to purchase this machine; that they had sent to Edinburgh, Scotland, machines just like it, and that their agent there would deliver the machine to his mother for $19. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So, Mr. Chairman, this is a sample of what the Republican Party is doing in this country, and the fact that we are disclosing these things and acquainting the people with these facts are the reasons why you are being driven from power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is high time that this Government were being cleared of the barnacles and jellyfish that are upon it. On a trip down Mobile Bay on a revenue cutter I saw at a distance a long silver fish leap from the water high into the air and then strike the water again. I asked the captain of the boat why that fish leaped out of the water, and he said, "Why, he was annoyed by jellyfish and probably covered with them, and he leaped from the water into the sunlight in order to shake them off." My friends, the old ship of state sailing under the management of the Republican Party is so completely covered with jellyfish of the bloodsucking kind—trusts and tariff barons—that it will take heroic efforts on the part of an aroused and indignant electorate to remove the ship of state from the sickening stream of privilege. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A majority of the people of this country are tired of the Republican Party, but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] said here to-day that the people did not trust the Democratic Party. I wonder what more the gentleman needs to convince him that the people do trust the Democratic Party than the victory that we achieved at the polls last year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Has he forgotten that we had an election last November? When he looks upon this side of the House and sees such a large majority of Democrats is he not reminded that something has happened to the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You have fooled the people of this country for a long time.

Mr. Chairman, Sir Walter Scott was anxious to outstrip a classmate in his answers to questions propounded by the teacher. It was a difficult task. One day Scott noticed that when a question was asked the young man he would take hold of a button on his coat and fumble with it while his mind went in search of the answer. Scott cut the button off, and the next time the young man was interrogated by the teacher he missed the button and stood confused and confounded. The spell of the button was broken. Its inspiriting charm had fled and Scott triumphed. The Republican Party has been able to place the western farmer's vote in the Republican column because you led him to believe that your tariff laws brought him prosperity. Whenever the question was asked what have you done for the farmer you took hold of this long-worn and now badly damaged tariff button and said: "We give him prosperity through the protective tariff system." He believed you and voted the Republican ticket; but, sir, the day for you to stand confused and confounded in the presence of the American farmer is near at hand. When this reciprocity agreement with Canada becomes a law, your button is gone, and when the mask of your deception has been torn away and the farmer finds how he has been duped by you, he will vote the Republican ticket no more forever. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on the other side assail this farmers' free list. Did you ever read the Republican free list for the farmer? Well, sir, it is the most grotesque and in many respects the most picturesque counterfeit on a free list that was ever perpetrated upon a free people. Here are some of the things that you have permitted to come into the United States without paying a tariff tax, and all for the benefit of the farmer. Listen to it: Acorns, persimmons, and ipecac. [Laughter and applause.] Beet-root ashes, hog bristles, and pebbles from Brazil. [Laughter.] Seaweeds and croton oil. [Laughter and applause.] Then comes dragon's blood, dried insects, and horsehair. [Laughter and applause.] Then we have dried blood, beeswax, and catgut. [Laughter.] Then comes whalebone, tobacco stems, and human skeletons. [Laughter.] And that is not all. Fishskins, insect eggs, and nux vomica. [Laughter and applause.] Then we have hair, rags, and moss. Seeds of morbid growth, leeches, and lemon peel. [Laughter and applause.] The farmer asked you for a fish and you gave him his skin. [Laughter.] He asked you for a horse and you gave him his hair. And he asked you for a hog and you gave him his bristles. [Laughter and applause.] He asked you for tobacco and you gave him the stems. He asked you for clothes and you gave him rags. [Laughter and applause.] There are some other things on your Payne-Aldrich free list for the farmer. Listen: Manna, balm of Gilead, and sesame. These are on the free list. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, manna is that food that the Almighty rained down from heaven when the children of Israel were about to starve in the wilderness, and I do not blame the Republican Party for putting manna on the free list, for that party knew of the hard times to come under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. And it expected that during the sore trial of the people that before the good God would let them starve he would again perform the miracle of raining down manna from heaven. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Now for balm of Gilead. Mr. Chairman, that stuff has been scarce since Edgar Allan Poe cried from the deepest depths of his sorrowful soul, "Is there no balm in Gilead?" [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Then there is sesame. When I was a boy I read the tales of the Arabian Nights, and I remember there was a gang of hunters or robbers who inhabited a cave, and when one of their number went out in search of food or other things he could not reenter the cave until he gave the password "Sesame." [Laughter.] So, Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party has put on the free list in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law the password of the Arabian Nights. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, let us see what you put on the free list for the rich man. Diamonds, in the rough and cut, and radium. Do you know how much radium costs? A thimble half full of that stuff would cost $1,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And only trust magnates and tariff barons can buy it. So you let that come in free of tariff tax. Then you have diamonds on the free list. Why, a diamond in the rough as big as a goose egg, struck three times with a grinding rock and flashed under a brilliant light would put any Republican's eye out in this House. [Laughter and applause.] How about the farmer? He asked you for free lamp wicks, and you gave him lightning bugs. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] He asked you for free matches and you gave him fox fire. He asked you for the opportunity to buy untaxed kerosene oil, and you gave him croton oil. [Laughter and applause.] He asked you for free pork, and you gave him dried insects. He asked you for free wheat, and you gave him a dose of ipecac. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, let us contrast the Republican Party's treatment of the farmer with the treatment accorded him by the Democratic Party. We are putting agricultural implements on the free list—the things with which the farmer toils in producing the stuff that feeds and clothes the world—and we have put many other necessities on the free list. Here are some of the items on which you tax the farmer in a shameful manner: On $100 worth of harness you collect from him in tariff taxes $16.70, to say nothing of the trust profit, which is at least $15 or more. On $25 worth of buckles—and buckles were discussed here this afternoon—you make him pay a tariff tax of $10.90. On $100 worth of salt in bulk you make the farmer pay in tariff taxes $44.20. No wonder you do not want the farmer to have a free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You let diamonds come in free and you let radium come in free, because the trust kings do not want any tariff tax added to the price of them. But when the farmer asks you to put window glass on the free list, you put $22.85 of tariff taxes on every $50 worth of common window glass that he buys; and on every $50 worth of machinery for the farmer you place $23.05 in tariff taxes. On every $50 worth of iron shovels that he buys you make him pay $15.05 in tariff taxes. On every $50 worth of hoes that he buys you make him pay $15.55 in tariff taxes. On every $50 worth of blankets that he buys you make him pay a tariff tax of $25.85. On every $50 worth of linen wearing apparel you make him pay $18.75 in tariff taxes. On every $50 worth of woolen dress goods you make him pay $25.65 in tariff taxes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] On every $50 worth of flannels that he buys you place a tariff tax of $29.55.

On every $50 worth of ready-made woolen clothing you make him pay $20.25 in tariff taxes. On $50 worth of plain chinaware you make him pay a tariff tax of $17.25. These are a few of the items that I have called your attention to in order that the country may know how you have been imposing upon and oppressing the farmer. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And yet you talk about tariff benefits for the farmer. The farmer feels your tariff blessings about like the old negro did the possum. Old Rastus went out one night and caught a big fat possum. He cleaned him good and put the oven on a bed of rosy coals. And he laid the possum in the oven and put some yam potatoes around him and some butter and pepper and salt. Then old Rastus said: "I'm gwine ter lay down here fer a little while and I'm gwine ter dream erbout eatin' dis possum, and den I'm gwine ter eat 'im shore enuf, and I'll enjoy 'im twice." So old Rastus fell asleep. Sambo came along and smelt the possum cooking. He looked in and saw old Rastus sound asleep. He lifted the oven lid and took the possum out. He was baked brown, smoking and smelling good. Old Sambo ate him. He took some of the grease and smeared it on the mustache of old Rastus and put a little on his chin, a little on his hands, and piled the bones down beside Rastus's head, and departed. Rastus finally awoke and said: "Sholy I a'int eat dat possum. Sholy I a'int eat 'im. But heah's grease on my lips, and grease on my hands, and heah's de bones lyin' by me." Then, pressing his hand gently against his stomach, he said: "If I did eat dat possum he weighs lighter on my constitution and has less influence wid me dan any possum dat I'se ever eat in mah born days." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

So, Mr. Chairman, the tariff-produced prosperity that the Republican Party has handed out to the farmer weighs lighter on his constitution and has less influence with him than any prosperity that he ever felt in his born days. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The Republican Party taxes the farmer and the masses of the people generally in order to make good its contract with the manufacturing trusts, to which it guarantees a reasonable profit. Do you suppose the people of this country are going to permit you to single out one class of individuals and bind the great body of the people to work for them in creating colossal fortunes?

This contract that you entered into with the trust manufacturer to give him a reasonable profit reminds me of old Uncle Ephraim. His master told him to go out and hunt a colt that was missing from the lot. Old Ephraim said, "Yes, sah; I'll go, Massa John, but I jes' nacherally know that I'm gwine to see a ghost on de journey." His master said, "Never you mind about a ghost." Uncle Ephraim said, "Yes, sah; but I'm shore to see one." It was late in the afternoon, and when Uncle Ephraim got over in the woods he heard a dog bark some distance from him. Then he heard something running in the leaves, and he stopped and said, "There it is now." Then he heard a dog bark again. Then he saw a great, big buck coming out of the woods, running toward him. The deer was looking back toward the dog and running sideways toward Uncle Ephraim, and he could see nothing but his side. There was a lane leading down a long ridge, not a great distance from Uncle Ephraim, and there were mock orange trees on either side, so when he started down that lane he had to go to the other end or turn back; there was no getting out along the sides. The deer and Uncle Ephraim darted into the lane about the same time, and the deer, with his great head of horns, was moving with the speed of the wind. Uncle Ephraim, with his hat in his hand and grunting every time he hit the ground, finally got a little in the lead of the deer, and he said to him, "If you expect to run wid me, you'll have to throw dat rocking-chair off yer head." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] To my Republican friends I want to say that if you ever expect to run with us again before the American people, you will have to throw that manufacturer's reasonable-profit rocking-chair off your head. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words regarding bagging and ties. You have been giving the farmers of the West free binding twine for their grain, and you have given them free wire with which to bind their hay, and the farmers of the South have never objected to that. I am in favor of them having free binding twine and free wire for their hay, but I want you to be as fair to the farmers of the South as you have been to the farmers of the West, and give them free bagging and ties. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This bill of ours puts bagging and ties on the free list. Some of you on that side of the House, when the reciprocity agreement with Canada was up for consideration, talked as though you would vote for free bagging and ties if they were put upon that bill. I knew that you were not in earnest—that you were trying to kill that bill with amendments. One of the frankest men on that side of the House—the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]—admitted on this floor that he wanted to load the reciprocity bill down with amendments, so that it would be defeated; and that was the purpose of all of you.

Now that you have an opportunity to vote for free bagging and ties and free agricultural implements you are obeying your trust masters and are opposing the measure. By taxing the farmer on his bagging you have built up a Bagging Trust, and it has our farmers at its mercy. You have denied here that there is a Bagging Trust. I will prove that there is such a trust, and I will show you how it has destroyed competition in the bagging business. Mr. McMillan, of New Orleans, stated to the Ways and Means Committee during the Sixty-first Congress that the American Manufacturing Co., of New York; the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates, of Boston; and the Peru Bagging Manufacturing Co., of Peru, Ind., owned and controlled every mill in America then making bagging for cotton. He said that the first two companies agree at the beginning of each season upon the price to open the market at, and the Peru company follows. Mr. McMillan stated, further, that a few years ago there were several independent mills engaged in making bagging, but that these companies that I have just mentioned managed to put them out of business by underselling them for a little while and embarrassing them financially, so that they were compelled to sell their property, and that these three companies bought them and dismantled them, leaving a clear field for the Bagging Trust. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill in this House, in 1909, Mr. BURLESON, of Texas, one of the best friends that the farmer ever had in Congress, said of cotton ties, that almost the entire output of cotton ties is controlled by the United States Steel Corporation, and that the tariff tax on cotton ties is so high that it shuts out competition and makes the southern farmer pay 25 per cent more for cotton ties than he would have to pay if the tax were removed and competition restored. Our free-list bill has bagging and ties on it and I expect to see it pass this House, but what will the Republican Senate do about it?

Will not you insurgents vote with us for this free list for the farmer? I think some of you will. And if the old guard—the standpatters—get after you about it, come over and join us permanently. They have been trying to lecture some of you of late. If they make it too hard for you over there and undertake to read you out of the old stand-pat party, I imagine some of you will be like old Yad Potter, down in my district, who kept getting drunk and the brethren of the church kept excusing him, until finally they told him that if he got drunk any more they would turn him out of the church. Whereupon Yad said, "Turn me out if you want to, and I will go kerplunk into the Methodist Church." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] So if the stand-pat gang turn you out, just come kerplunk into the Democratic Party. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, a good deal has been said here about promises made to the people. The Republican Party will promise the people anything in campaign times in order to remain in power. But it soon forgets its promises. You all remind me of the old negro in Mississippi who was a candidate for baptism. He stood down by the water's edge with his hand resting against a hickory tree, and the old parson said to him, "Come right in, my brother." But the old fellow had his eyes firmly fixed on something out in the water, and he said, "No; I ain't er comin'." The parson insisted, "Come right in, my brother; come right in." The old negro said, "No; I ain't er comin'." "What is the matter with you? Has your faith stumbled? Don't you remember when the whale swallowed Jonah, God Almighty smote him on the back with a red-handled wagon whip, and the whale cast him up on the sand? Don't you know if your faith is right and an alligator swallows you he will cast you up on the sand?" Whereupon the negro said, "Parson, you may be acquainted with whales, but you don't understand these Mississippi alligators. If ever a Mississippi alligator swallows a Negro, he will go off and go to sleep and forget all about him." [Laughter and applause.]

So, my friends, we are educating the people to the fact that they have not understood these Republicans with regard to making promises. A Republican will make a promise in campaign times, and when he gets in office he goes off and forgets all about the people and the promise he made them. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to have 10 minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is so much to say about the sins of the Republican Party that I can not begin to do justice to the subject. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say one more thing about the foreigners who come here and compete with our home laborers. They take out or send out of the United States every year more than $300,000,000. You are pouring a stream of foreigners in here of more than a million a year. They are taking out more than $300,000,000 of money. Senator Aldrich says that you are squandering $300,000,000 a year, and yet the American people are called upon to meekly submit to this system of robbery and plunder. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I belong to a party, Mr. Chairman, that has lived and battled for the people for more than a hundred years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Other parties have come and gone. The Republican Party came into existence, claiming that its mission was to abolish the slavery of the Negro. You paraded that boast before the American people for years and years. If you have destroyed a form of slavery that existed for 6,000,000 Negro slaves, you have instituted a form of industrial slavery and serfdom in this country that affects 50,000,000 of white people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By your tariff system you are gathering money at the door of every poor man in the country.

You are depriving millions of the necessities of life in order to pile up fortunes for a favored few. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I recall the picture drawn by Senator SMITH of South Carolina. He was standing near Kings Mountain at the close of an autumn day. The sun was sinking in the west and a flood of gold played upon leaves of red and brown and yellow and as he looked upon this lofty mountain, he said, "This is the most gorgeous sight that ever attracted my gaze." Then I turned from the scene and I looked down into the long valley below. The mist and fog had gathered, and darkness had already settled there. The farmers of the valley had retired for the night. Then he said, "How true is this picture to the prosperity of my country, the sun of this tariff-produced prosperity is lighting up the castle-crowned rocks of the trust kings and tariff barons, while over the masses of millions of the plain people there hovers the cloud of distress and over them the darkness of hard times has settled." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I want to see the time come when patriotism will be the thing paramount in the minds and hearts of the American masses. I want to see that time when all men will love the flag, and when Congress shall serve the whole people, and not be given over to legislate reasonable profits into the pockets of trust manufacturers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen have made reference here to the South. I hail from that glorious section of our great country. I am proud that I live in the South.

To you, my Democratic friends, permit me to say that I have seen the time when Republicans, loaded down with campaign funds furnished them by the trust kings and tariff barons, defeated you in the East, in the West, and in the North. I have seen the time when not a single Democratic governor answered to his name in the North, in the East, or in the West, and only a very few Democratic Representatives came here from these sections, but, thank God, the South, that section which gave Jefferson, the father of the Democratic Party, to the Union and to the world, has stood victorious with unfurled flag guarding the sacred ark of our covenant in political affairs. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We saw you battling against the cruel forces that rob and oppress the people, and we saw you pass through the valley of defeat and sore trial, and we said to the faithful Democratic warriors of the North, East, and West, "Fight on and on, our cause is just and victory will come again to the standards that we bear in the name of the people." [Applause on the Democratic side.] You said to us, "Stand firm and fear not. We will keep the faith," and to-day we behold a reunited national Democratic Party controlling the people's branch of Congress, and next year we will drive from power the enemies of the Republic and restore this Government to the people. [Long and loud applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4413, putting agricultural implements and other articles on the free list, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, as follows:

Mr. SHARP, for four days, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, indefinitely, on account of important official business.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday morning next.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not a privileged motion as against the regular order, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the calendar be called.

Mr. DALZELL. The regular order is the bill the House is now considering.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The House has just disposed of the bill for the present that is now being considered. If the House desires to take it up again, it can.

Mr. DALZELL. General debate is still under way. It is not the only bill on the calendar. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if his motion prevails we will not have an opportunity to consider the pension bill on Monday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that there is no pension bill in order on Monday.

Mr. DALZELL. And I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees is in order, and the pension bill is the second bill on that calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman has overlooked the fact that under the rule of the House a bill must be on the calendar a certain number of days, and that the pension bill has not been on the calendar the necessary 7 days. It must have been before the committee for 15 days, and it must be on the calendar for 7 days.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman will bear with me, I will read the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well.

Mr. DALZELL (reading):

Any Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to discharge a committee from further consideration of any public bill or joint resolution which may have been referred to such committee 15 days prior thereto. All such motions shall be entered in the Journal and printed on a calendar to be known as a Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees. Immediately after the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall have been called on any Monday, it shall be in order to call up any such motion which shall have been entered at least 7 days prior thereto.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is why I called the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. DALZELL. I have been informed that this motion has been entered for 7 days.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will examine the calendar, he will see that it has not.

Mr. DALZELL. It has been on the calendar since April 25.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Always in estimating the number of days you exclude the first or the last, include one and exclude the other.

Mr. DALZELL. There are bills on the calendar that could be considered on Monday. The immigration bill is on the calendar.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But the point the gentleman was making was that we were trying to postpone the pension bill.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman did not say so. That is mere inference from what the gentleman did say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understood the gentleman, he stated he objected to taking a recess, because it would displace the pension bill. I call his attention to the fact that it will not.

Mr. DALZELL. I did not give it as a reason at all. I insist upon my point of order, that this motion is not in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that this does not displace the pension bill, and I am desirous of having full latitude of debate. I do not think it is necessary to take up the Discharge Calendar on Monday. I think it is better for the House to proceed on Monday with the consideration of this bill. Now, it might set aside some bills that are on the Discharge Calendar on Monday. It does not set aside the pension bill. I have tried to exercise due latitude and to give every man in the House, whether on this side or the other, full opportunity for debate. I am anxious to have the bill run along and to have debate disposed of at as early a date next week as possible.

As the Members of the House do not desire to stay here after 5 o'clock in the evening, I would like to have the morning sessions begin at 11 o'clock, and thus get in six hours of debate. That is my purpose. I regret very much that the gentleman should see proper to try to interfere with it.

Mr. CANNON. But does the gentleman seek to cut the House off from that privilege which has been wrung from an unwilling majority, the Calendar for Discharge of Committees, when 92,000,000 of people are seeking to have a majority work their will under a rule obtained through a great revolution? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will say to the gentleman that while I consider the Discharge Calendar a very important part of the rules of this House, and a right every Member ought to exercise, yet we are seeking to lower the taxes for 92,000,000 of people, and I consider that of more purpose. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be candid with the House. I made the point of order for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Missouri, that we might have an opportunity to consider on Monday the pension bill, which is on the Discharge Calendar. I was mistaken as to that, and I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House do take a recess until Monday, May 1, 1911, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House stood in recess until Monday, May 1, 1911, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speakers' table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, copies of orders and regulations relating to the use of waters of the Rio Grande and tributaries for irrigation purposes (H. Doc. No. 39); to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Chief Justice of the Court of Claims, requesting the return of certain findings transmitted to Congress March 16, 1908 (H. Doc. No. 38); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 8072) to amend an act relating to soldiers and sailors' homesteads; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 8073) to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station at a point in or near the city of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 8074) to amend section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SHERLEY: A bill (H. R. 8075) to amend section 953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8076) to amend section 1537 of an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BEALL of Texas (by request): A bill (H. R. 8077) to define the true intent and meaning of section 48 of the act of August 28, 1894, levying taxes upon distilled spirits, to regulate the business of reclaiming waste spirits from empty whisky barrels, and to define the status of persons engaged in such business; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 8078) to prohibit interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations, and to remove obstructions thereto, and to prohibit the transmission of certain messages by telegraph, telephone, cable, or other means of communication between States and Territories and foreign nations; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 8079) to place on the free list fence wire; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 8080) to divide the State of Oregon into two judicial districts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KOPP: A bill (H. R. 8081) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Lancaster, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8082) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Reedburg, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 8083) for the extension of the post office over the entire business of public transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 8084) to place agricultural implements on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 8085) to regulate length of service in tropical countries of enlisted men and to effect economy in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8086) to regulate the payment of travel allowances and to effect economy in the Military Establishment; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8087) to regulate the issue of clothing and payment of clothing allowances in the Army and to decrease expense therein; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8088) to consolidate departments, to simplify administration, and to effect economy in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8089) to fix the term of enlistment in the Army and to provide a reserve corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 8090) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8091) to establish a fish-cultural station in the county of Cumberland, in the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 8092) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission by giving to that body the power to fix reasonable rates, based upon physical valuations, to be charged by railroad, express, telegraph, and telephone companies and all other common carriers, in the transaction of interstate business, and also giving to said commission the power to fix reasonable prices to be charged by persons or corporations when found to be exercising a monopoly in the interstate sale of any commodity; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 8093) to establish a fish-cultural station in the southern section of the State of Missouri; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. COX of Indiana: Resolution (H. Res. 140) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to have necessary printing done; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. SHERLEY: Resolution (H. Res. 141) relative to the addition of a new rule to the House rules; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GARNER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) requesting the President to consider the expediency of effecting a treaty with European powers providing for the neutralization of the Philippine Islands and to protect an independent government there when established; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. AUSTIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 84) for the appointment of a commission to investigate the status of the full-blood Indians of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 8094) granting an increase of pension to John A. King; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY: A bill (H. R. 8095) granting an increase of pension to Jane E. Wood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8096) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Carson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8097) granting an increase of pension to James S. Middaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8098) granting an increase of pension to Susan Fairchild; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8099) granting an increase of pension to James McCormick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 8100) for the relief of the estate of M. R. Buchanan; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COPLEY: A bill (H. R. 8101) granting an increase of pension to Henry Abrams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8102) granting a pension to Nancy E. Hopkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 8103) granting an increase of pension to James H. Maclay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8104) granting an increase of pension to Michael Broadbeck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 8105) granting an increase of pension to John Moyer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8106) granting an increase of pension to Salathiel S. Stalnaker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8107) granting a pension to Alfred J. Osborn; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8108) granting a pension to William M. Pomroy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARDWICK: A bill (H. R. 8109) for the relief of the heirs of Larkin Nash, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 8110) granting an increase of pension to Lucen T. Vance; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8111) granting a pension to Virginia Norris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 8112) for the relief of the Wilmerding-Loewe Co., of San Francisco, Cal.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 8113) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Sageser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 8114) for the relief of the heirs of Adolphus Dobke; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: A bill (H. R. 8115) granting an increase of pension to Zimri Harrison; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8116) granting an increase of pension to William B. Whitney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8117) granting an increase of pension to Richard Elliott; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINDSAY: A bill (H. R. 8118) granting an increase of pension to Samuel W. Keymer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 8119) granting an increase of pension to Polk D. Southard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 8120) granting an increase of pension to William G. Baker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8121) for the relief of Charles F. Parker; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PALMER: A bill (H. R. 8122) granting an increase of pension to William W. Padgett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8123) granting a pension to Sarah Werkheiser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 8124) granting an increase of pension to Florence S. Green; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POST: A bill (H. R. 8125) granting an increase of pension to John Niar; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8126) granting an increase of pension to Albert Fletcher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRINCE: A bill (H. R. 8127) granting an increase of pension to John L. Temple; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8128) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Scott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 8129) granting a pension to Charles Thomas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8130) authorizing the payment to the widow of Dorence Atwater of compensation for services rendered the United States of America; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 8131) granting an increase of pension to Jasper N. Kelly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8132) granting an increase of pension to John W. Rowe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8133) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Weaver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 8134) granting an increase of pension to Henry Dye; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8135) granting an increase of pension to P. W. McReynolds; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 8136) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Statler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Papers to accompany bill to increase pension of Thomas A. Dobbins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of John L. Brown and 9 other merchants of Waynesburg, Ohio, against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: Petition of the Sioux Falls and Vermilion conferences, Norwegian and German Lutherans, at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., protesting against the passage of Senate bill 255, as contrary to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURLESON: Resolutions, petitions, letters, etc., protesting against the 10-cent tax on colored oleomargarine, and asking Congress to repeal it; also asking Congress to investigate and endeavor to check the spread of tuberculosis and other diseases carried through dairy products were presented by organizations throughout the country as follows: International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, Local 433, Walter Constance, recording secretary, Springfield, Mo.; Trades and Labor Council, Charles E. Anderson, secretary, 32 Middle Street, Lowell, Mass.; Progressive Study Club, Mrs. P. R. Noble, secretary, Revillo, S. Dak.; Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, Local Union No. 20, J. P. Edwards, recording secretary, box 636, Westfield, N. J.; Railway Mail Association, Women's Auxiliary, Mrs. T. B. Walker, Mrs. W. S. Kirk, and Mrs. J. M. Miller, committee, Denison, Tex.; Woman's Club, Mrs. Ida D. Bird, corresponding secretary, Kankakee, Ill.; National Brotherhood of Operative Potters, Local No. 24, W. A. Aughinbaugh, secretary, Wellsville, Ohio; Women's Club, Mrs. M. A. Mann, Everett, Wash.; International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Subdivision No. 475, J. S. Gallegly, secretary and treasurer, Smithville, Tex.; Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, Branch No. 95, W. H. Gass, secretary, Brackenridge, Pa.; Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Independence Lodge, No. 483, C. O. Torgeson, recording secretary, 1419 South Main Street, Crookston, Minn.; Granite Cutters' International Association of America, Cape Ann Branch, Gloucester and Rockport, Mass., Abraham Lurvey, corresponding secretary, Pigeon Cove, Mass.; Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, Local Union No. 713, Robert Hamilton, president, and F. W. White, recording secretary, 34 Franklin Street, Port Jervis, N. Y.; Chester Federation of Labor, Plumbers, Gas and Steam Fitters Local No. 403, George P. Smith, 1309 West Third Street, Chester, Pa.; Trades and Labor Assembly, Savannah, Ga.; Racine Retail Merchants' Association, Racine, Wis.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of the estate of M. R. Buchanan, of Rutherford County, State of Tennessee; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FOCHT: Resolutions of Washington Camp, No. 603, New Columbia, and Washington Camp, No. 321, Huntingdon, Pa., Patriotic Order Sons of America, favoring the illiteracy test; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. FRENCH: Petition asking that a law be passed authorizing the payment of the Coeur d'Alene Indians for certain lands within the former Coeur d'Alene Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, petition of numerous citizens of Idaho, against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of Chicago shoe manufacturers, in opposition to placing shoes on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: Petition of Sturgis Grange, Sturgis, Mich., against Canadian reciprocity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HANNA: Petition of citizens of Gem, Medina, and Pigree, N. Dak., against Canadian reciprocity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of citizens of Eckman, N. Dak., favoring the passage of the Hanna bill, providing for paying additional compensation to the rural free-delivery carriers, and T. F. Woods, of North Dakota, against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. KENDALL: Petition of citizens of Ottumwa, Iowa, against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: Petition of L. E. Henry, Jacob Brown, and C. E. Bell, of Sauk Rapids, Minn., favoring the passage of the Sherwood bill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Renneby, Minn., protesting against sending troops to the Mexican border; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PALMER: Resolutions of Washington Camp, No. 541, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Lehighton, Pa., urging passage of illiteracy test; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. PRAY: Petition of 39 citizens of Park County, Mont., favoring the parcels-post law; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. REILLY: Petition of James L. Cowles, secretary and treasurer of Postal Progress League, favoring cheap parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Papers to accompany H. R. 7577, for the relief of L. C. Chisholm; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SIMS: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Jasper N. Kelley, Linden, Tenn., and John W. Rowe, Hollow Rock, Tenn.; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEDEMEYER: Petition of various citizens of Northville, Mich., against parcels post; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 1, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution passed by the Fifty-seventh General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 14.

Whereas the Sixty-first Congress of the United States of America at its first session begun and holden at Washington, in the District of Columbia, on Monday, the 15th day of March, 1909, by joint resolution proposed an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid in all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution:

"ART. XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration."

Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Tennessee, That said amendment to the Constitution of the United States be and is hereby ratified; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolution be forwarded by his excellency the governor of Tennessee to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively.

Adopted April 7, 1911.

[SEAL.]

N. BAXTER, Jr.,
Speaker of the Senate.
A. M. LEACH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved, April 11, 1911.

BEN W. HOOPER, Governor.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted by the Twentieth Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution, favoring an appropriation for the erection of a memorial to the signers of the Declaration of Independence, to be placed in the Capitol Building, which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the City Council of Helena, Mont., relative to the persecution of American citizens of the Jewish faith in Russia, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER presented memorials of the Trades Assembly of Fort Edward, N. Y.; of the Village Board of Trustees of Fort Edward, N. Y.; and of sundry citizens of Keene, Swanzey, and Canaan, in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the congregation of the Fifth Seventh Day Adventist Church of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of the National Association of Tanners, remonstrating against leather being placed on the free list, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a resolution, in the nature of a memorial, of the German-American Alliance of the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURNHAM presented a memorial of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union of Boston, Mass., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Canaan, East Swanzey, and Swanzey, in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a resolution, in the nature of a petition, of Lew Gove Post, No. 100, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Manhattan, Kans., praying for the passage of the old-age pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GAMBLE presented memorials of Black Hills Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Whitewood, and of sundry farmers and business men of Ottumwa, Gann Valley, Desmet, and Brown County, all in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Progressive Study Club of Revillo, S. Dak., praying for the repeal of the present oleomargarine law, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Plymouth, Mich., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of the State Board of Agriculture, of sundry employees of the Central Paper Co. of Muskegon, and of sundry citizens of Otsego, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the National Business League of America, praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the State Pilots' Association of Florida, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further regulate pilotage by the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey presented petitions of Washington Camp No. 22, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Jersey City; of Washington Camp No. 148, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Succasunna; and of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Hoboken, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch No. 14, Glass-Bottle Blowers' Association, of Woodbury, N. J., praying for the repeal of the present oleomargarine law, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the German-American Alliance of New Jersey, praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 152, Patrons of Husbandry, of New Market, N. J., and a memorial of Riverside Grange, No. 125, Patrons of Husbandry, of Three Bridges, N. J., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of John C. Lennon, of Newark, N. J., and of sundry citizens of Wharton, N. J., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial from the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 2.

To the President of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent:

Whereas the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation was opened to entry and settlement on May 2, 1910, to those citizens whose rights to select homesteads therein had been previously determined by drawing;

Whereas certain of these homesteaders made their selections on land bordering on the St. Joe River within said reservation, having taken up about 6,500 acres;

Whereas a temporary easement had been granted by a former Secretary of the Interior, permitting the flooding of these lands along the St. Joe River has been revoked by the present Secretary of the Interior, but as yet no steps have been taken by the officials of the National Government to afford adequate relief to these homesteaders, whose homes and health have been put in jeopardy on account of this temporary grant; and

Whereas the testimony taken at the hearing ordered by the Secretary of the Interior upon the matter of revoking this easement and now on file in his office will show the conditions which now confront these homesteaders, but unless prompt and immediate relief is given they will not be able to do scarcely, if any, tilling of the soil this spring, and in some cases none at all, owing to the flooding of these lands, and also preventing them from making those improvements required under the homestead laws, and can not maintain themselves or their families as a result of these conditions: Now therefore

Your memorialist earnestly urges that relief be granted these homesteaders by virtue of the executive power vested in you as the President of the United States of America, and your memorialist will ever pray.

This memorial passed the house of representatives on the 2d day of March, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 3d day of March, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within memorial No. 2 originated in the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Idaho during the eleventh session.

[SEAL.] JAMES H. WALLIS,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BORAH. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 6.

Be it resolved by the senate (house of representatives concurring):

Whereas under the present internal-revenue laws of the United States the Government of the United States sells to any person applying therefor a license to sell intoxicating liquors in any State, or division of the State, regardless of State laws regulating or prohibiting the liquor traffic; and

Whereas it is manifest that the sale of such internal-revenue license authorizing the sale of liquor in States, or portions of States, where the sale of the same is prohibited by the State laws, retards and interferes with the proper enforcement of such State laws: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Idaho (the house of representatives concurring herein), That our Senators and Representative in Congress be requested to do everything in their power to have the internal-revenue laws of the United States so amended that United States licenses shall not be sold or issued to any person to sell any intoxicating liquors in any State, or portion of a State, where the sale of such liquors is prohibited by the State laws. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Senators and Representative in Congress by the secretary of state.

The within senate concurrent resolution No. 6 passed the senate on the 15th day of February, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

The within senate concurrent resolution No. 6 passed the house of representatives on the 24th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within senate concurrent resolution No. 6 originated in the senate of the eleventh session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

[SEAL.] CHAS. W. DEMPSTER,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial from the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 9.

To the honorable the President of the United States, the honorable the Secretary of the Interior, and the honorable the Secretary of Agriculture:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas townships 54 and 55 north, range 2 east, Boise meridian, State of Idaho, are included in the Coeur d'Alene National Forest Reserve, and the land in said townships was burned over by the forest fires of 1910 and practically denuded of all live timber, and it is clearly appearing that whatever value shall be saved from the burned timber must be saved within the next year; and

Whereas the lands included within the said townships are for the most part settled upon by homesteaders who entered upon the lands prior to the including of the area within the national reserve; and

Whereas the Government is resisting the claim of the homesteaders to the said lands, and by reason thereof the settlers have been forced to incur heavy expense and are in uncertainty as to their rights; and

Whereas the settlers have suffered heavy loss by reason of the fires of 1910, which swept over these lands;

We therefore pray that townships 54 and 55 north, range 2 east of Boise meridian, be eliminated from the Coeur d'Alene National Forest Reserve and that they be made available for homestead entry at once: Be it

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit a copy of this memorial to each of the following officers: The President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each Member of the Idaho congressional delegation.

This memorial passed the house of representatives on the 17th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 1st day of March, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that this joint memorial originated in the house of representatives of the Legislature of the State of Idaho during the eleventh session.

[SEAL.] JAMES H. WALLIS,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial from the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas a bill is now pending in Congress having for its purpose the guaranteeing to the respective States the fullest jurisdiction over all intoxicants consigned to them from the time they enter the State, said bill being known as the Miller-Curtis bill, being bill No. 23641, House of Representatives, and bill No. 7528, Senate; and

Whereas we believe that under the present laws the State is seriously hampered in carrying out its policies relative to the liquor traffic and that the passage of such act would be of great benefit to the several States: Now therefore

Your memorialists urgently recommend that said bill be enacted into law.

The secretary of state of the State of Idaho is hereby instructed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and copies of the same to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

This senate joint memorial No. 4 passed the senate on the 9th day of February, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

This senate joint memorial No. 4 passed the house of representatives on the 24th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the above senate joint memorial No. 4 originated in the senate during the eleventh session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

[SEAL.]

CHAS. W. DEMPSTER,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of the Trades Assembly of Fort Edward, N. Y., and a memorial of the Village Board of Trustees of Fort Edward, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CURTIS presented memorials of Highland Grange, No. 249, Patrons of Husbandry, of Scranton; of the Farmers' Club of Burlingame, and of sundry citizens of Glen Elder, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES presented a petition of N. B. Page Post, No. 94, Department of Washington and Alaska, of Cashmere, Wash., and a petition of Green Lake Post, No. 112, Department of Washington and Alaska, Grand Army of the Republic, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of Linnea Grange, No. 244, of Mount Vernon; Local Grange No. 221, of Bayview; Pine Lake Grange, No. 324, of Monohan, and of Sulphur Creek Grange, No. 391, of Riffe, of the Patrons of Husbandry, and of sundry citizens of Freeman, Lowell, and Everett, all in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oakfield, Germania, Forest, Byson, Garfield, Eden, Ashford, Friendship, Eldorado, Osceola, Fond du Lac, and Waupun, all in the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

LANDS ALONG ANACOSTIA RIVER.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate resolution No. 15, submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 13th ultimo, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows (S. Doc. No. 19):

Resolved, That the letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia transmitting the second report of Mr. Hugh T. Taggart, special counsel, on the ownership of lands and riparian rights along the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia, be printed, with accompanying illustrations, as a document.

PRINTING OF CANADIAN CUSTOMS TARIFF ACT.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing, I ask that the Canadian customs tariff act of 1907 be printed as a Senate document (S. Doc. No. 15). It will be found on pages 102 to 126.

Mr. SHIVELY. What is the act?

Mr. SMOOT. The Canadian customs tariff act of 1907. It is the existing tariff act of Canada.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, and it was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the Canadian customs tariff act of 1907 be printed as a Senate document.

RECIPROCITY TREATY OF 1854.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I ask to have printed as a public document a history of the reciprocity treaty of 1854 with Canada by Mr. Chalfant Robinson (S. Doc. No. 17). It is found in his book, beginning with chapter 1 to the end of that article.

Mr. SHIVELY. I thought there was an order made by the Senate the other day for printing the history of that treaty. I believe, however, it had reference only to the debates in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. It had reference only to the debates in the Senate and House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; only to the debates in the Senate.

Mr. SHIVELY. Only to the Senate, as I recall it.

Mr. SMOOT. This is an article by Mr. Chalfant Robinson, a very eminent writer.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, and it was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the history of the reciprocity treaty of 1854 with Canada, by Chalfant Robinson, be printed, with accompanying illustrations, as a Senate document.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, when these publications which have been ordered will be likely to be ready for use?

Mr. SMOOT. In relation to the order that was made last Friday, that matter was referred to the Finance Committee, and as soon as they meet they will doubtless take immediate action to have the order of the Senate carried out. The orders which have been authorized by the Senate to-day will be ready for the Senate within four or five days.

Mr. STONE. How long does the Senator think it will take to print the documents which have been ordered to be printed?

Mr. SMOOT. Only the time required to get the contents ready for publication.

ALASKA COAL-LAND CASES.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing, I ask to have printed as a Senate document a decision rendered by Judge Hanford, of the United States district court for the western district of Washington, in reference to coal-land laws of Alaska (S. Doc. No. 18).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. BORAH. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 39) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if it is not rather premature for a report to come from a committee whose jurisdiction commenced to-day at 12 o'clock? We passed a resolution for the organization of the committees in which it was provided that their jurisdiction as committees should commence to-day.

Mr. BORAH. It is now 30 minutes after 12.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I merely make the suggestion in the interest of orderly procedure that a committee having charge of a measure of this importance should at least give time and opportunity to Members of this body to present their views with regard to it to that committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this joint resolution was considered by the committee which had charge of it, and the joint resolution has been reported in the orderly course of business. I have no doubt that the senior Senator from Idaho will have ample time to present his views to the Senate regarding it, but as we had no request from him and no supposition that he desired to come before the committee, of course we did not wait for him.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely desired that it should not appear in the RECORD that no notice was taken of this pauper's burial. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. There was no danger of that happening while the senior Senator from Idaho was here.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate I desire to ask a further question. Has the Committee on the Judiciary had a meeting for the consideration of this joint resolution since it was a legal committee at 12 o'clock to-day?

Mr. BORAH. I do not remember at just what time the committee adjourned, but we had a regular called meeting of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Since 12 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. No; not since 12 o'clock.

Mr. HEYBURN. You were not a committee until 12 o'clock, because we said so by resolution. I want the RECORD straight upon this question. I may want to move to rerefer the joint resolution to the committee.

Mr. BORAH. I understand it is always within the power of the Senator to move to recommit.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I call attention again to the fact that, while the Senate committees have been reorganized by a resolution, the old organization of the Senate was continued by a resolution adopted at the last session. So there was no necessity for the reorganization of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, although it did meet this morning under the new arrangement and the new assignment, and agreed to report the joint resolution favorably.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the resolution continuing the committees was subject to the action of the Senate. The Senate has acted and rescinded the original resolution continuing the committees and provided for the time when they should take jurisdiction as committees. So that until 12 o'clock to-day there was no Judiciary Committee authorized to sit and direct a report to be made, and whatever meeting may have been held this morning was merely a meeting of individual Senators, but they had no authority or jurisdiction to act upon this question and to instruct any member of the committee to make a report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

PROPOSED COMMISSION ON COMMISSIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on April 20 I introduced a bill (S. 1876) to provide for a commission to investigate commissions and to make recommendations concerning the same, and had it referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures. That committee has since then ceased to exist. I do not know whether the introduction of the bill frightened the committee out of existence or not. I rise now for the purpose of reintroducing the bill, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The bill (S. 1885) to provide for a commission to investigate commissions and to make recommendations concerning the same was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. The Senator from Mississippi has just stated that recently the Committee on Public Expenditures has gone out of existence. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire, as this is the first intimation I have heard of it, when that was accomplished and how.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was the judgment of the committee on committees of both sides of the Chamber that the committee had not done anything to justify its continuance, and it was dropped from the list.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me one moment, I will say that I greatly regret that that was done. I realize, of course, that the Committee on Public Expenditures was not made an active committee, but the reason why it was not made an active committee was because the acting chairman of that committee did not call the committee together. That committee was devised for a great and useful purpose, and that purpose ought to have been pursued and the results expected from it ought to have been accomplished.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senate that the acting chairman is not now a member of the body and can not answer for himself. I apprehend that he did all he could to put life into that committee, but it was dead from its birth. I think it is a post-mortem on the part of the Senator to discuss the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say upon that subject the purpose of that committee was to determine upon the budget of the Government and to inquire into the public expenditures with a view to so limiting the expenditures of the various departments as to square our expenditures with our income, a thing which has not been accomplished. It was expected that whilst the committee itself was to be composed of the chairmen of the appropriation committees of the Senate and a certain number of other Senators, the chairman himself should not be the chairman of any appropriation committee, but should be a Senator who would be unembarrassed by any other duty and who would attend thoroughly to the duties of the Committee on Public Expenditures. No chairman of that committee was ever appointed or selected. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations assumed the position of acting chairman, and we went on practically without effective organization. It was called together on only two or three occasions, if my memory is right, and we started then inquiries regarding matters which would, in my judgment, have had far-reaching results. The creation of that committee was considered a businesslike thing. I can recall that the then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations urged this side of the Chamber to appoint strong and experienced men upon that committee, stating that the purpose of it was to make it a great and efficient body.

If that committee has proved its incompetency it has not been because of the lack of capacity or the lack of effort upon the part of the members of that committee, but because the acting chairman of the committee was so absorbed in other duties that he failed to call its members together.

I hope that this matter will come up again for consideration, and that that committee, or some committee similar to it in its duties, will be restored, and that we will have the great work of coordinating the various appropriation committees which are now acting independently in some such way as to make the expenditures of our Government square with the receipts of our Government and to promote economy and efficiency in every department.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I desire to say that the minority had no part or parcel in the creation of this committee or in its abolition. When the makeup of the committees was being considered the chairman of the steering committee of the majority party informed me that that committee was to be abolished. I made no issue about it. It had been created by the majority party after the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] had stated on the floor of the Senate that the expenditures of the Government could be decreased $300,000,000 per annum by proper attention to the appropriations.

This committee, as I understood it, was created to bring about that great economy—$300,000,000 per annum. We all know that it failed in the accomplishment of any such purpose, and I understood that the majority party which had created the committee had come to the conclusion that it was useless and had determined to abolish it. I was notified that it was to be abolished and I accepted it as the edict of the majority party without going into a discussion of the wisdom or unwisdom of the course pursued by the majority party. It was their responsibility, and they disposed of it. Whether they disposed of it wisely or not it is useless to discuss. I simply wish to let the responsibility for the creation of the committee and for its abolition rest with the majority party without accepting any part of the responsibility for what was done in either case.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator, if I may, whether he made any objection to the abolishment of the committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not. I stated distinctly that I made no objection and I did not discuss it. I was notified that it was to be done. It had been, as far as I know, absolutely useless, and I was not surprised that it was abolished.

Mr. WARREN. I had no hand in the formation of that committee two years ago, although placed upon it. When calls for meetings were made the committee was in attendance and was duly organized as a committee and with subcommittees. I did not understand that there was to be any other action, so far as the chairman was concerned, than that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should act as the chairman of the committee.

At one of the meetings of that committee a number of subcommittees were appointed. The several chairmen of the subcommittees were selected from Senators who were not chairmen of appropriating committees, or, to be more explicit, members of committees in charge of general appropriation bills. Each subcommittee chairman, being a nonmember of an appropriating committee, had on his subcommittee as associate members two or three of the members who were on the corresponding appropriating committee.

The subcommittee to which the bills I had charge of were referred, and whose chairman was the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], met as directed to do and considered such bills as should be considered by that subcommittee. I do not know as to the other subcommittees.

At another meeting of the full committee we provided for a joint committee of the House and the Senate to take up the whole matter of expenditures, especially as to the expenditures of the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the departments. We could get no cooperation on the House side. The newspapers stated, while the Members of the present House were in conference providing for their committees, that there would be a committee on public expenditures on that side. But after due consideration, as I am informed, the Members of the House of Representatives decided that it was unnecessary, or, if necessary, it was not the time to consider it, and passed it over, leaving the Senate where it was before, without any chance of cooperation through its committee with a corresponding committee on the House side.

Appropriation and revenue bills originate in the other House, and if we are to have such a committee in the Senate as the Senator from Nevada suggests it is vastly more important that there should be such a committee on the House side. That body formed no such committee in this Congress, and therefore the members of the committee on committees were, I think, unanimous in deciding that it was unnecessary and useless to continue the committee on this side without the cooperation of the other House.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am glad to know that the minority is able to acquit itself of any responsibility for the destruction of this committee.

In reply to the Senator from Wyoming, who declares that the members of this committee were practically unanimous that there was no reason for the continued existence of the committee, I have to say that I have no knowledge of any meeting of that committee at which any such question was discussed. I think the Senator must rely for his view on the expressions of individual Senators in conversation with himself, for certainly there was no action of the committee upon that subject.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nevada must not misunderstand me. I was speaking of the committee on committees, which had that matter under consideration, and not of the members of the former committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I thought the Senator referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures.

The President of the United States has now for the first time in recent experience, so far as I know, sought to bring about the coordination and cooperation of the various departments with a view to reducing public expenditures and with a view to securing a well-defined budget, a thing which we have not as yet secured. This matter, as we all know, has been one of Cabinet discussion. The chiefs of the various departments have been brought into cooperation with a view to making a reduction of the public expenditures and with a view to increasing the efficiency of the various departments. The President of the United States, acting first upon his own initiative, and afterwards, I believe, with the authority of Congress, opened at the White House itself a bureau or service, of which Mr. Cleveland is the head. Mr. Cleveland, with a corps of experienced men, is now making a study of this important question. In connection with that work the Committee on Public Expenditures of the Senate was organized.

At that time the then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was impressed with the importance of such an organization. Years ago the Committee on Appropriations had charge of all the appropriations of the Government, the appropriations for the different departments coming under the jurisdiction of subcommittees of that committee. Later on the jurisdiction of the general Committee on Appropriations was gradually diminished by the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and other committees assuming, with the sanction of the Senate, jurisdiction of the appropriation bills which referred to matters under their charge. Thus gradually the Appropriations Committee of the Senate was weakened in its power of making a study of the entire field of appropriations and of parceling out the public moneys to each department according to some well-defined plan of fair apportionment.

The result was that each independent committee, reaching out for power and an extension of authority and jurisdiction, as committees always do, was increasing the appropriations, and the committees were in a race with each other as to which could get the most money from the Federal Treasury. This was also the condition of the departments themselves. They were not working together with a view to securing efficiency and economy in the general public expenditures, but each department was reaching out for an enlargement of its jurisdiction, for an increase of its force, and for an increase of the appropriations coming to it. We all recall how the then Senator from Iowa, Mr. Allison, called attention to this as a gradual weakening of the power of the Senate through its Committee on Appropriations over the entire field of appropriations, and it has been suggested that we should resume the old practice, take away from these several committees the power of appropriation, and confine them simply to the duty of reporting bills authorizing public works or creating public bureaus and services, leaving to the general Committee on Appropriations, with the aid of subcommittees, to prepare the appropriation bills for each department and each service of the Government.

Now, as a substitute for that, the suggestion of a committee on public expenditures was made, which committee was to embrace all the chairmen of the various committees which had jurisdiction of appropriation bills, so as to bring into cooperation the chairmen of these various committees for consultation and to impress them, and through them the committees of which they were chairmen, and to animate them all by a common purpose of efficiency and economy. To that committee were added certain men; and I recall that the then Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, was particularly insistent that men of large experience and capacity should be put upon that committee. That committee met. My recollection is that the purpose of that committee was not that its chairman should be the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but that he should be one selected from those Members who were not chairmen of any of the committees having charge of appropriation bills, so that we would have a chairman not charged with responsibility in any other committee, who would see to it that there were regular meetings and that the attention of the committee was called to matters properly coming within its jurisdiction.

So far as I am concerned, my objection from the first was to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations being installed as acting chairman of the Public Expenditures Committee, for his hands were full with the duties of the Committee on Appropriations. This was the primary difficulty, and owing to this the committee was not made efficient; matters were not brought up there which ought to have been brought up. The cooperation of the legislative branch of the Government with the executive branch of the Government in promoting efficiency and economy was not accomplished. The majority party having urged this reform clearly in the line of business efficiency, having failed to do the least thing to carry out the purpose of the organization of that committee, now comes and admits its incompetency, proposes to throw down the entire work, and to abolish this committee. So far as I am concerned, I wish to raise my protest against this action.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 1784) authorizing the acceptance of the dedication of certain land for a street, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1785) to amend section 647, chapter 18, Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to annual statements of insurance companies;

A bill (S. 1786) to provide for an addition to the courthouse in the District of Columbia for the accommodation of the juvenile court and the municipal court of the said district (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 1787) to amend "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1906 (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 1788) granting an increase of pension to Sophronia E. Sawyer;

A bill (S. 1789) granting an increase of pension to Harriet T. Summers; and

A bill (S. 1790) granting an increase of pension to Josephine C. Allyn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 1791) to correct the military record of Henry Duffey (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1792) to correct the military record of Adam D. Shriner; and

A bill (S. 1793) to correct the military record of Samuel J. Kearnes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1794) granting a pension to Jennie Dunn;

A bill (S. 1795) granting a pension to Lucy J. Parker;

A bill (S. 1796) granting an increase of pension to W. R. Foote;

A bill (S. 1797) granting a pension to Charles A. Rupert;

A bill (S. 1798) granting an increase of pension to Henry R. Warren;

A bill (S. 1799) granting an increase of pension to David Collins;

A bill (S. 1800) granting a pension to James H. Seward;

A bill (S. 1801) granting a pension to Anna E. Warden;

A bill (S. 1802) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Morrow;
A bill (S. 1803) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Gray;
A bill (S. 1804) granting a pension to Katherine Van Strate;
A bill (S. 1805) granting a pension to Mary A. Dawes;
A bill (S. 1806) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Wiggins;
A bill (S. 1807) granting a pension to Emeline C. Seger;
A bill (S. 1808) granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Vahue;
A bill (S. 1809) granting a pension to Samuel Limenstall;
A bill (S. 1810) granting a pension to Leonard C. Wiswell;
A bill (S. 1811) granting a pension to Emma J. Pride;
A bill (S. 1812) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Barton;
A bill (S. 1813) granting an increase of pension to Eunice C. Wickware;
A bill (S. 1814) granting a pension to Helen Mirrin;
A bill (S. 1815) granting a pension to John C. Hurst;
A bill (S. 1816) granting an increase of pension to George M. Horton;
A bill (S. 1817) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Palmer;
A bill (S. 1818) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Stroup;
A bill (S. 1819) granting a pension to Archie H. Wright;
A bill (S. 1820) granting a pension to Cynthia A. Slayton;
A bill (S. 1821) granting an increase of pension to Geraldine Tift;
A bill (S. 1822) granting an increase of pension to Albert L. T. Bush;
A bill (S. 1823) granting an increase of pension to Anthony Peterson;
A bill (S. 1824) granting an increase of pension to George Alexander;
A bill (S. 1825) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Philbrick;
A bill (S. 1826) granting a pension to Sarah J. Fitzgibbon;
A bill (S. 1827) granting a pension to Sarah J. Fix;
A bill (S. 1828) granting a pension to Mary Caroline Douglas;
A bill (S. 1829) granting an increase of pension to George A. Brown;
A bill (S. 1830) granting a pension to W. H. Rugg;
A bill (S. 1831) granting an increase of pension to Jane E. Ecker;
A bill (S. 1832) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin S. Whitman;
A bill (S. 1833) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Graham;
A bill (S. 1834) granting a pension to Louisa Moorman;
A bill (S. 1835) granting an increase of pension to Frank La Flame;
A bill (S. 1836) granting an increase of pension to Martin Selak;
A bill (S. 1837) granting an increase of pension to George W. Mulliken;
A bill (S. 1838) granting a pension to Agnes Hunt;
A bill (S. 1839) granting a pension to Nora Julia Buchanan;
A bill (S. 1840) granting a pension to Verona H. Coon;
A bill (S. 1841) granting a pension to Robert Fletcher;
A bill (S. 1842) granting an increase of pension to Augustus M. Barnes;
A bill (S. 1843) granting a pension to Susan M. Sumner;
A bill (S. 1844) granting a pension to Rachel F. Prince;
A bill (S. 1845) granting an increase of pension to John A. Battenfield;
A bill (S. 1846) granting a pension to John Waalkes;
A bill (S. 1847) granting an increase of pension to John Hapeman;
A bill (S. 1848) granting a pension to Almira J. Sterling;
A bill (S. 1849) granting a pension to Hattie L. Fox;
A bill (S. 1850) granting an increase of pension to Peter Boyer;
A bill (S. 1851) granting a pension to Lydia A. Brigham;
A bill (S. 1852) granting a pension to Mary E. Smith;
A bill (S. 1853) granting a pension to Alvena Wiggins;
A bill (S. 1854) granting an increase of pension to William S. Dailey;
A bill (S. 1855) granting an increase of pension to Sidney M. Smith;
A bill (S. 1856) granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Moore;
A bill (S. 1857) granting an increase of pension to Elias Riegle;
A bill (S. 1858) granting a pension to William Cordes;
A bill (S. 1859) granting an increase of pension to Marshall H. Burnham;
A bill (S. 1860) granting a pension to Louisa E. Lawrence;
A bill (S. 1861) granting a pension to Sarah Elise Green;
A bill (S. 1862) granting a pension to Lucinda W. Van Hyning;
A bill (S. 1863) granting an increase of pension to Renselarr B. Ransom;
A bill (S. 1864) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Stebbins;
A bill (S. 1865) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Golding;
A bill (S. 1866) granting a pension to Annie B. Jackson;
A bill (S. 1867) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Gaylord;
A bill (S. 1868) granting a pension to Hiram S. Millis;
A bill (S. 1869) granting a pension to George W. Derby;
A bill (S. 1870) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Norris;
A bill (S. 1871) granting an increase of pension to John M. Randell;
A bill (S. 1872) granting an increase of pension to George M. Peaslee;
A bill (S. 1873) granting a pension to Margaret A. Barker;
A bill (S. 1874) granting a pension to George Seward;
A bill (S. 1875) granting a pension to Emma R. Walters;
A bill (S. 1876) granting a pension to Elizabeth F. Houghton;
A bill (S. 1877) granting a pension to James O'Neill (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1878) granting a pension to Charles H. Sedgwick (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1879) granting an increase of pension to Hiram F. Daniels (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1880) granting a pension to Samuel A. Holt (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1881) granting an increase of pension to George O. Richardson (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1882) granting a pension to Albert Raymond (with accompanying paper);
A bill (S. 1883) granting a pension to Albert A. Loveland (with accompanying paper); and
A bill (S. 1884) granting an increase of pension to George S. Putnam (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:
A bill (S. 1886) for the relief of Maria Elizabeth Burnett; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS (for Mr. PERCY):
A bill (S. 1887) for the relief of the legal representatives of James M. Brabston and Roche H. Brabston (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHIVELY:
A bill (S. 1888) granting an increase of pension to Richard Simpson; and
A bill (S. 1889) granting an increase of pension to William H. McKay; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CULLOM:
A bill (S. 1890) granting an increase of pension to William O'Callaghan (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:
A bill (S. 1891) to provide for the construction, maintenance, and improvement of post roads and rural delivery routes through the cooperation and joint action of the National Government and the several States in which such post roads or rural delivery routes may be established; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.
A bill (S. 1892) for the relief of the heirs of John C. Newton, deceased;
A bill (S. 1893) for the relief of the heirs of John Sullivan, deceased;
A bill (S. 1894) for the relief of A. M. Randolph and the other children and heirs of Robert Lee Randolph, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.
A bill (S. 1895) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Farmville, in the State of Virginia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:
A bill (S. 1896) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Spanish Fork, in the State of Utah; and
A bill (S. 1897) for the erection of a public building at Ephraim, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1898) providing for the protection of the interests of the United States in lands and waters comprising any part of the Anacostia River, or Eastern Branch, and lands adjacent thereto, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1899) to repeal a portion of an act heretofore passed relating to the alienation of the title of the United States to land in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 1900) granting an increase of pension to William Smith Lackor;

A bill (S. 1901) granting an increase of pension to Henry Mingles;

A bill (S. 1902) granting a pension to Cill L. S. Fee (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1903) granting a pension to Clarence W. Fallor (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 1904) granting an increase of pension to Edward Vanderveer Holland (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 1905) granting a pension to Samuel H. Portz;

A bill (S. 1906) granting an increase of pension to John M. Guthrie; and

A bill (S. 1907) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Fisher; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1908) for the relief of Harry Fosdick; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama:

A bill (S. 1909) for the relief of the heirs at law of A. J. Reese; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 1910) to grant an honorable discharge to Patrick Quinn; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1911) for the relief of James R. Brown; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1912) granting an increase of pension to William S. Hosack;

A bill (S. 1913) granting an increase of pension to William Roberts;

A bill (S. 1914) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Casson; and

A bill (S. 1915) granting a pension to Caroline M. Anthony; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GUGGENHEIM:

A bill (S. 1916) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Hugo, Colo.; and

A bill (S. 1917) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Canon City, Colo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1918) granting an increase of pension to James P. Cassedy (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1919) granting an increase of pension to Hannah S. Caward (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1920) granting an increase of pension to Jerome B. Greenslate (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1921) granting an increase of pension to John B. Farris (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1922) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Coffen (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 1923) granting an increase of pension to William H. Topping (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GAMBLE:

A bill (S. 1924) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Bogis (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 1925) to correct the military record of Charles W. Cathers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1926) granting an increase of pension to George Anderson;

A bill (S. 1927) granting a pension to Ada Ward;

A bill (S. 1928) granting a pension to J. J. Peasley;

A bill (S. 1929) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin C. Rickards (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1930) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Waymire (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 1931) granting an increase of pension to James M. Fogleman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 1932) for the relief of the heirs of Powhatan Perkins; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 1933) granting an increase of pension to Seeley Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 1934) granting an increase of pension to Amos Lee;

A bill (S. 1935) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Miller;

A bill (S. 1936) granting an increase of pension to Recorder M. Mudgett;

A bill (S. 1937) granting an increase of pension to Walter S. McArthur;

A bill (S. 1938) granting an increase of pension to Robert McKinnis;

A bill (S. 1939) granting a pension to George W. Perry;

A bill (S. 1940) granting a pension to Elizabeth Parker;

A bill (S. 1941) granting a pension to Corrilla J. Robbins;

A bill (S. 1942) granting an increase of pension to Isaac D. Rowden;

A bill (S. 1943) granting a pension to Thomas B. Ryan;

A bill (S. 1944) granting an increase of pension to Mortimer Seymour;

A bill (S. 1945) granting an increase of pension to Karl Somerlatt;

A bill (S. 1946) granting an increase of pension to Stephen M. Van Camp;

A bill (S. 1947) granting a pension to James M. Woods;

A bill (S. 1948) granting a pension to William E. White;

A bill (S. 1949) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin C. Zeitler;

A bill (S. 1950) granting an increase of pension to William R. Amen;

A bill (S. 1951) granting an increase of pension to David E. Banks;

A bill (S. 1952) granting an increase of pension to Michael Barrett;

A bill (S. 1953) granting an increase of pension to James N. Bascue;

A bill (S. 1954) granting a pension to Harriet Bockerman;

A bill (S. 1955) granting a pension to Richard W. Berry;

A bill (S. 1956) granting an increase of pension to Mary Boyington;

A bill (S. 1957) granting a pension to Josephine M. Buck;

A bill (S. 1958) granting an increase of pension to Darwin Coykendall;

A bill (S. 1959) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Curtis;

A bill (S. 1960) granting an increase of pension to James M. Fenning;

A bill (S. 1961) granting an increase of pension to Franklin Fearing;

A bill (S. 1962) granting an increase of pension to John Finegan;

A bill (S. 1963) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Greenstreet;

A bill (S. 1964) granting an increase of pension to Albert H. Heath;

A bill (S. 1965) granting an increase of pension to John M. Herman;

A bill (S. 1966) granting an increase of pension to Ephriam M. Hill;

A bill (S. 1967) granting a pension to Joseph Holtz;

A bill (S. 1968) granting an increase of pension to Franklin D. Joy;

A bill (S. 1969) granting an increase of pension to Himanus De Witt;

A bill (S. 1970) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus N. Doom;

A bill (S. 1971) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Fackler;

A bill (S. 1972) granting an increase of pension to Amon H. Johnson;

A bill (S. 1973) granting an increase of pension to David E. Jones;

A bill (S. 1974) granting an increase of pension to Nathan T. Kimball;

A bill (S. 1975) granting a pension to Jacob Korby;

A bill (S. 1976) granting an increase of pension to Ira N. Levalley;

A bill (S. 1977) granting an increase of pension to William Akin;

A bill (S. 1978) granting a pension to William Abernathy;

A bill (S. 1979) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Fletcher (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1980) granting an increase of pension to Robert B. Horrie (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1981) granting an increase of pension to George W. Holsted (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1982) granting a pension to Martin W. Sewall (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1983) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Stotler (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1984) granting an increase of pension to Alwilda Smith (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1985) granting an increase of pension to Peter Lory (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1986) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Miller (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1987) granting an increase of pension to James C. Bowerman (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1988) granting an increase of pension to Robert B. Baldwin (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1989) granting an increase of pension to Samuel T. Bennett (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 1990) granting an increase of pension to William O. Campbell (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 22) authorizing and directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain the value of the physical properties of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment relative to the salary of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Immigration, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 28), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make investigations of internal-revenue, customs, currency, and coinage matters, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

COST OF LIVING.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have an article, taken from the Times weekly edition, London, April 14, 1911, on the cost of living in the United States—wages, rent, and food—in comparison with Great Britain. I desire to have the article printed as a Senate document, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for action. (S. Doc. 22.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be referred to the Committee on Printing for recommendation.

CORRECTION OF ERRORS IN APPROPRIATION ACTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution coming over from a previous day, which has been once read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) to correct errors in the enrollment of certain appropriation acts approved March 4, 1911, was read the second time by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to call up Senate resolution No. 6, introduced by me on the 6th of April and now on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The SECRETARY. A resolution (S. Res. 6) to appoint a special committee to investigate certain charges relative to the election of WILLIAM LORIMER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin call up the resolution for present consideration?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I call it up, Mr. President, to ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PRINTING OF TARIFF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other day requests were made for republishing certain letters of Robert J. Walker when Secretary of the Treasury. As supplemental to them, and as aiding Senators in the determination of the questions involved in those messages, I ask that such parts of Executive Document No. 7, being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury—the same Secretary being still in office—dated December 11, 1848, be printed in the document (S. Doc. No. 16). The parts which I have marked are the parts which relate to reciprocity treaties and to the tariff. Let the same course be taken with it as was taken with the others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It will then go to the Committee on Finance.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have made diligent inquiry on both sides of the Chamber, and I find that, with the exception of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], Senators are not ready even to make speeches for the next two or three days. For that reason I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday.

The motion was agreed to.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the reciprocity agreement made between the executive officials of the United States and Canada and the measures which have been introduced in Congress this session and last for the purpose of carrying that agreement into effect have caused widespread and animated discussions; and considering the variety of interests immediately and prospectively affected by the proposed measures, it is not to be wondered at that many interested people are busying themselves about this legislation; nor is it at all surprising that a great number of misstatements have been made and circulated as to what the agreement really is, and as to its probable effect upon the different industries of the country. It seems as if a propaganda was being deliberately exploited to excite opposition to the reciprocity agreement, based on misrepresentation, and intended to deceive and mislead.

Mr. President, my purpose in addressing the Senate to-day is to correct some of these misstatements of the truth. I propose to-day to confine my observations to two things: First, to a consideration of the comparative wages paid for farm labor in the United States and Canada; and, second, to a consideration of the comparative values of live stock in the United States and Canada.

I shall confine myself to those two things to-day, but notify my colleagues now that it is my intention in the near future to inflict upon the Senate and to encumber the RECORD with some additional addresses on this reciprocity agreement. I intend in the first of those speeches to address myself to the comparative cost of production and the market value of farm products in the two countries, and especially of wheat. And then a little later on, when I can find fitting opportunities, I shall address myself to the question of the cost of living, the cost of agricultural implements, and other things covered by the agreement before the Senate. But to-day I shall only take up the two subjects I have mentioned and confine my remarks to them.

LABOR.

We have heard a good deal said here in the Senate and a good deal out of the Senate about farm wages paid in the two countries, the contention being made that the wage of farm laborers in Canada is much less than it is in the United States, and that if the products of that labor in Canada are admitted free to the markets of the United States it will make necessary a reduction of the price of farm labor in the States.

I hold in my hand a printed report of hearings had in February last during the closing days of the last Congress before the Senate Finance Committee. That committee wasted a number of precious days on those hearings. I say "wasted," because many of the same witnesses had not more than a month before appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House and covered the same ground in statements there. If all of the same witnesses did not appear before both committees, those who did appear before both committees traveled the same road and discussed in substantially the same way the same subjects. One hearing was but a repetition of the other. It seemed to me then that it was a useless expenditure of time; useless, if there had been any desire on the part of a majority of the Senate committee to pass the bill which had already passed the House. If it was the desire and purpose of the committee to kill time and prevent the passage of the bill by the Senate, then the days consumed in the hearings were cleverly occupied. I think there is no doubt that the majority of the Finance Committee did employ the so-called hearings as a device to defeat the consideration of the bill in the open Senate. However, the hearings were had, and now I wish to quote from them some sample expressions and then show how unreliable and valueless they are.

Among the witnesses who appeared before the Finance Committee was Mr. Nahum J. Bachelder, of New Hampshire, master of the National Grange. Speaking to the question of wages, he made this statement:

Is it, or is it not, a fact that the cost of growing the great staple crops, such as wheat, barley, oats, and hay; of raising cattle, horses, and sheep; and of producing butter, eggs, poultry, cheese, apples, etc., is greater in this country than in Canada? We affirm that such is the fact, and would state in support of our contention the further facts * * * that the wages paid farm labor in Canada are much lower than in this country.

I had occasion, while Mr. Bachelder was addressing the committee, to ask him some questions, and I desire now to read a part of that examination:

Senator STONE. Can you tell me what the difference in the cost of production is on a bushel of wheat, for example, in the United States and in Canada?

Mr. BACHELDER. I can not state it definitely. The cost is less in Canada than it is in the United States for the reasons that I have stated.

Senator STONE. You said it was because of cheaper labor.

Mr. BACHELDER. Yes.

Senator STONE. That was one reason.

Mr. BACHELDER. Yes.

Senator STONE. How much cheaper is the labor in Canada than it is in the United States? By about what per cent?

Mr. BACHELDER. I understand it is 25 per cent cheaper, sir.

Senator HALE. At least.

Senator STONE. That, I should think, would be a disputed question. Upon what data do you base that statement that it is 25 per cent cheaper?

Mr. BACHELDER. I base it upon the testimony of the farmers in the northern part of the country, who go to Canada to employ their labor, and they get it, they tell me, 25 per cent cheaper than they get labor on this side of the line.

Senator MCCUMBER. I am informed, Senator STONE, that within the last week the Agricultural Department has reported the difference in the cost of producing grains in Canada and in the United States, and that it ranges from 30 to 50 per cent. I do not know how correct that is. I get it from outside.

Senator STONE. My information is very different from that.

It will be observed that Mr. Bachelder says that farm wages in the United States are 25 per cent higher than in Canada.

I read now from page 45 of the Senate hearings a statement made by Mr. Charles M. Gardner, master of the Massachusetts State Grange. Mr. Gardner says:

In relation to this matter of farm labor—not to go into detail, but just to give my observation—I will say that we are not very far from the Canadian line, perhaps 150 miles or so; but it is true that in the last few years we have been getting all the labor we could of this kind, because we could get it cheaper than other farm labor in Massachusetts; and at the same time these very men have come over very readily because they were bettering their condition by coming.

Senator MCCUMBER. By coming from Canada?

Mr. GARDNER. By coming from Canada. And I want to say to you that I believe the suggestion of 25 per cent less in the wage rate is not overstated; that it is a fair statement.

Turning to page 50 you will find some questions I propounded to Mr. Gardner and his answers thereto. I will read a part of that examination:

Senator STONE. You say the difference in price of labor in Massachusetts and in Canada, immediately across the line from New England, is about 25 per cent?

Mr. GARDNER. I understood, sir, the national master to say that he thought that was a fair presentation of the difference.

Senator STONE. And you agree?

Mr. GARDNER. I said that in my observation I thought that was at least not an exaggerated statement. I think it is a fair statement.

Senator STONE. You mean by farm labor, men who are hired to work on farms?

Mr. GARDNER. I mean the men who do the work on the land.

Senator STONE. For a wage?

Mr. GARDNER. For a wage.

Senator STONE. Do you in Massachusetts hire men by the day or by the month, usually, for farm work?

Mr. GARDNER. By the month, usually.

Senator STONE. Do you furnish them their board?

Mr. GARDNER. There are so many different conditions in connection with those things that it is hard to say. In some cases their board is furnished. In others, if there are little houses on the farms for the farm laborers, they live there. There are so many different arrangements that it is hard to say what the prevailing method is.

Senator STONE. Aside from furnishing things of that kind—board and like accommodations—what do you ordinarily pay in Massachusetts per month to laborers?

Mr. GARDNER. There is such a difference in the different sections that I should be very glad to ask two or three of these gentlemen to tell you about what it is in their sections.

* * * * * * *

Senator STONE. No; I mean the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. That is a hard thing to state, because there are so many different kinds of agriculture and so many different rates of wages. If I might ask these gentlemen to answer that single question as to the prevailing rates in their particular sections——

Senator STONE. Where do you reside?

Mr. GARDNER. Just west of the Connecticut River.

Senator STONE. What is the town?

Mr. GARDNER. Westfield.

Senator STONE. Do you reside in the town or out on a farm?

Mr. GARDNER. Just outside of the town. We are a tobacco section. We are not a great agricultural section in that immediate vicinity.

Senator STONE. What particular branch of agriculture are you engaged in?

Mr. GARDNER. I am interested in the milk business.

Senator STONE. In the dairy business?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes, sir; but not to any great extent, because my time is so much taken up with my grange work.

Senator STONE. With what work?

Mr. GARDNER. With my grange work, as master of the State grange.

Senator STONE. What is paid for farm labor (I am not now speaking of labor that is employed in running a dairy, but in cultivating the soil) in the section with which you are familiar?

Mr. GARDNER. In my own particular part of Hampden County the principal staple raised is tobacco. That is about, I might say, our exclusive agricultural work. I can not tell you exactly the prevailing price. If you will ask Mr. Healey, of Connecticut, who is right in the tobacco section, I think the conditions in his section would be not materially different from ours. I do not know what the prevailing price there is.

Senator STONE. Have you much gardening in your immediate section?

Mr. GARDNER. Not very much.

Senator STONE. But to some extent you have?

Mr. GARDNER. To a very limited extent.

Senator STONE. For market purposes?

Mr. GARDNER. To a very limited extent, for Springfield.

Senator STONE. Do you know what price is paid for labor in that work?

Mr. GARDNER. I am not sure about the price exactly. I have taken this matter up with some of our men at the statehouse, who are concerned in the agricultural board. I am a member of the State board of agriculture, and I have asked them to give me as closely as they could, from the averages in our State and the averages as they had them from Canada, the price of farm labor; and my deductions are drawn from the information that they gave me, representing the whole State, generally.

Senator STONE. And not from your personal knowledge?

Mr. GARDNER. Not from my personal knowledge, because I have not been in Canada for two or three years. But I thought that was a fair way to get at the average of the price.

Senator STONE. Do you personally know what is paid for farm labor—that is, for the men employed to work on the farms and cultivate the soil—in Canada?

Mr. GARDNER. I can not give you more than that specific knowledge. I thought that was sufficient.

Senator STONE. I asked if you personally knew how much per month was paid.

Mr. GARDNER. If you mean by that, going and asking them what they get, I can not say.

Senator STONE. Then you do not know?

Mr. GARDNER. I think I might say I know, if I have the statement from our State board of agriculture, who have compiled the averages across the line or either side, and have told me that there is a difference of fully 25 per cent. I supposed that was reasonable information to rely upon.

Senator STONE. Then your information is based upon reports that you have read or heard read, rather than upon your personal knowledge?

Mr. GARDNER. I would not say reports, because that is hardly a fair term. My judgment is based on information, sir, that I gathered in that way. I did not feel, sir, that it was fair to compare my own little section, or any other one section of Massachusetts, with some little section of Canada, and to get at the matter in a broad way, I suggested that we try to get a fair average on the other side, and from that I learned what I have testified to as information.

Mr. President, there is much more of the same kind in these hearings and in the hearings had before the Ways and Means Committee a month earlier; but what I have read is ample to indicate the general character of the contention made by those who appeared before the committee to oppose this reciprocity agreement.

Now, I wish to read a resolution adopted by the Republican central committee of Chariton County, Mo., which I find published in the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, Mo., under date of April 22:

Resolved, That we believe that this measure will be so detrimental and ruinous to the farmers that the present liberal scale of wages paid to farm laborers can not be maintained, and would result in decreased wages, discontent, and idleness among a class whose condition is fairly satisfactory.

Mark this language—that this measure will be so ruinous to the farmers that the present liberal scale of wages paid to farm laborers can not be maintained—

not even in Missouri.

Mr. President, statements such as I have quoted, made by these distinguished representatives of the Grange, and in the resolution I have read, could be repeated over and over again, if I cared to multiply them; and yet the assertions of all of them are based on a total misapprehension of the facts.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRIGGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have not read the testimony from which the Senator has been quoting, but if I understood him correctly he was quoting from a New England man.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I quoted from Gov. Bachelder of New Hampshire and Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Is there anything in the testimony which indicates that they were speaking about the wages prevalent on either side of the line—that is, as distinguishing between the wages east and west; in the Province of Quebec, we will say, and New England, or the wages prevailing in the northwest territories of Canada and the corresponding parts of the United States?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will take occasion to read what I have read (and I am not taking time to read it all) he will discover that the whole trend of the statements made was to compare the wages paid in Canada as a whole with wages paid in our northern border States as a whole.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. As a whole. I do not know whether the Senator intends to refer to the report of the Tariff Board published during the month of March.

Mr. STONE. I do intend to refer to it. I have it here for that purpose.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It clearly distinguishes between the wages in the Province of Quebec and in the New England States.

Mr. STONE. Clearly, and it ought to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes. By that it appears that the wages in New England for farm labor are very much higher than in Canada.

Mr. STONE. It is true that the Tariff Board report gives a higher average wage in New England, particularly on yearly hirings, than in the eastern Provinces of Canada. But I will come to that phase of the subject presently. The Senator is anticipating.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will not interrupt the Senator as long as he intends to refer to that report.

Mr. STONE. I intend to get to it in due course.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has quoted from the master of the National Grange, and I think also from the master of one State Grange.

Mr. STONE. Of Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of Massachusetts. I will ask the Senator if he has carefully read the statement of Mr. T. C. Laylin, master of the Ohio State Grange, on this question, and would it interrupt the Senator if I read four or five lines?

Mr. STONE. No; it will not interrupt me.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Laylin says:

I have here figures taken from the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor—

This is not outside talk at all; it is official—in regard to the wages paid along the border in Canada and in the United States from the ocean to western New York. I will mention just a few of the places and give the average on both sides. In this table Eastport, Calais, Fort Fairfield, Van Buren, Fort Kent, and two other places in Maine are compared with Halifax, Nova Scotia (right over the border), Yarmouth, and several different districts of St. John. The average cost of labor in eastern Maine is from $25 to $31 a month. The average cost of labor in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick is from $17 to $24 a month.

And on page 60 Mr. Laylin inserts a very illuminating table from the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor, showing that there is substantially that difference all along the line in the case of farm labor.

Mr. STONE. What difference?

Mr. GALLINGER. The figures themselves show, I should say, 20 to 21 per cent; and if it would not trouble the Senator or in any way disarrange his illuminating speech I would like to have that table inserted right here. It is an official table.

Mr. STONE. I think I would rather not put that into my speech, for I have not examined that table and am not prepared at this moment to analyze it or pass judgment upon it, and it would have to go in without any answer from me. That would hardly be fair to me or to the cause of truth.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe that while the Senator did interrogate ex-Gov. Bachelder and one or two others he did not take Mr. Laylin in hand, and I am surprised that he did not.

Mr. STONE. I was not present when he addressed the committee nor have I since examined the table alluded to.

Mr. GALLINGER. We can have the table inserted later on.

Mr. STONE. It can be inserted later in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a very valuable exhibit.

Mr. STONE. I intend now to submit some data on this subject of wages prepared by the Tariff Board and sent to the Senate near the close of the last session of Congress by the President in response to a Senate resolution calling for the information. After that I intend to submit other data on the same subject. So far as the Tariff Board is concerned, I will say that the figures the board gives ought to be accepted as conclusive by our friends on the other side. They have been beating the air and clamoring for a Tariff Board, so that we might accurately ascertain the difference in wages paid in the United States and other countries in all the various industries. For myself I have never had much faith in a Tariff Board. I have always opposed the creation of a Tariff Board and am still opposed to having one, particularly an Executive-made Tariff Board. But since we have a Tariff Board—a pet creation of Senators on the other side, and especially of such Senators as my friend from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and created by them for the purpose and with the assurance that it would supply Congress and the country with absolutely trustworthy information—it seems to me that the mouths of its sponsors are closed against protest when I quote the figures furnished by that body.

Mr. President, I propose first to quote some figures for the especial benefit of my distinguished friend the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]; in fact, for the benefit of both Senators from that State, for both have inveighed against this trade agreement. Let me read from the report of the Tariff Board:

The tables submitted herewith relate to wages of farm hands in 1910 in the Provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, Canada, and in the States of North Dakota, Minnesota, and South Dakota. Wages in the States were secured altogether by personal interviews with farmers and owners of thrashing outfits employing help; while wages in the Canadian Provinces were secured by personal interviews with farmers and owners of thrashing outfits employing help, and also from the records of the commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg.

In general it may be said that the wages of experienced season hands (hands employed for a period of seven, seven and a half, or eight months, beginning about April 1) are on the same general level in Manitoba and Minnesota and also on the same general level in Saskatchewan and North Dakota, and they are higher in the two last-named localities than in the two first named.

I desire to call the attention of the North Dakota Senators to this report, both of whom, in February last, lifted their eloquent voices in such vehement protest against this measure because of the fear they had that American farm wages would be reduced if Congress should enact the agreement into a law. Remember what I have just read is from the report of the Tariff Board, and what I am about to refer to is also from that report. I have a Tariff Board table before me, and from that I find that—

The average wage paid per year, with bed and board, in 1910, in North Dakota, was $350, while in Saskatchewan, just across the line, it was $370. That was the average yearly wage paid in 1910. Then they hire hands by the season, the season running from seven to eight months, beginning April 1. Season hands, with bed and board, were paid in 1910 in North Dakota an average of $33.79 per month, while in Saskatchewan the monthly season wage was $35.14.

Mr. WARREN. Per month?

Mr. STONE. Per month for season hands, the season running from seven to eight months.

This table shows that, whether by the year or by the season, the monthly wage paid in Saskatchewan was higher than that paid in North Dakota. The Tariff Board then goes into particulars and furnishes a table of wages as to special individual employments. Here are some of the comparisons: Spike pitchers in North Dakota received $3 a day; in Saskatchewan, $3 a day. Field pitchers in North Dakota, $2.50 to $3; in Saskatchewan, $3. Engineers—that is, thrashing-machine engineers—received in North Dakota $5 to $6 per day; in Saskatchewan, $5 to $7 per day. Separator men in North Dakota, $5 to $6; in Saskatchewan, $5 to $7. Water haulers, without teams, in North Dakota, $2.50 to $3; in Saskatchewan, $2.50 to $3. Bundle haulers, without teams, in North Dakota, $2.50 to $3; in Saskatchewan, $2.50 to $3—all showing that in every instance the wage paid in Saskatchewan was equal to, and in some instances greater than, the wage paid in North Dakota for the same description of labor.

I invite the prayerful attention of my friends from North Dakota to this report of their Tariff Board, aye, their Tariff Board. If they care to contradict or to join issue with the board they have my permission. I am free to say that I have not myself profound confidence in the accuracy of the figures given. I have not profound confidence in their accuracy for the reason, as I shall show later on, that according to the wage scale given by the statistical authorities in Canada the wage actually paid in the Provinces is higher than that given by the Tariff Board. But I ask the North Dakota Senators to bear in mind that the wage as given by the Tariff Board is higher in Saskatchewan than in their State.

Now, I leave my North Dakota friends to cogitate on these figures, and turn to give respectful, though brief, attention to some of my Missouri friends. Accordingly I bow to the Chariton County Republican committee, who in solemn conclave expressed a grave fear that reciprocity was going to decrease the munificent wages now being paid to farm laborers in Missouri. I am going to show these ill-advised constituents of mine that they are wholly mistaken, and that they have been deceived as to the facts. I say they have been deceived as to the facts, and I will add that I believe they have been deliberately deceived by secretly interested parties.

I will pause here long enough, Mr. President, to say that whenever any move is made to lower the burden of tariff taxes on anything, and especially on the productions of any important industry, the great protected monopolies of the country, which have grown enormously rich through extortions on the consuming public, become alarmed and forthwith put an opposing force in motion. They not only stand ready to support, but they first secretly initiate and then support movements intended to excite alarm among the people immediately affected in the hope that the threat—any serious threat—of tariff reduction may be suppressed. In this instance there is an organized effort, adroitly worked, to alarm the farmers, and to that end a propaganda has been established to scatter misinformation among the farmers with the hope and expectation that they will rush forward and thrust their hands into the fire to pull out the chestnuts of the very monopolists who seek to use them. The monopolists may not be immediately interested in a given movement to reduce tariff taxes, and they are not immediately interested in the removal of duties on agricultural products; but they are afraid of every movement in the direction of tariff reduction, fearing that the tide might run on until it beat against their own fortress. Hence they are against everything that tends to disturb the status quo and menace the strongly-protected and opulent privileges they enjoy and have enjoyed for so many years. But I will not longer digress. I return to the Chariton County Republican committee.

Let me read again from the report of the Tariff Board so as to give my Chariton County constituents information somewhat more reliable as to wages paid farm laborers than that they seem now to possess. The Tariff Board gives the average wage paid by the month in 1909 for season hiring in Missouri at $21.10, and gives the average wage paid per month on yearly hiring at $18.85. Now, Ontario lies practically due north of Missouri, and it is fairer perhaps to compare the wage paid in Ontario with that paid in Missouri than to make the comparison between the State and any other Province. The Tariff Board says that the wage paid with board for this same year (1909) in Ontario per month on hirings for the season was $21.52, as against $21.10 in Missouri; and that the wage paid in Ontario on yearly hirings was $17.63 per month as against $18.85 in Missouri, thus showing that the wages in Missouri and in Ontario, according to this Tariff Board report, are substantially the same.

Mr. President, I wish now to call attention to some figures for the especial benefit of our lamented friend, former Senator Hale. I say "lamented," because I believe it to be true that every Senator who served with Mr. Hale misses him and regrets his absence. We Democrats, of course, find a soothing consolation in the fact that he is displaced by a Democrat, and a fine Democrat at that. If you recall what I have read from the tariff hearings it will be remembered that Senator Hale indorsed what Mr. Gardner and Mr. Bachelder said to the effect that there is a difference of 25 per cent in farm wages as between the United States and Canada. When Mr. Bachelder said to the Finance Committee that labor was 25 per cent cheaper in Canada than in the United States, Senator Hale responded, "At least." Let me further quote from the Tariff Board, getting nearer home to Senator Hale and Mr. Bachelder. I find that the board gives the wage per month for season hiring—the season running from seven to eight months beginning April 1—in New York, at $26; Michigan, $25.10; Ohio, $22.11; making an average for the three States of $24.40.

These figures are somewhat higher, though not materially higher, than the figures given for the same States in a tabulated publication dated March, 1911, and given out by the Department of Agriculture in what is known as the Crop Reporter, a departmental periodical issued under the auspices of the Secretary of Agriculture. According to these figures given by the Agricultural Department, the average wage for farm labor per month in the three States of New York, Michigan, and Ohio is as follows: For New York, $23.50; Michigan, $23; Ohio, $21; average, $22.50. The department does not say whether these figures are for annual or season hiring.

Now, take three of the eastern Provinces of Canada—New Brunswick, Quebec, and Ontario—and I find that our Tariff Board gives the monthly wage on season hiring in those Provinces as follows: New Brunswick, $22.59; Quebec, $23.33; Ontario, $21.52; making an average of $22.48. Now, group these three averages and we find: For the three States, per Tariff Board, $24.40; for the three States, per Crop Reporter, $22.50; for the three Provinces, per Tariff Board, $22.48.

The difference thus disclosed in monthly wages between the three States and the three Provinces, as shown by the Tariff Board report, is $1.92 per month; while the difference as disclosed by the Crop Reporter report for the States and the Tariff Board report for the Provinces is only 2 cents per month. So that, instead of the average difference in farm wages, even in the Eastern States and eastern Provinces, being 25 per cent, they are substantially equal.

I wish it kept in mind as we go along that the Canadian wage as given by the Tariff Board is lower than the Canadian wage as given by the statistical authorities of Canada. When we examine into this difference between the official reports of the two Governments we find a very interesting phase of this subject, and I shall advert to it presently in a specific way.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Does the Senator intend to give the comparison between the New England States and the Province of Quebec and the other eastern Provinces of Canada?

Mr. STONE. In a way later on I will do so, but not so specifically as with the States I have named, and for the reason that I can not go on multiplying specific comparisons indefinitely, and besides it seems to me that New York, Ohio, and Michigan can well be taken as being even a little more than typical of the Eastern and Middle-eastern States. I shall, however, embody tables in my address covering the subject of farm wages in all the States and Provinces.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. My reason for interrupting was this: Of course the agriculture of New England differs from the agriculture of any other section of the Union. It has its near-by markets, and it suits its products to those markets. By the report from which the Senator was reading I see that the average rate of wages for the season in Maine and Vermont would be $27.23 per month, while in the Province of Quebec, lying directly north and being the great general agricultural Province of Canada, the wages were only $23.33, or 16.70 per cent less in the Province of Quebec than in those States. If the comparison were made between those States and Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Quebec combined, the wages of those States would be 22 per cent more than in the Provinces I have named. I only mention it because I see the Senator is inclined to be fair and wants to bring out all the facts, and the agriculture of New England being so peculiar to itself, I thought that a comparison between the wages paid there and in the near-by Canadian Provinces ought to appear in the debate.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator that presently I shall lay before the Senate and put into the RECORD complete tables showing the wages of all the States in New England and elsewhere and the wages of all the Provinces of Canada, so that the comparison can be made by anyone who wishes to make it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will put in the official figures, I take it.

Mr. STONE. I will put in the figures I get from official documents.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Canadian Government issues a publication called the Canadian Census and Statistics Monthly, and in the issue for January, 1911, there will be found a statement of wages.

Mr. STONE. I have it here.

Mr. GALLINGER. And our Agricultural Department has taken up this same subject.

Mr. STONE. It has.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the Senator, of course, aims to be fair, and I merely suggest that I trust the figures will be official, because a great many wild statements are made outside.

Mr. STONE. Every figure I have given and every figure I shall give will be taken from an official document, and I will name the document.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to know that, and I will take occasion to examine them later on.

Mr. BACON. Does not the Senator from Missouri think that it is pertinent to remark in connection with what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has said as to wages in his particular section, that he himself has given the explanation of the superior wages in that particular part of the country in citing the fact of its proximity to the great cities? It seems to me that the question of wages is one of general average throughout the country, and I am sure that if the general average throughout the United States were taken it would be far less than the general average throughout Canada.

Mr. STONE. It is, as I will show presently.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. STONE. Senators are anticipating me, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I simply wanted to say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that the State of Maine is very little nearer to the markets of New England than is the Province of Quebec, which produces 67½ per cent of the dairy products of the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the figures read by the Senator from Vermont from the report of the Tariff Board—they are from that report, are they not?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. STONE. Those figures from the Tariff Board report are unquestionably as the Senator has stated them, and they show a somewhat higher rate of wage in Maine and Vermont than in Quebec.

But while the Senator from Vermont is in a large measure bound by what his Tariff Board says, I do not place, and am under no such obligation as he to place, implicit faith in the figures the board gives to the Senate and the country with respect to Canadian wages. I shall undertake presently to show that the wage in the Canadian Provinces is higher than that stated in the report from which the Senator read and from which I have read. I have read from the Tariff Board report partly to impress my argument on our friends on the other side, for, although they may deny the accuracy of other statistics, they are estopped in all good faith from assailing what their pet Tariff Board furnishes to us. To Republican Senators the Tariff Board should be sacred and its deliverances above reproach. A little later on I will call attention to the Canadian wage as given by the Canadian Government, which, as I understand the statistics, show a much higher level of wages in Canada than that given by the Tariff Board.

Now, so far I have directed my remarks principally to monthly wages on season hirings. I will now call attention to monthly wages on yearly hirings, and make comparisons between the Provinces and the States on that basis. The average per month for yearly hirings in New York, Michigan, and Ohio, as given by the Tariff Board, is $20.94, while the average, as given by the same board, for the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, is $17.60. Manifestly, according to these figures, there is a larger demand for labor during the winter months in the States than in the Provinces; and, according to these figures, wages during the winter months are somewhat higher in the States than in the Provinces, while during the seven or eight months which cover the farming season the wages are substantially the same. But, Mr. President, it would seem that the monthly wage given by the Tariff Board for yearly hirings in the Canadian Provinces is less than that given by the Canadian authorities themselves.

I hold in my hand the publication to which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] referred, entitled "Census and Statistics Monthly," a statistical periodical published by the Dominion agricultural department. On page 2 of that publication for the month of January I find a table giving the average farm wage, including board, for both season and yearly hirings, in all the Provinces for the years 1909 and 1910. The average wage given in this table for Prince Edward Island is $25.27 per month on season hirings; Nova Scotia, $31.20; New Brunswick, $32.59, and so on with the other Provinces. Mr. President, I ask leave, at this point, to insert the table referred to and from which I have just quoted, or so much thereof as will make clear what I am endeavoring to show.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Table showing average wage per month paid in Canada for farm labor, including board on both season and yearly hirings, and average value of board per month, 1909 and 1910.

Provinces.	Year.	By season hiring.	By yearly hiring.	Average value of board.
Prince Edward Island	1909	$25.27	$18.87	$8.00
	1910	26.60	20.41	10.15
Nova Scotia	1909	31.20	25.90	10.00
	1910	33.70	26.77	11.50
New Brunswick	1909	32.59	19.95	10.00
	1910	33.90	24.12	11.25
Quebec	1909	33.33	27.58	10.00
	1210	36.40	29.12	11.56
Ontario	1909	31.52	27.63	10.00
	1910	31.40	27.99	12.00
Manitoba	1909	35.95	30.45	11.00
	1910	40.00	33.33	14.79
Saskatchewan	1909	38.30	32.40	16.00
	1910	40.00	33.54	14.00
Alberta	1909	40.08	35.13	15.00
	1910	40.00	34.66	16.79
British Columbia	1909	45.50	35.00	15.00
	1910	57.40	[1] 47.00	20.00

[1] Estimated.

Mr. STONE. According to this table the average wage per month on yearly hirings in Quebec and Ontario is $27.60 instead of $17.60 as given by the Tariff Board. According to the Tariff Board the yearly wage in the Eastern States is slightly above the yearly wage in the eastern Provinces, while this table gives the yearly wage in those Provinces as materially higher than it is in the Eastern States. A little further on I shall show, Mr. President, the plan adopted by the Tariff Board by which it figured wages for the Provinces lower than the Canadian Government puts them, but for the present I merely call attention to the fact that the board's figures are lower than the figures given by the Canadian Government.

Mr. President, I have compared farm wages in the Northwestern States with farm wages in the Northwestern Provinces and find them to be substantially equal, as shown by the Tariff Board report. I have compared wages paid in Missouri with wages paid in Ontario, especially for the benefit of my Republican friends in Chariton County, and find that wages in Missouri per month are almost exactly the same as those paid in Ontario, as appears from the Tariff Board report.

I have compared the three great easterly Lake and border States of New York, Michigan, and Ohio with eastern Canadian Provinces and find the differences to be slight, according to the figures furnished by the Tariff Board. I wish particularly that the comparisons between the States named and the Provinces named, which are based on figures furnished by the Tariff Board and our Agricultural Department, be kept in mind, and that for the present the figures furnished by the Canadian Government be put aside. Comparisons based on Canadian figures constitute another and a quite different story, and the two bases of comparison should be kept separated. Now, the States of New York, Michigan, Ohio, Missouri, and North Dakota, all of which I have used for comparative purposes, maintain a higher average level of wages than the average of all the States. In fact, that is true of all the northern border States; their average is higher than the general average. These States are high up among the leading industrial and agricultural States of the Union, and the rate of wages paid in them for all kinds of labor is much above the general level of the whole country.

According to a table printed last month in Crop Reporter, a publication of the Agricultural Department, the average of wages paid per month, with board, for farm labor in the whole United States is only $19.21. That is the average of all the States. If you will examine the eight South Atlantic States, you will find the average monthly farm wage, as shown by this table, to be only $13.77. If you will take the eight South Central States, you will find the average wage to be only $15.28.

If you will take the 9 North Atlantic States, from Maine to Pennsylvania, inclusive, you will find the average wage to be only $21.65. According to the Tariff Board report, the average wage on yearly hirings paid in these three groups of States—that is, the 8 South Atlantic States, the 8 South Central States, and the 9 North Atlantic States, or 25 States in all—is $16.90, whereas the average monthly wage on yearly hirings, as shown in the Tariff Board report, paid in the Canadian Provinces, is $18.45, or $1.55 per month more than is paid in the 25 States named. Mr. President, I wish at this point to insert the table to which I have referred, printed in the Crop Reporter, March, 1911, at page 19, under the title "Farm wages." This table gives the wage, with and without board, per month for all the States on yearly hirings. I understand this table to be based on yearly hirings, as contradistinguished from season hirings, although that does not distinctly appear. I ask leave to insert that table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is granted.

The table is as follows:

FARM WAGES.

The average wages of farm labor (male) during the past year, based upon reports of agents and correspondents of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Agriculture, with comparisons, is given as follows:

Wages of farm labor when employed by month.

States, Territories, and Divisions.	1910.
	Without board.	With board.
Maine	$34.50	$23.50
New Hampshire	35.50	23.50
Vermont	35.50	25.00
Massachusetts	37.20	22.75
Rhode Island	34.00	21.00
Connecticut	36.00	21.00
New York	35.00	23.50
New Jersey	31.50	19.50
Pennsylvania	29.00	18.75
North Atlantic	33.19	21.65
Delaware	24.75	16.00
Maryland	21.50	13.50
Virginia	19.50	14.00
West Virginia	29.00	19.40
North Carolina	19.50	13.60
South Carolina	16.50	12.00
Georgia	18.00	13.00
Florida	25.00	15.00
South Atlantic	19.75	13.77
Ohio	29.00	21.00
Indiana	28.40	20.50
Illinois	32.90	24.50
Michigan	33.00	23.00
Wisconsin	37.25	26.00
North Central, east of Mississippi River	31.81	22.94
Minnesota	38.00	26.00
Iowa	39.00	28.00
Missouri	29.50	21.50
North Dakota	42.00	29.00
South Dakota	39.00	27.00
Nebraska	38.00	26.50
Kansas	34.00	24.00
North Central, west of Mississippi River	35.45	25.10
Kentucky	23.10	16.00
Tennessee	20.00	14.00
Alabama	18.50	13.00
Mississippi	19.50	13.30
Louisiana	20.25	13.50
Texas	24.50	18.00
Oklahoma	28.10	19.10
Arkansas	24.00	16.25
South Central	21.90	15.28
Montana	50.00	38.00
Wyoming	49.00	35.00
Colorado	44.50	29.80
New Mexico	34.25	24.50
Arizona	45.00	30.00
Utah	47.50	35.00
Nevada	54.00	37.00
Idaho	49.50	35.00
Washington	50.00	33.00
Oregon	44.50	32.00
California	47.00	32.00
Far Western	46.48	32.60
United States	27.80	19.21

Mr. STONE. And now, by way of immediate contrast, I present the following table, covering the same period and showing the average monthly wages paid on yearly hirings, with board, in the several Canadian Provinces, with an average of the whole. This table is based on the figures given by our Tariff Board, not by the Canadian Government:

Prince Edward Island	$10.87
Nova Scotia	15.90
New Brunswick	9.96
Quebec	17.58
Ontario	17.63
Manitoba	24.17
Saskatchewan	30.83
Alberta (estimated)	26.10
British Columbia	20.69
Canada	19.30

By comparing these two tables I have just asked leave to insert it will be seen that the average of the monthly wage, with board, paid on yearly hiring for the United States as a whole is $19.21, while the average for the same time and on the same basis for all the Canadian Provinces is $19.30. Thus it appears that according to the statistics furnished by our own Agricultural Department and Tariff Board the average yearly wage as between the two countries is substantially the same. If we should compare the average monthly wage paid in the two countries on season hiring instead of yearly hiring the average would be appreciably larger in favor of Canada.

Now, Mr. President, the comparisons I have here made are, as I have said, based on data furnished by our own Government. I wish now to revert to the table I submitted some time ago, showing the average wage per month paid in Canada, including board, for the years 1909 and 1910, as given by the Canadian Government. These Canadian statistics show that the average wage per month, including board, in all the Provinces on yearly hiring is $30.44. All the figures in this table are official except those given for yearly hiring for 1910 in British Columbia, which are estimated. Now, grouping these three averages together, we have this showing.

Average in the United States, as per Agricultural Department table, $19.21; average in Canada, as per Tariff Board, $19.30; average in Canada, as per Canadian statistics, $30.44.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that the average monthly wage paid in the United States is nineteen dollars and some cents?

Mr. STONE. Nineteen dollars and twenty-one cents, as shown in the table printed in Crop Reporter.

Mr. GALLINGER. And in Canada $30?

Mr. STONE. Thirty dollars and forty-four cents, as shown by the Canadian report, and $19.30 as shown by your Tariff Board report.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a most astonishing statement. I think before we get through this debate the Senator will want to change his figures.

Mr. STONE. I am not giving my figures.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, the figures which have been given here.

Mr. STONE. I am giving the figures furnished by our Agricultural Department, by the Tariff Board, and by the agricultural department of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me a single observation, it is a remarkable circumstance, if that is the case, that Canadian workingmen are coming to this country in much larger numbers than Americans are going to Canada——

Mr. STONE. That is a statement——

Mr. GALLINGER. I mean laboring men; while, according to the Senator's figures, they get $12 a month more in Canada than they would across the border. It is inconceivable that that can be so.

Mr. STONE. In the first place, I do not admit that Canadian laborers are coming into the United States in greater number than American laborers are going into Canada. During the winter months French Canadians, as I am told, do come across in numbers more or less great into the New England States and seek employment there because there is more employment during those months in the States than in the adjacent Provinces. But, taking the Provinces and the States as a whole and for the whole year, I do not admit what the Senator from New Hampshire assumes. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not go to Canada. He would deprive his country of valuable services if he should.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I was a laboring man, under those conditions I surely would go there.

Mr. STONE. If this wage in Canada is so tempting as to put into the mind of my friend the thought of going across the line, it is surprising, if his contention be true, that some of the statesmen of Canada do not come over and seek homes in this land of the free.

Mr. President, I am about through with this subject of labor as between the United States and Canada, but I wish to print a table giving a comparison of the average wages paid agricultural labor in specified States and Provinces. I give in column 1 of this table the wages as fixed by the Tariff Board for season hirings and in column 2 the wages fixed by the Tariff Board for annual hirings. In column 3 I set down the wages paid in the Provinces, as given in the Canadian Census and Statistics Monthly, for season hirings; in column 4, like figures from the same source on yearly hirings; and in the fifth column I give the average value in the Provinces of board per month.

The table is as follows:

Comparison of average wages of agricultural labor in specified States and Provinces in Canada.

	Tariff Board's report, included with President's message on reciprocity, February, 1911.		From Dominion of Canada Census and Statistics Monthly, January, 1911.		Average value of board per month, from Census and Statistics Monthly, January, 1911.
	Season hiring, 1909.	Annual hiring, 1909.	Season hiring, 1909.	Annual hiring, 1909.
UNITED STATES.
Maine	$27.60	$23.17
New York	26.00	22.06
Michigan	25.10	21.57
CANADA.
Prince Edward Island	17.25	10.87	$25.27	$18.87	$8.00
Nova Scotia	21.20	15.90	31.20	25.90	10.00
New Brunswick	22.59	9.96	32.59	19.96	10.00
Quebec	23.33	17.58	33.33	27.58	10.00
Ontario	21.52	17.63	31.52	27.63	10.00
UNITED STATES.
North Dakota	33.34	29.16
Minnesota	29.25	27.83
Montana	29.29	25.00
CANADA.
Manitoba	31.84	24.17	35.95	30.46	11.00
Saskatchewan	35.14	30.83	38.30	32.49	[1] 14.00–16.00
British Columbia	30.50		45.50		15.00
UNITED STATES.
Washington	36.39

[1] This table in the Census and Statistics Monthly of Canada, January, 1911, gives value of board in Saskatchewan as $16 for 1909 and $14 for 1910. Evidently these figures should be $14 for 1909 and $16 for 1910.

This table shows that with two exceptions the Tariff Board arrived at the monthly wage paid in the Canadian Provinces as shown in columns 1 and 2 by subtracting the board of the laborer from the monthly wage as given in the Census and Statistics Monthly of Canada, January, 1911, from which the Tariff Board obtained their statistics. On the other hand, it does not appear in the Tariff Board report that the board of the laborer was deducted from his wage in the States.

Mr. STONE. I will now show the process followed by the Tariff Board in fixing the wage in the Provinces lower than the wage was fixed by the Canadian authorities. It was done in this way.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator give us the figures as to the amount paid by the season in North Dakota?

Mr. STONE. I have done that, and at the time regretted the absence of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that I tried to listen to his address, but I was called out of the Chamber for a few minutes. I wish to say to the Senator that I am a farmer, and I am paying by the season $35 per month for laboring men. No farmer pays less than $30 per month for the season. The season is generally about eight months.

Mr. STONE. That is right.

Now, for the benefit of my friend from North Dakota I will again read what I have already read from the Tariff Board report with respect to wages in North Dakota and in Saskatchewan. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not impeach or repudiate his Tariff Board. It is an official body that the Republicans have been so——

Mr. GRONNA. It is not my intention to repudiate anything. I am simply stating facts which I know to be absolutely true and which I know of my own knowledge.

Mr. STONE. I do not question anything the Senator says he knows of his own knowledge, and in this instance it is not necessary for me to do so, for the Senator and the board do not disagree. In what I said I was only seeking to impress on my friend from North Dakota and on all my friends on the other side, that they are not in position to reproach, much less to condemn and repudiate what the Tariff Board furnishes the Senate as the wages received by laborers of any kind in any country.

Now, here is what the Tariff Board says about North Dakota and Saskatchewan. The Senator spoke of season hiring. The Tariff Board speaks of season hiring also, and for the year 1910 the Tariff Board gave the average monthly wage for season hiring paid in North Dakota at $33.79, and gave the average wage paid for the same year in Saskatchewan at $35.14. In other words, the wage in Saskatchewan was $1.35 per month higher than in North Dakota. Does the Senator still think that if this reciprocity agreement goes through the farm laborers of North Dakota are likely to suffer seriously from cheap labor in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not particularly enamored with tariff boards or tariff commissions, but the Senator is quoting from the Tariff Board and holding the Republican side of the Chamber responsible for it. I have in my hand the message from the President of the United States transmitting a report from the Tariff Board in response to Senate resolution of February 23, 1911. If the Senator will turn to page 86 of that message he will find this statement by the Tariff Board:

> Where North Dakota and Manitoba join each other the wages for season hands are about $5 higher in North Dakota than in Manitoba.

Now, it seems to me that either the Tariff Board is considerably mixed on its figures or else the Senator's contention is not sustained.

Mr. STONE. I did not compare North Dakota with Manitoba.

Mr. GALLINGER. North Dakota and Manitoba adjoin each other.

Mr. STONE. So they do, and so do Saskatchewan and North Dakota adjoin each other.

Here are some figures, to which I invite the attention of the Senator, given by the Tariff Board for monthly wages on season hirings for 1910:

North Dakota	$33.79
Saskatchewan	35.14
Minnesota	31.68
Manitoba	31.84

These two States and two Provinces lie altogether in a bunch. The wage in Manitoba is somewhat below that in North Dakota, but so is the wage in Minnesota below that in North Dakota. The differences are common alike to the States and the Provinces. If the Manitoba wage is a little under that of North Dakota it is still a little above that of Minnesota. And here I will call the attention of my friend from New Hampshire to the fact that the Canadian authorities give the average wage on season hirings in Manitoba for 1910 at $40 per month.

It is not my province to defend what the Tariff Board says or does. That burden lies upon the shoulders of Senators upon the other side. The board is of their creation, not of mine or ours. For myself, I think the board is subject to criticism for the way in which it prepared and published its figures on farm wages in Canada. The Tariff Board, for example, gave the average wage in 1909 in Prince Edward Island on season hirings at $17.25, while the Canadian Government gave it at $25.27. Now, how did the Tariff Board arrive at its conclusion? Here is how it was done: The Canadian Government in the same table in which it gave the average monthly wage also gave the average value of monthly board. In Prince Edward Island the value of board was fixed at $8 per month. The Tariff Board subtracted the $8 board from the $25.27 wage, and the remainder was put down as the average wage for that Province. Take Nova Scotia for another example: The Tariff Board fixed the wage at $21.20. Canada fixed the wage at $31.20, and fixed the average value of the laborer's board at $10. The Tariff Board subtracted the $10 from the $31.20, and that left $21.20, which the Tariff Board set down as the average wage for the Province; and so on with the other Provinces. The same rule was not applied to wages and board in the States. That strikes me as strange, to say the least; it is inexplicable; I do not know why it was done. I do not know why the Tariff Board subtracted the board of the laborer in Canada from his wage and did not subtract it from the wage paid, to the American laborer. They put down so much as paid the American laborer, with board, and left it stand at that, but they subtracted the board from the Canadian wage and set the remainder down as the sum received.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if that fact appears in the report of the Tariff Board or in any official document?

Mr. STONE. It does not, so far as I have been able to find.

Mr. GALLINGER. Where did the Senator get his authority for making the statement?

Mr. STONE. I got it from the Census and Statistics Monthly issued by the department of agriculture in Canada, coupled with the statistics furnished by the Tariff Board.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me inconceivable that any board in making up a table could do so absurd a thing as to subtract the price of board in one country and not in the other.

Mr. STONE. And it seems so to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. It certainly must look so to everybody, and I think we had better wait to hear from the Tariff Board on that subject.

Mr. STONE. I tried to get the board this morning by phone, but was unable to do so. I would be glad to hear an explanation, but that is the way the matter appears in the tables and in the reports. Possibly it can be explained, and I hope it can be.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert this table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Table showing monthly wage, with board, on yearly hiring (1910) paid farm laborers in States named, as shown in table published by United States Agricultural Department in Crop Reporter, March, 1911, and also showing monthly wage, with board, on yearly hiring (1910) paid farm laborers in Canadian Provinces as shown in table published by Canadian agricultural department in Census and Statistics Monthly for January, 1911.

Maine	$23.50
Vermont	25.00
New York	23.50
Ohio	21.00
Michigan	23.00
Wisconsin	26.00
Minnesota	26.00
Iowa	28.00
Missouri	21.50
North Dakota	29.00
Montana	38.00
Washington	33.00
CANADA.
Prince Edward Island	$20.41
Nova Scotia	26.77
New Brunswick	24.12
Quebec	26.12
Ontario	27.99
Manitoba	33.33
Saskatchewan	33.54
Alberta	34.66
British Columbia (estimated)	47.00

Mr. STONE. Now, Mr. President, I am through with the labor phase of this discussion, at least for the present. I think if this official data, abstracted from the official reports of both countries, can be relied upon I have demonstrated that farm wages are not higher in the United States than in Canada. Our own official figures prove that they are not higher, while the Canadian statistics prove they are lower. If these official figures can be relied upon, then all this hullabaloo about higher wages being paid farm laborers in the United States than are paid to like laborers in Canada is the merest bosh.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. STONE. With a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Missouri is always so candid and fair that I am sure he does not want any statement to go out to the country that he does not fully believe, and so I am going to ask him a plain question. Does the Senator believe that, as between the wages of farm laborers in this country and of farm laborers in Canada, they are really 50 per cent more in Canada than in this country?

Mr. STONE. No. I do not so believe.

Mr. PAGE. Then I misunderstood the Senator, because I understood him to state that the labor wage in this country is $10.21, as against $30 in Canada; in other words, more than 50 per cent more in Canada than here.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean the average of the whole country?

Mr. PAGE. I took the Senator's statement as he gave it, and if I misunderstood him I want to be corrected.

Mr. STONE. This is my answer to the Senator's question as I now understand him: The figures I have given show the average wages paid farm laborers in all the States to be $19.21 per month. These figures I have taken from official reports furnished by the Agricultural Department of the United States. The average wages I have given for Canadian labor in all the Provinces I have taken from two sources, first, from the report of the Tariff Board, and, second, from a report given out by the agricultural department of Canada. Comparing the average monthly wage on yearly hirings for the whole United States as given by our Agricultural Department with the average of all the Provinces according to the estimates of the Tariff Board, we have this result:

Average for the United States	$19.21
Average for all the Provinces	19.30

Comparing the same average for the United States with the average of the Provinces as given by the Canadian Government, we have this result:

Average for the United States	$19.21
Average for all the Provinces	30.44

According to our own statistics, the average wage in Canada is slightly higher than in the United States, while the Canadian statistics show the average wage in Canada to be much higher than here. Does the Senator ask me to say that the Agricultural Department of the United States, so long and so ably conducted under the wise and judicious supervision of its distinguished and venerable head, publishes statistics that are incorrect; that they can not be relied upon; that they are absolutely untrue; or does he ask me to say that the agricultural department of Canada has cooked up and falsified figures, without any apparent object, to deceive?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am not seeking to question the figures of the Senator from Missouri. I am simply asking him if he wishes it to go out to the world that he believes (and he certainly has given us language which prompts us to think he believes) that as a matter of fact the wages of Canada are 50 per cent more than they are in this country. That is a plain question as to the Senator's belief.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator wants my belief as to whether the official figures furnished by the agricultural departments of the two countries are reliable, I am bound to say that prima facie they are reliable. Being from Missouri, until I can be shown to the contrary, I must accept the official data as accurate.

Mr. PAGE. I simply wish to press the matter home. Does the Senator say to me that he believes in his own heart——

Mr. STONE. My heart does not exercise the function of believing. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. Of course I would not insist that the Senator was uncandid. He can not be.

Mr. STONE. I am not uncandid, nor do I intend to be.

Mr. PAGE. But living as I do within the shadow of the border wall, as I am only 33 miles from the line, I know it is not true. I know that it can not be true. I believe the Senator himself knows as well as I do that it is absolutely impossible.

I remember that during the contest over the tariff bill of 1909 the question of wage in the granite industry in Vermont and across the line came up and I took pains to investigate it. I found that in the town of Stanstead, Quebec, about 50 miles from where I live, the price paid for the commonest kind of labor was 20 cents per hour in the granite quarries, and about 15 miles from where I live, in Hardwick, Vt.—and the towns of Stanstead and Hardwick are only about 35 or 40 miles apart—the wages were 25 cents per hour or 25 per cent more on this side of the Canadian border than on the other. Anyone who lives on the border, as, for instance, our good friend the Senator from North Dakota, knows that it can not be possible that wages under like conditions are higher in Canada than the United States, and yet we have a right to infer that the Senator from Missouri believes they are. I do not believe he has been correctly shown anything of that kind, for nothing of that kind really exists.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont is somewhat too provincial in the scope of his thought respecting this particular matter. He speaks of wages in Vermont and in the adjoining Province, while at the time he interrupted me I was reading comparisons made in official figures relating to all the States of the Union and all the Provinces of the Dominion.

I call the attention of my friend from Vermont to the fact that the average monthly wage for the season of 1910 in British Columbia was $57.40, as given by the Canadian Government, and the average value of the laborer's board was fixed at $17 per month. If we should follow the rule established by the Tariff Board and subtract the $17 from the $57.40, there would still remain $40.40 as the wage paid in cash. That is nearly double the cash wage paid in Vermont for farm labor. The wages in the other northwestern Provinces are not quite so high as in British Columbia, still in all those Provinces the wage is very high, and in all of them far above the wage paid in Vermont. You can, of course, select a given State in New England or elsewhere and compare the wages paid in that State with the wages paid in some particular Province and find that the wages in the particular State are higher than in the particular Province; but when you take the figures as given by the two Governments and average them as a whole you will get a totally different and more accurate result. I have no reason to question the accuracy of the statistics published by the agricultural departments of the two Governments.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I apprehend that the Senator from Missouri is not only giving the Senate his views, but is giving to the country at large his opinion with reference to the comparative wages in the United States and in Canada. I want to believe that he desires to be candid, and I want to believe that he means to have the public understand that he has compared like with like. If he takes the wages paid in the Klondike and compares them with the wages of South Carolina, under conditions so vastly different, he may reach conclusions that can be explained away.

Mr. STONE. But I have done nothing of that kind, nor have I had the remotest thought of doing so.

Mr. PAGE. But the general proposition that wages are higher in Canada than they are here is something that is so foreign to those who have lived near the border and who understand those conditions from personal contact that I did not feel I ought to allow the Senator to make the statement without question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. If my friend from Vermont will pardon me for saying so, it seems to me that he follows closely the Yankee fashion of answering a question by asking one. I put a direct question to him which he evades by a counterquestion. I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator from Missouri a question for information. I am greatly interested in this discussion. I ask the Senator whether in making this average it does not make a very great difference that the colored labor of the South is very much cheaper than the labor in any other part of the country?

Mr. STONE. I think that should be and will be taken into consideration; and yet the colored laborers of the South are chiefly engaged in farm work, and they constitute a part of the great army of men who work on the farm. Of necessity they are included in any average of wages made for the United States; but undoubtedly the wage paid the colored laborers in the Southern States is below the average paid to white laborers in the Northern States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but inasmuch as the laborer is paid so much less per month or per day than is paid in the North, especially in the States along the border, States this reciprocity agreement is going to very seriously affect, it is proper that we should keep that in view.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator that the tables I shall print contain complete data which any intelligent man can use to make any comparison he may desire between different States or between different States and Provinces. I will furnish the material for any kind of comparison any man wants to make, and from that he can draw such conclusions as will best appeal to his own judgment or afford him the greatest comfort.

Mr. GALLINGER. I venture to make the assertion, and I will endeavor to substantiate it before this debate closes, that taking the rate of wages paid in agricultural pursuits, starting in New York State and going to Eastport, Me., we pay from 20 to 25 per cent more than is paid across the line in Canada. I make that statement without any qualification whatever.

Mr. STONE. Very well, we will wait to discuss that promise until the Senator makes his showing.

Mr. President, I have now concluded what I have to say on the subject of labor for a short while. I will now direct my attention, and, so far as I can, the attention of the Senate to the comparative prices or values of live stock in the States and the Provinces.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the Senator from Missouri passes to this new subject I want to be clear about one thing, because the statement made by the Senator from Missouri is a startling one, and if it be a just criticism of the Tariff Board it is one that well deserves examination.

May I say here, in answer to the very kind reference made to me in my relation to the Tariff Board, I beg the Senator from Missouri will remember that I have never been an advocate of the present system—that is, the present Tariff Board or a board of experts. I have been doing what little I can for the establishment of a permanent as well as a nonpartisan and independent tariff board, with a continuous existence and with the necessary power to ascertain the truth in respect to these things. I do not in saying that disparage the work of the present board at all, but I want it to be fully understood that the existing system is not one to my liking, and it is one I intend to use what little influence I have to change just as soon as I can. I tried it at the last session, but I found the Senator from Missouri a great obstacle in the way of bringing about the change that we so much desired. I hope the Senator from Missouri will follow me in this reference. The Senator has stated that in Table 2 of the message of the President of the United States, transmitting this information in response to a resolution which I had the honor to offer, on page 85, in determining the monthly wage of workers in the United States or in certain States of the United States and in certain Provinces of Canada the board in dealing with the Canadian wage has deducted the price of board. I marvel at this, because the table begins with this statement:

Average wages of agricultural labor, with board, in specified States, eastern Canada, and British Columbia, 1909.

Now, if the Tariff Board has deducted the cost of living from the wages of the Canadian workingman, then the statement contained in the beginning of the table is an error, because it declares that these are the average wages of labor with board. It will be observed that with reference to the Canadian table a reference is made to the Canadian Census and Statistics Monthly, January, 1911, page 2. I have not that publication at my hand.

Mr. STONE. I have it here.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I ask the Senator from Missouri, and it is entirely for information and not in the way of contradicting what he has said, if the pamphlet to which reference is made shows that the average wages in Prince Edward Island are twenty-five dollars and some cents per month with board?

Mr. STONE. The Senator asks me if the pamphlet shows that fact. What pamphlet?

Mr. CUMMINS. I mean the pamphlet to which reference is here made. It is alleged or suggested here that these figures are taken from the Canadian Census and Statistics Monthly, January, 1911, page 2.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will hand the Senator from Iowa the table printed in the Canadian Census and Statistics Monthly, January, 1911, to which reference is made in the report of the Tariff Board.

Now, here is what I wish to call the attention of the Senator to. There is nothing that I have found in the report of the Tariff Board showing in so many words that the laborer's board was deducted from his wage, but here is what I do find in this table. The Senator can see by examining that the wage is given for both season and yearly hirings, and that the average value of board per month is given in the last column of the table.

Mr. WARREN. Will both Senators be kind enough, so far as they can, to state to us what table it is and the page, because we shall want to look it up hereafter, and do not now like to break in and ask questions?

Mr. STONE. The table which I handed the Senator from Iowa is printed in a publication issued by the Canadian department of agriculture, entitled "Census and Statistics Monthly." The table appears——

Mr. WARREN. What date?

Mr. STONE. I was going to say it appears in the issue of January, 1911.

Now I am going to ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to hold that table in his hand while I read from a table I have prepared partly from it and partly from the report of the Tariff Board. Let us take Prince Edward Island for comparison on season hirings——

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg the Senator to remember that I only asked with regard to yearly hiring.

Mr. STONE. Then, we will take the yearly hiring. The monthly average wage for annual hirings in Prince Edward Island, as shown in the report of the Tariff Board, is $10.87, with board; while the monthly wage on annual hirings as shown in the Canadian publication, which the Senator holds in his hand, is $18.87.

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg pardon of the Senator. That does not appear in just that way. Here [indicating in the book] are the yearly hirings. The figures are given for the year.

Mr. STONE. They are; but the amount stated is $226.47 per year.

Mr. CUMMINS. For male labor.

Mr. STONE. Yes; and if the Senator will divide $226.47 by 12 he will find the monthly wage to be as I give it, $18.87.

Mr. CUMMINS. I take it for granted, however, that the average is intended to be the average for both male and female.

Mr. STONE. I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. It says "agricultural labor."

Mr. STONE. Well, I have been speaking of agricultural labor, and the figures used relate only to wages paid to males.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it will be remarked that under the same table here the price paid to female help, as against $226.47 for male help, is but $144.27.

Mr. STONE. I have not taken up female wages, for the reason that it has not been the subject of calculation in the reports as I have used them.

Mr. CUMMINS. It might be necessary, however, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. We are talking about agricultural farm labor, and females are not reckoned as farm laborers, but domestics. But, aside from that, what I want to do is to show the Senator that whereas the Tariff Board fixes the monthly wage on annual hirings in Prince Edward Island at $10.87, the Canadian Government fixes it at $18.87. The laborer's board is valued at $8 per month in Prince Edward Island. Now, if you subtract $8 from $18.87, it leaves $10.87, the exact amount given by the Tariff Board as the wage, with board, paid in that Province.

In Nova Scotia the Tariff Board gives the monthly wage at $15.90, while the Canadian Government gives it at $29.90. I think there is a mistake in the figures given by the Tariff Board; I think they should be $19.90 instead of $15.90. Subtract $10, the value of the board, from $29.90 and you have $19.90 left.

Mr. SMOOT. The figures are $15.90. The Senator had them right in the first place.

Mr. STONE. But I think there is a typographical mistake.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator had the figures right in the first place.

Mr. STONE. Very well. Run down the list, taking New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, and so on, and you will find that in each instance the Tariff Board deducted the value of the monthly board of the Canadian laborer from his total compensation including board, and gave the remainder as the wage received.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is very evident that a serious mistake has been made in the table presented by the Tariff Board, no matter upon what basis it may be considered, whether including all the males and all the females, or simply the males.

Mr. STONE. My friend can take the average for yearly hiring in Ontario——

Mr. SMOOT. That includes males and females.

Mr. STONE. No; I am taking males, and I have the figures both for season hiring and yearly hiring. Let me give the figures——

Mr. WARREN. Aside from the figures which the Senator from Missouri has quoted, in the Senator's personal knowledge does he believe that those figures are correct?

Mr. STONE. I have only a limited personal knowledge about the matter.

Mr. WARREN. They do not seem to conform to any knowledge that we have.

Mr. STONE. My statement is that if you will subtract the average board as given by the Canadian Government for Canadian workmen from the laborers' wage as given by the Canadian Government, the remainder will be the wage as given by the Tariff Board for Canadian farm labor.

Mr. WARREN. How much per month is the average board for agricultural laborers in yearly hiring?

Mr. STONE. It varies in different Provinces.

Mr. WARREN. We know the figures are absolutely incorrect as to the yearly price of labor and the price per month.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is not now dealing with the price of labor in this country, but he is dealing with the price of labor in Canada.

Mr. WARREN. The comparison is in my mind, and it is incorrect in both cases.

Mr. STONE. I will put it up to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] as I did to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. The figures as to this country are taken from the official report of our Department of Agriculture, indorsed by the Tariff Board. The Canadian figures are taken from the official report of the Canadian Department of Agriculture. The Senator may wave his hand arbitrarily and say that these figures are false; that the Tariff Board and the Secretary of Agriculture of this country and the minister of agriculture in Canada are ignorant and that they are giving statistics to the people of their respective countries which are absolutely unreliable. The Senator can take that position if he pleases.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, well, there are opportunities for misunderstandings; but facts which are in the minds of those who are observant, of course, can not be set aside upon the array of any man's figures until we have had at least the opportunity to compare them.

Mr. STONE. What are the average wages paid farm laborers in Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. They run from $25 to $45 a month.

Mr. STONE. What will that make the average?

Mr. WARREN. Of course, they have board besides.

Mr. STONE. That makes what average?

Mr. WARREN. An average of $35 a month.

Mr. STONE. I do not, of course, know the extent of the Senator's knowledge or the extent of his inquiry into the subject, but I accept his assurance. Now this table I hold, printed in the Crop Reporter, was made by the Department of Agriculture and, the officials say, was compiled after diligent inquiry, and on that showing I hold that prima facie it is entitled to credence. Let us test its accuracy in Wyoming. In this table the Department of Agriculture gives the average monthly wage in Wyoming for 1910 at $35, being exactly what the Senator from Wyoming says the average monthly wage is in his State.

Mr. JONES. With board?

Mr. STONE. With board—just as the Senator from Wyoming says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. JONES. I merely asked whether the figures given by the Senator from Missouri included board. I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say that his figures did not include board.

Mr. WARREN. Farm laborers in Wyoming get $35, with board.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Senator in the first instance.

Mr. WARREN. Net. Of course the farm laborer has his board.

Mr. STONE. So I understood the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri asked me what my information was. I dislike to inject my personality into the debate, but I will say that I have paid wages to not less than a hundred men and from that to several hundred men a month for a great many years, engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Mr. STONE. In herding or in farming?

Mr. WARREN. In both.

Mr. STONE. How much is paid to those engaged in farming?

Mr. WARREN. The wages do not vary much in farming and herding. Since the Senator has been good enough to ask me regarding my State, I wish the Senator would tell us from his personal experience what farm laborers get in his State.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator from Wyoming refer to farm hands?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I should be glad to know what wages they receive.

Mr. STONE. They get much less than in Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to know from the Senator's own knowledge and then consult the figures and ascertain if they come out as well as they do for Wyoming.

Mr. STONE. I am not so ready to speak from personal knowledge as are the Senators from Wyoming and Vermont. My own knowledge is somewhat limited, and I could not speak from that standpoint with confidence, but the figures as given by the Agricultural Department put the Missouri average much below that of Wyoming and the other new and rapidly growing States of the Northwest. The wages, with board on annual hirings in Missouri, are put down in the table prepared by the Agricultural Department, and from which I have read to the Senator, at $21.50 per month. The Tariff Board places the Missouri wage somewhat below that sum.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Observing the difference in wages in Missouri, a central State, and in Wyoming, near the northern line, does not the Senator think that the wages in the States bordering along Canada should be considered as apart, perhaps, from those in the extreme southernmost State when comparing them with Canadian wages and trying to ascertain what might be the effect of this reciprocity measure which the Senator is indorsing?

Mr. STONE. If it had been convenient and agreeable to my friend to have been present during the remarks I have made to the Senate and heard all that I said, he would know that I did compare the border States with the border Provinces, and then I took up and compared the two countries as a whole. We were upon this latter phase of the subject when the Senator came in and had his attention called to the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. In examining both reports I can not arrive at any other conclusion than that which the Senator from Missouri has reached, that the Tariff Board has made a mistake in relation to the Provinces of Canada by deducting from the statement of wages the amount of board, as referred to in the Canadian Census and Statistics Monthly of January, 1911, page 2. There is no doubt in my mind but what the mistake has occurred in this report just as the Senator from Missouri has indicated. I can not conceive how the board made the mistake, but they evidently have done so in this particular report.

Mr. STONE. So it looked to me. It may be that the mistake is only apparent and can be explained. It is not my purpose to criticize the Tariff Board unduly or unjustly. I merely desire to call attention to what appears to be a mistake. Possibly it can be explained to our satisfaction. So far as my argument goes, it is in no wise materially affected even if the board has committed no error. If no error has been committed, and if the figures given by the Tariff Board are correct, it still remains that according to the statistics of both Governments the wages in Canada, taken as a whole, are somewhat higher than in the United States. The only effect of the mistake I have indicated, if a mistake has been made as seems to be the case, is to increase the margin of difference in favor of Canada above that shown by the figures of the Tariff Board.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as I asked the question which precipitated this examination, I desire to say that the conclusion of the Senator from Missouri seems to me to be true. There must be a mistake in the table as reported by the Tariff Board.

Mr. STONE. The mistake consists in the fact that the Tariff Board ought not to have deducted the laborer's board in the Provinces without deducting it in the States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know whether it was deducted in the States or not.

Mr. STONE. I do not find anything to indicate that it was.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no information upon that point, but the Tariff Board refers to the pamphlet that I hold in my hand, furnished me by the Senator from Missouri, as the source of its information. Consulting that source, it is manifest that the board has deducted the cost of living in the Canadian Provinces, and therefore that the statement at the beginning of the table is incorrect, because it does not represent Canadian wages with board.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing except the heading of the table in the report in relation to the wages of American farmers to suggest that the cost of board has not also been deducted in that instance. Therefore we can not say whether the Tariff Board has deducted that item or not; but, even with the board added to the wages paid to the farm laborer in Canada, there is but very little difference between the wage paid in Canada and the wage paid in the United States, according to this table.

LIVE STOCK.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will leave the wage question at this point and proceed to discuss the comparative values of live stock as between the United States and Canada. Preliminary to that, I will read a part of a resolution or address recently adopted at a mass meeting held at Sikeston, Mo., on April 22, by citizens of my State who are interested in agricultural pursuits. This meeting was held to protest against this reciprocity agreement. I read from the address, as follows:

We are painfully aware of the fact that owing to such favorable conditions—

The alleged favorable conditions having been previously recited in the address—

Owing to such favorable conditions Canada has in the past been able to pay the duty and make large shipments of cattle and wheat to this country, and we can not but believe were the tariff barriers withdrawn the effect would be ruinous to many of our agricultural sections.

I shall not take up the subject of wheat at this time. I have already indicated my purpose to do that later on. I shall confine myself to live stock now—one thing at a time. And here I wish also to read part of a letter that I received recently from a friend of mine residing in Texas—a large cattle raiser and shipper. I think he was at one time president of a live-stock association in the Southwest, and I know he was until recently the president of the Western or Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress. I refer to Col. Ike T. Pryor. He has written me a letter protesting against the proposed reciprocity agreement, in which he says:

The stockman and farmer can not compete with Mexico or Canada (more especially Mexico) in producing live stock on competitive markets. In the first place, the labor in Mexico is very cheap, while in the United States it is high. In the second place, land on which live stock is produced in Mexico is very cheap, while in the United States it is reasonably high, both of which facts would give Mexican and Canadian producers a decided advantage over our home producers. I hope I am not overly selfish in holding these views, and I need not tell you should live stock be placed on the free list it would result in my going out of the cattle business in the United States and taking up the same occupation in Mexico; and I believe in this I voice the sentiments of a great many thousands of live-stock producers in the United States.

Mr. President, I will dispose of that part of this letter referring to Mexico by saying, that there is no proposition anywhere pending to put Mexican cattle on the free list—certainly not in this reciprocity agreement, for that relates to Canada only—and there is no proposition pending or expected, so far as I know, to put the live stock of Mexico on the free list. Hence there is no need to consume time in discussing that. But my friend, Col. Pryor, seems to think that if Canadian cattle are put on the free list he will have to go out of the cattle business, or go into Mexico if he would continue in it. Like the Missouri farmers who met at Sikeston, Col. Pryor fears Canadian cattle duty free, to say nothing of Mexican cattle, would drive him out of the cattle business.

I want to show Col. Pryor and these friends of mine at Sikeston, and all others who suffer from this apprehension, that they are mistaken so far as cattle and other live stock are concerned. I want to show them that they have been imposed upon and that there is no danger of an overflow of cheap Canadian cattle into the United States. Now, as to the facts: First, let use see about dairy cattle. Turning to the Tariff Board report, at page 109, here is what I find about dairy cattle. I will read it:

Prices of dairy cows range from $33 to $39 a head in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North Dakota the range is practically the same. In the western border States of Montana, Idaho, and Washington the range is from $41.80 to $46.50. In eastern Canada prices of dairy cows range from $32 to $48, and in western Canada from $39 to $41. The highest Canadian price quoted is $48 in Ontario as against $46.50 in Montana, the highest American price.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is the Senator reading from the report of the Tariff Board?

Mr. STONE. It is the report of the Tariff Board sent by the President to the Senate in response to a resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. HEYBURN. And it gives the price of cows in Idaho?

Mr. STONE. Dairy cows.

Mr. HEYBURN. Dairy cows, and gives the price at from $35 to $45 per head?

Mr. STONE. Let me see. It says:

In the western border States of Montana, Idaho, and Washington the range is from $41.80 to $46.50.

Mr. HEYBURN. They readily command, I think I might safely say, double that.

Mr. CUMMINS (to Mr. STONE). On page 110 you will find Idaho specified.

Mr. STONE. I will turn over to that page.

Mr. GALLINGER. What page is that?

Mr. STONE. Page 110. On that page is a table giving prices in various States and Provinces. The average in Idaho for dairy cows is fixed in this table at $41.40.

Mr. HEYBURN. Forty-one dollars?

Mr. STONE. That is the average.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is above the other average——

Mr. STONE. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it is very much below the fact.

Mr. STONE. It is not above the average of the values given in what I first read. That covered three States—Montana, Idaho, and Washington—and gave a range of values for the three States of $41.80 to $46.50.

Mr. HEYBURN. In my State a cow that is considered worth keeping and feeding will bring $75 and upward.

Mr. STONE. The Senator can settle that with the Tariff Board—his Tariff Board. The Tariff Board claims to have investigated the facts and to speak with definite information. I will not stop to exchange offhand opinions with the Senator.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, of course that means that that is the general average on the general range of cattle. It does not mean that there may not be here and there, in connection with private residence, a cow running up to $70. At the same time there are a great many on the range that run down to $20.

Mr. HEYBURN. Dairy cows are not kept on what we call the range. They are kept within an area where they can be found at least twice a day, and they are fed and taken care of, as they should be in any country. The price of dairy cows that are considered worth keeping is above $75. The accidental scrub cows, of course, have a price according to the individual cow.

Mr. STONE. I am speaking not of scrub cows, but of dairy cows. I do not know whether the cows described in the report are Jerseys, Holsteins, or what, but they are dairy cows.

Mr. HEYBURN. The price will run up above $100 when you get into that class of cattle.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. The average dairy cow is a grade cow and worth less than half as much as the Senator from Idaho estimates. Of course the registered Jersey cows are worth more, and, taking the highest as well as the lowest prices of them, would perhaps average $100. But the average dairy cow of the country will not command one-half that much. They certainly will not equal $50 per head.

Mr. HEYBURN. The effort has been for years to raise the standard of our cattle, both beef cattle and dairy cows, and it has resulted in the establishment of some of the best cattle-breeding farms in the United States, and it has resulted in raising the grade even of the ordinary dairy cow so far above what it was a few years ago that unless you have kept pace with the advancement in the betterment of the grade of dairy cattle you are apt to be mistaken in an estimate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to say just a word? As a farmer all my life, I can assert that throughout New Jersey and the most of New York it is a rarity to find a milch cow in the dairy districts that will command over $50. There are instances, as the Senator states, where dairy cows will run from a hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars, and I have neighbors who have paid as high as $2,500 for a cow. But the average cow throughout the dairy districts of New York State, up in great Orange County, the dairying county of New York State, and through Sussex County, will not average over from forty-five to fifty dollars.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I simply desire to state that in the dairy districts of the State of Washington a cow at less than $50 is a rarity.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can find you hundreds of them for $40 throughout Sussex.

Mr. JONES. I am speaking simply of the State of Washington. I know nothing at all about New Jersey or New York.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Washington might buy cows in New Jersey and sell them in Washington at a good profit.

Mr. JONES. Not very well, with the expense of sending them out there. It is too far.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a word. It does seem to be conceded that the dairies of the East are composed at least in part of mixed breeds of cattle. Among men who engage in dairying for profit in the West they do not keep mixed cattle to any extent.

Mr. STONE. It certainly will not be contended seriously by the Senator from Idaho that in his State, or in any State, dairies kept and run as a business for milk and butter are made up of thoroughbred cows?

Mr. HEYBURN. To a very large extent, and more so every year.

Mr. STONE. My observation has been and my belief is that dairy herds are made up for the most part of mixed blood or grade cattle. The thoroughbreds are used chiefly for improving the grade cows. Thoroughbred bulls are often sold at high prices, and cows, too, for breeding purposes.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Missouri should consider that in a new country, where we are stocking up for the first time, we are not apt to have any carried-over stock, as it were, while in an older country they have a remnant of a condition that is not the same as that which prevails in a new country. We have very little of what you would call the old breed of cattle. Whatever we have is new and the best.

Mr. STONE. There is at Columbia, Mo., a thoroughbred dairy cow called Missouri Chief Josephine, now about 8 years old, belonging to the State agricultural farm, valued at $20,000. One of her calves sold for $3,000. But that cow is of course a rare exception. Such cows are produced only in Missouri.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have a herd in New Hampshire that will compare favorably even with that famous Missouri cow. But that was not what I rose to inquire about. This is an interesting phase of this discussion. As I understand from this table which the Senator has quoted, the average value of dairy cows in the United States is $35.79?

Mr. STONE. No; not in the United States; in 17 States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, in 17 States—the dairy States?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. They comprise the dairy States. Thirty-five dollars and seventy-nine cents and in Canada $43?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have never believed we would get much for the United States out of this reciprocity agreement. People have talked about its being a great boon to us to get into the Canadian market for cattle, and yet it seems that that is a delusion and a snare. According to the Senator's argument, we are not going to get any benefit from that, and the claim that reduced cost of living will result is a myth.

Mr. STONE. I think we would get benefits from reciprocal trade in Canada. But I will not now be diverted into an argument about benefits, which would lead me entirely away from what I am discussing and thus confuse when I am seeking to instruct. Later on we will discuss the question of benefits. One thing at a time.

Mr. BAILEY. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri, I have here the Statistical Abstract, which gives, on page 148, the number and value of specified farm animals. The number of milch cows in this country in 1910 is given as 21,801,000, and the value of those milch cows as $780,308,000, making an average value of less than $40 per head in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. The average.

Mr. STONE. As the Senator from New Hampshire has already called attention to the average price of dairy cows in 17 States and in the Provinces of Canada, showing the average in the States to be $35.79 and in the Provinces $43, perhaps I had better read into the RECORD the names of the States from which this average is made. They are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me for a moment, although I hardly will get credit for it, I have had some little experience in this business. The trouble with the Senator from Idaho is that he estimates the value of a cow when she is at her best, giving milk, whereas the average of the same herd of cattle is based upon the value of the cow when it is not in that condition of productivity, if I may use such a term, and when it is giving no milk at all. Therefore the two things are very different. A cow is productive, practically, for only one-half the time; of course she gives milk largely more than half the time, but the average value is not the value at her best. A cow in full milk is worth fully 50 per cent more than when she is not giving milk. So the average must be taken that way.

Mr. HEYBURN. A cow is averaged up for a year, and she sells on her yearly average. It is not a dairy cow after it ceases to be productive.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; they are all dairy cattle.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is converted into meat or whatever it can be converted into.

Mr. BACON. Certainly that is what is meant when they take the average of dairy cattle. They mean dairy herds. They do not mean simply the cattle at their best in giving milk.

Mr. HEYBURN. A cow that has a record or can make one is worth as much at one time of the year as another.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President and Senators, with your permission, I will now proceed. I have given the average for the 17 States and for the Provinces. I wish now to make some particular comparisons. In the eastern border States, from Maine to New York, prices for dairy cows range from $33 to $39 per head; in the Middle States, from Michigan to North Dakota, inclusive, dairy cows likewise range from $33 to $39 per head; in Montana, Idaho, and Washington the range of prices rises from $41.80 to $46.50. In the eastern Provinces of Canada the value of dairy cows ranges from $32 to $48, as against $33 to $39 for the Eastern States. In western Canada the value runs from $39 to $41, as against $33 to $39 in the Middle States and $41.80 to $46.50 in Montana, Idaho, and Washington.

Mr. President, I wish especially to commend these figures to Dairyman Gardner, the master of the Massachusetts State Grange. He is engaged in the dairy business, and when before the Finance Committee last February he seemed to be suffering acutely from an oppressive fear that if this reciprocity agreement should be consented to by Congress the prices of his dairy stock might be disastrously affected.

Having said this much about dairy cattle, I will now speak of other cattle. I will begin by reading an excerpt from page 110 of the Tariff Board's report:

Prices of other cattle vary in the United States from $14.30 a head in Minnesota to $27.40 in Montana, while in Canada the range of prices is from $31 in Saskatchewan to $34 in Ontario.

Does no one rise to dispute that?

Next I will call attention to some figures given at page 130 of the Tariff Board report, which furnish a comparison of prices—specific prices—in certain cities. The first comparison to which I call attention is between Buffalo, N. Y., and Toronto, Canada. According to the table of prices given by the Tariff Board the producer's price for beef steers and heifers ranges from $4 to $6.20 per hundred pounds at Buffalo, while at Toronto the price runs from $4 to $5.65. These figures are for January, 1911.

Next, take stockers and feeders. At Buffalo the price for this class of cattle ranges from $3.30 to $4.75; at Toronto, $3.75 to $5. This table covers other descriptions of cattle, but instead of reading all of it I will insert it.

Now, let us compare Detroit, Mich., with Windsor, Ontario. Beef steers and heifers range in market price at Detroit from $3.65 to $5.30 per hundred pounds, and at Windsor from $3.95 to $5.60 per hundred pounds. Stockers and feeders range at Detroit from $2.45 to $4.15 and at Windsor from $3.70 to $4.90 per hundred pounds.

There is also in these tables a comparison of wholesale prices as well as the prices of producers, and relatively they run about the same. There are other tables and other comparisons, but what I have given should suffice. However, Mr. President, I will ask leave to insert in my remarks the two tables on page 130 of the Tariff Board's report to which I have alluded. They can be studied with profit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted as requested.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Comparative prices of agricultural products, January, 1911.

LIVE STOCK AND MEATS.

[Prices quoted January, 1911.]

Commodity.	Price.	Buffalo, N. Y., and Toronto, Canada.
		Producer's price.		Wholesale price.
		Highest.	Lowest.	Highest.	Lowest.
		Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.
Beef steers and heifers	A.	$6.20	$4.00	$6.75	$5.25
	C.	5.65	4.00	6.25	4.50
Beef cows	A.	4.80	3.55	5.35	4.00
	C.	4.75	2.60	5.25	3.00
Stockers and feeders	A.	4.75	3.30	5.25	3.75
	C.	5.00	3.75	5.50	4.25
Calves	A.	6.55	5.35	7.25	6.00
	C.	7.80	2.50	8.50	3.00
		Per head.	Per head.	Per head.	Per head.
Milkers and springers	A.	$61.00	$18.00	$70.00	$20.00
	C.	71.00	26.00	80.00	30.00
		Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.
Lambs	A.	$5.90	$4.15	$6.50	$4.75
	C.	6.70	5.20	6.25	5.75
Sheep	A.	4.60	2.25	4.50	2.70
	C.	4.15	2.55	4.65	3.00
Hogs	A.	7.75	5.40	8.50	6.00
	C.	9.30	6.50	10.00	7.15

Commodity.	Price.	Detroit, Mich., and Windsor, Ontario.
		Producer's price.		Commission price.
		Highest.	Lowest.	Highest.	Lowest.
		Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.
Beef steers and heifers	A.	$5.30	$3.65	$6.00	$4.25
	C.	5.60	3.95	6.25	4.50
Beef cows	A.	4.00	3.00	4.50	3.50
	C.	4.65	2.50	5.25	3.00
Stockers and feeders	A.	4.15	2.45	4.75	3.00
	C.	4.90	3.70	5.50	4.25
Calves	A.	8.75	3.40	9.50	4.00
	C.	7.25	2.50	8.00	3.00
		Per head.	Per head.	Per head.	Per head.
Milkers and springers	A.	$47.00	$20.00	$55.00	$25.00
	C.	70.00	25.00	80.00	30.00
		Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.	Per 100 lbs.
Lambs	A.	$5.60	$3.90	$6.25	$4.50
	C.	5.65	5.15	6.25	5.75
Sheep	A.	4.70	2.00	4.25	2.50
	C.	4.15	2.55	4.65	3.00
Hogs	A.	8.40	5.50	9.15	6.25
	C.	9.20	6.50	10.00	7.15

(In this table A. stands for United States and C. for Canada.)

Mr. STONE. Now, I wish to call attention to what I consider a rather important fact. During the five years, from 1906 to 1911, the value of all cattle, dutiable and free, imported from Canada into the United States was $1,193,796, while the value of the dutiable cattle exported during that period from the United States to Canada was $1,578,179, showing an excess of exports over imports of $384,383.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question at this point, because I do not think that any conclusions can be drawn from the statement that he has just made without either explanation or an addition to it.

Mr. STONE. I am going to make one explanation——

Mr. CUMMINS. Namely, what are the duties——

Mr. STONE. I am just going to refer to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; then I will withhold my question.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Iowa anticipated me just a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. STONE. The Canadian and American tariff duties on cattle are not materially different. The duties levied in the respective countries are as follows:

Canada, duty on all cattle, 25 per cent ad valorem.

United States, duty on cattle under 1 year old, $2 each.

Duty on cattle over 1 year old and worth not over $14 per head, $3.75 each.

Duty on cattle worth $14 or over, 27½ per cent ad valorem.

On imported cattle which come in under a specific rate it is necessary to ascertain their value in order to estimate the equivalent ad valorem. Accordingly I requested Mr. Charles M. Pepper, the head of the Bureau of Trade Relations, to reduce specific duties to ad valorem duties and inform me what was the ad valorem duty paid on all Canadian cattle imported into the United States for the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1910. I assumed that the imports of that year would represent a fair average of the imports for a series of years. Responding to my request Mr. Pepper wrote me as follows:

United States dutiable imports for consumption of cattle from Canada during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, consisted of 5,168 head, valued at $109,772, a per capita value of $21.24. Reference to Canadian export statistics shows that approximately three-fourths of these were over 1 year old and were therefore dutiable at 27½ per cent ad valorem, only 2½ per cent higher than the Canadian rate of 25 per cent against American cattle. The remaining one-fourth were dutiable at but $2 each, an average ad valorem of only 21 per cent. In the face of identical duties, Mexico during the same period sold to the United States $2,594,706 worth of cattle, the majority of which were taxed at 27½ per cent. This shows that if Canada had wished to sell her cattle in the United States she could have found a good market in spite of the duty.

So, Mr. President, it appears that of the cattle imported from Canada last year three-fourths paid a duty of 27½ per cent and one-fourth a duty of 21 per cent ad valorem as against 25 per cent paid on our exports to Canada. It will be observed that the average ad valorem rate paid on cattle going from the States to the Dominion and coming from the Dominion into the States was almost identical.

And now, Mr. President, I desire to introduce a distinguished Canadian witness. I will take the liberty of reading a brief extract from an address delivered in the Canadian House of Commons on March 7, 1911, by the Hon. Mr. Currie, a member of that body. I have been reading with keen interest the debate in the House of Commons, and I find that there are many members of that body as intensely opposed to this reciprocity agreement as any Senator on this floor. Mr. Currie is one of them. I read as follows from his speech:

We hear a great deal about the cattle trade in Ontario. The honorable member from South Wellington [Mr. Guthrie] told the House, with a great deal of chest benting—

They are almost as complimentary over there as we are on this side of the line—

That he would warrant that the statistics of the Mail were very reliable, and that if one opened the Mail he would find that at any time in the last 10 years the price of beef cattle was higher in Chicago than in Toronto.

That seemed strange to me, because when I was a young newspaper man I used to write the market reports for the Mail, and I know a little about the business.

Thereupon Mr. Currie, like the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Wyoming, proceeded to testify and give his personal experience. Proceeding, he says:

However, I went to the library and I hunted up the files of the Mail, and I took the prices at haphazard for each two weeks during those several years; and I have prepared a table and that table shows, among other things, that when a professional man talks to an intelligent audience like this he ought to speak the truth, because I never heard in all my life so many absolutely improbable and untruthful—if that is a parliamentary expression—statements made with regard to any question as have been made about this treaty. To get these prices I took the steer weighing about 1,100 pounds, which would average about 70 per cent of the cattle. Of course, there may be a high-priced bunch that would fetch a dollar a hundredweight more than the ordinary animals for Christmas beef or something like that, but I took the prices for the standard animal in Toronto and Chicago from the files of the Mail and Empire from 1901 to 1910, and this is the result:

	Toronto.	Chicago.
May 4, 1901	$4.25	$3.95
May 14, 1902	5.25	5.00
May 13, 1903	4.90	4.06
May 12, 1904	5.20	4.90
May 9, 1905	5.70	5.50
May 10, 1906	5.10	4.00
May 17, 1907	5.12½	4.00
May 15, 1908	5.50	5.00
May 25, 1909	5.75	5.10
May 13, 1910	7.00	6.25

It seems as if Sir Wilfrid Laurier is having his troubles, too. Over there, as over here, there are powerful influences operating to defeat this trade agreement, and they use much the same kind of arguments against it that we hear in the American Congress, only they say if the agreement is ratified and carried into effect, it will ruin Canada, while on this side we are told it will ruin the United States. It must be a fearful pact, indeed, that the President and Sir Wilfrid have concluded if it would be ruinous to both countries.

Mr. President, this concludes what I have to say about cattle. Just a word now about sheep. I want, if I can, to allay the apprehension of my friend from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], the watchful guardian and champion of wool growers and sheep herders, that the sheep industry is in danger of destruction from this agreement. Let me read some statistics about sheep. Possibly the Senator from Wyoming is all cocked and primed to show that these statistics are unreliable; but they, too, are statistics furnished by his Tariff Board.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I assume the Senator is approaching the figures with a good deal of apprehension himself that they are incorrect.

Mr. STONE. No; I am not. I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of the data furnished by the board, and, having no information to the contrary, I must accept what they say as correct. On page 110 of the Tariff Board report I read as follows:

Prices of sheep are much lower in the United States than in Canada, due to the fact that Ontario specializes on pedigreed flocks, as appears later on. In the United States they range from $2.90 per head in Texas to $5.30 in Illinois and Iowa, while in Canada the range is from $4 in Nova Scotia to $7 in Ontario, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan.

With these higher prices prevailing in Canada as compared with the prices given for the States, it would not seem that there is any imminent danger of the sheep herders of Wyoming or any other State being overwhelmed by an undue influx of Canadian sheep into the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will indulge me a moment I will then yield.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I have already obtained leave to insert some tables showing the comparative prices of sheep in different leading markets in both countries. I will ask Senators to examine those tables, and thus relieve me of further referring to them at this time. I am getting weary from this protracted speech, and I fear the Senate is also.

I yield now to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Since the Senator has so broadly referred to me, I am tempted to make an observation or two.

I notice that when he quoted the price of beef in Chicago and in Toronto he quoted various days in different months. If one wants to make an absolutely correct statement, he ought to take the price every day during the month in one market and the price every day in the other, and compare the averages, or if he wants to abbreviate it, he ought to have the market price taken on the same day of the month in each month quoted. I observe that the prices quoted are on the 26th day of the month in one case and the 13th day in another, and so forth. Prices go up and down in the various markets. Sometimes they are lower in one and higher in the other. I notice that difference often between the Chicago and Omaha markets.

Mr. STONE. I will ask the Senator to be a little more definite so that I may better understand him. I do not know just what the Senator means.

Mr. WARREN. I was alluding to the quotation which the Senator made from figures given at two places in comparison. I will not charge the Senator with any unfairness.

Mr. STONE. I read what a member of the Canadian Parliament said.

Mr. WARREN. That is very true.

Mr. STONE. Giving the figures for a series of years.

Mr. WARREN. That is true.

Mr. STONE. For the same day in each town.

Mr. WARREN. The same day in each town, but the Senator did not take the same day of the month.

Mr. STONE. Let us settle that fact. Take May 4, 1901. The price is given in Toronto and Chicago for that day.

Mr. WARREN. I observe that.

Mr. STONE. Take May 13, 1910, the same thing is done; and so with the others.

Mr. WARREN. But why did not the Senator take May 3 or May 4 in every year? It shows to me the effect of juggling figures not in a way, I will say, that is not prevalent with a man who likes to make his case. You may take the market of Chicago on the 13th day of the month in comparison with Omaha and take the 26th day of another month, and it is perfectly easy to prove from such figures that one market is higher than the other.

Mr. STONE. But in the table quoted the same day of the month is taken for each year.

Mr. WARREN. No; but you are comparing them.

Mr. STONE. The comparison is made for the same day in each year.

Mr. WARREN. I understand. Now, then, a comparison of the price of sheep between the United States and Canada proves nothing. In the first place, if they are that much higher in Canada I do not know any reason why we should remove the tariff; I do not see any benefits that we would get from it. But, on the other hand, sheep in Canada are grown largely for the sale of thoroughbreds for breeding purposes, and of course they average higher. They have not the large flocks of plain mutton sheep and plain wool sheep that there are in the United States. I do not see that it cuts any figure whatever as to the tariff whether the prices there are higher or lower.

Mr. STONE. But it has been contended that this agreement would injure the American sheep raiser by letting in the cheaper sheep of Canada. I have endeavored to show that that assumption is not well founded. To show that is the full scope of my present purpose, and the Senator from Wyoming now says that it cuts no figure, so far as the tariff is concerned, whether prices in Canada are higher or lower than in the States. I think I can afford to dismiss the sheep question at this point.

As to swine, I will just put in a little bit in passing. There is not enough exchange of swine between the two countries to make this subject worth discussing.

Mr. GORE. Put in a few shoats.

Mr. STONE. There are not hogs enough going and coming, even with the shoats, to make the subject interesting.

On page 110 of the Tariff Board's report I find what I read:

Prices of swine are slightly higher in Canada than in the United States. In our eastern border States—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York—they range from $10 to $11.50 a head; and in the central border States the range is about the same. In the western border States the range of prices is from $10.40 to $11.10. In the great agricultural States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, prices of swine vary little from those already quoted. In eastern Canada the range of swine prices is from $10 to $13, and in western Canada from $12 to $13. The highest American price is $11.80 a head in Wisconsin, as against the highest Canadian price of $13 a head, which is quoted for Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan.

In addition to that I will ask Senators to examine the comparative prices of swine in leading markets of the two countries, as shown in the Tariff Board tables I have obtained leave to insert in my remarks.

Now, a word or two about horses and I am done. On page 109 of the Tariff Board report I read:

Prices of horses range from $106 to $125 per head in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North Dakota the range is from $111 to $126, and in Montana, Idaho, and Washington from $80 to $108. In eastern Canada prices of horses range from $107 to $139 per head, while in western Canada the range is from $107 to $156. In the great agricultural States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa prices range from $120 to $124. In all the Canadian Provinces except Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia the prices are higher than in any of our States.

I wish to call attention to the average price of horses in 17 States: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon. The average price in these States is $108.19. The average price in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia is $133.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is that last year?

Mr. STONE. It is for 1909.

Mr. President, the table I hold here, found at page 110 of the Tariff Board report, shows the comparative prices of cattle, sheep, and swine, as well as horses, as between certain States and Provinces, and I ask leave to insert it in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request is granted.

The table is as follows:

Number and average value per head of live stock on farms, by classes, in specified States and Canada.

	Horses.	Dairy cows.	Other cattle.	Sheep.	Swine.
Number of live stock on farms (in 1909):
United States [1]	21,040,000	21,801,000	47,279,000	57,216,000	47,782,000
Canada [2]	2,132,489	2,849,306	4,384,779	2,705,390	2,912,503
Average value per head (in 1910):
United States [1]—
Maine	$125.00	$33.00	$16.90	$3.70	$11.50
New Hampshire	106.00	36.20	20.30	3.70	11.50
Vermont	106.00	34.20	14.40	4.00	10.00
New York	125.00	39.50	18.20	5.00	11.50
Indiana	122.00	41.00	24.50	5.20	10.00
Illinois	124.00	42.80	26.40	5.30	10.90
Michigan	126.00	39.50	18.50	4.70	10.50
Wisconsin	121.00	36.60	16.40	4.50	11.80
Minnesota	111.00	33.00	14.30	4.00	11.50
Iowa	120.00	36.00	22.20	5.30	11.30
North Dakota	114.00	33.90	20.50	4.00	11.00
South Dakota	105.00	33.00	21.50	4.00	11.10
Texas	73.00	29.50	15.30	2.90	6.60
Montana	80.00	46.50	27.40	4.20	10.10
Idaho	102.00	41.40	21.40	4.70	8.70
Washington	108.00	41.80	19.90	3.90	9.40
Oregon	103.00	39.60	18.50	3.70	8.20
Average	108.19	35.70	19.41	4.08	9.14
Canada [2]—
Prince Edward Island	107.00	32.00	23.00	6.00	10.00
Nova Scotia	113.00	37.00	29.00	4.00	11.00
New Brunswick	131.00	34.00	28.00	5.00	12.00
Quebec	139.00	31.00	31.00	6.00	13.00
Ontario	133.00	48.00	34.00	7.00	10.00
Manitoba	107.00	40.00	23.00	7.00	13.00
Saskatchewan	156.00	41.00	31.00	7.00	13.00
Alberta	126.00	39.00	30.00	6.00	12.00
British Columbia
Average	133.00	43.00	31.00	6.00	11.00

[1] Crop Reporter, United States, February, 1911.
[2] Census and Statistics Monthly, Canada, January, 1911.

Mr. STONE. Mr President, I am through with what I have to say relating to live stock; and having shown from these official figures the comparative prices of live stock as between the United States and Canada I want to ask the Republican committee of Chariton County, and also my Republican and Democratic friends who assembled in mass meeting at Sikeston, Mo., to protest against reciprocity, what the producer of cattle, sheep, or swine, or the horse breeder has to fear from Canadian competition?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, who has promised us two more speeches on this subject, if he is going to take up agricultural products?

Mr. STONE. I have so stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will venture the observation that inasmuch as the Senator has proved, not to my entire satisfaction but from so-called statistics that labor is higher in Canada, that cattle are higher, swine higher, sheep higher, and horses higher, I utterly fail to see what benefit is going to come to the American people from that phase of this reciprocal agreement? As an illustration, we are promised a lower cost of living; it is going to lessen to the American consumer, about whom we have heard so much, the price of living. Manifestly it is not going to do so in the matter of meats. For that reason, I inquired of the Senator if he is going to take up agricultural products, because possibly he may prove to us that there is some advantage to the American consumer along that line. I do not know whether he will or not, but the Senator has absolutely refuted, in the statistics he has given us to-day, the claim that we are going to have lower prices and cheaper living if this reciprocity agreement becomes a law.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is shifting his position. However, I have not been trying to prove that the people of the United States would be benefited by free trade in live stock, or that the farm laborers of the United States would be benefited by this reciprocity arrangement. I have not so far sought or attempted to point out what benefits would accrue to our people from the agreement, but I have been endeavoring to show that the people of the United States would not be injured by free trade with Canada in live stock, and that farm laborers would not be injured by this reciprocity agreement with Canada. I have been endeavoring to refute the contention widely made that injury would result to farm laborers and the producers of live stock if this bill should be enacted into law. Having refuted that contention I am now asked to tell in what way the agreement would benefit the United States. I will say that I doubt whether free trade in live stock between this country and Canada will result in cheaper meat to the consumer, and certainly not immediately. If it will not lower the price of cattle, and it will not, then it will not on that account lower the price of beef.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my judgment.

Mr. STONE. More than that, I am not prepared to say that this reciprocity agreement, standing alone, will result in any immediate material benefit to the people of the United States as a whole. It will materially aid some industries, and then, what is more to the point, it is a decided advance in the direction of broader trade relations with the world, and that is a step in the right direction.

Mr. GALLINGER. And yet we give away $10,000,000 of revenue to Canada.

Mr. STONE. We give away $10,000,000 of revenue, but Canada also gives away a part of her revenue.

Mr. GALLINGER. A million and three quarters or so, possibly two millions.

Mr. STONE. I have not the figures at my finger tips; but if they give away a million and three-quarters or two millions, that to Canada is about as much as ten millions to the United States.

However, I can not now take up the question as to what benefits would result to either country. I think in the end there would be great resultant benefits to the people of both countries. It is my purpose later on to discuss that, but not now.

For the present it is sufficient for me to say that I will vote for this bill because it is a movement in what I think is the right direction. Freer trade with our great, growing, and prosperous neighbor on the north will, I believe, open the way to freer trade with the world. But while I am heartily for this trade agreement, I shall insist upon following it with additional legislation that will result in immediate and perceptible benefits to American consumers.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator be in favor of coupling that additional legislation with the agreement?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from North Carolina and other Senators around me, on both sides of the Chamber, like the Senators from New Hampshire, Iowa, and Utah, will vote for the reciprocity bill, coupled with the free list embodied in the pending House bill, or substantially that, I will be more than happy to join them in passing the bill in that form.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. If we can pass a bill in that form, I will be only too glad to aid in passing it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Speaking for myself, I will say I will take great pleasure in voting against them both.

Mr. STONE. I supposed the Senator would do that.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose one reason why the resolutions were passed in a certain county in Missouri in relation to cattle was that they knew the free list included cattle from all the world and that——

Mr. STONE. The reciprocity agreement does not provide for free cattle for all the world.

Mr. SMOOT. No, not the reciprocity agreement with Canada.

Mr. STONE. The resolution referred to the agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it referred to Mexico and all the world.

Mr. STONE. No; they were discussing the effect on cattle production in Missouri. I have been trying to show them that reciprocity with Canada will not reduce the price of cattle in Missouri.

Mr. REED. The bill pending in the House does not put cattle on the free list.

Mr. STONE. As my colleague suggests, the bill pending in the House does not put cattle on the free list.

Mr. SMOOT. It puts meat on the free list.

Mr. STONE. Oh, well, the Senator said cattle.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, meat is simply slaughtered cattle, and it could come in that way just as well as on the hoof.

Mr. STONE. And so the coat the Senator has on is the product of sheep's wool, but it is not a sheep's fleece.

Mr. SMOOT. No; and neither could the sheep come in free.

Mr. STONE. No; they do not come in free. I appreciate what the Senator has in mind, namely, that if meat is put on the free list it opens our markets to meats slaughtered in Argentina, Mexico, or anywhere. But, Mr. President, we have been discussing the reciprocity bill, which is before the Senate, and not the free-list bill, which is not before the Senate. I will discuss that bill after it passes the House and reaches the Senate. For the present I will stick to the bill we have before us, and I shall not allow others to run away from it and confuse the argument by shifting the ground.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STONE. Yes, I will yield; but as I am through I would prefer to yield the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe that my friends, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], would like to be grouped with me upon matters relating to the tariff, and I hasten to relieve them of the somewhat embarrassing situation in which the remarks of the Senator from Missouri left them.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no embarrassment whatever.

Mr. STONE. I did not mean to embarrass either Senator. Rather did I suppose that to couple their names would be esteemed by each as a compliment to all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not in the least embarrassed about the grouping; but I wanted to be permitted to ask the Senator from Missouri one or two questions before he closes, because there must be some conclusion to be drawn from the facts which he has stated, facts which, I think, are in the main well sustained by the proof.

Assuming that it is true that horses and cattle of all kinds and sheep and hogs are higher in price in Canada than in the United States——

Mr. SMOOT. Labor is higher——

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall not discuss the labor question now. Then, with the tariff duties removed as between the two countries, I assume, under a perfectly well-recognized law of political economy, or, rather, of commerce, that the movement of trade with respect to these things will be from the United States into Canada, rather than from Canada into the United States. The Senator from Missouri will recognize that.

Mr. STONE. My friend from Iowa is now endeavoring to help out Mr. Currie and other members of the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; you will observe presently that I am not. I assume that the Senator from Missouri will recognize that well-established law of trade and commerce. I assume, also, that he recognizes that the price of a commodity of which this Nation is a large exporter is fixed chiefly, at least, by the price at the market to which the export goes. If that is true, then I assume that he will agree that, with respect to all these things, free trade between Canada and the United States will increase the price in the United States; that, in other words, the price of cattle, of horses, of swine, and of sheep will be higher in the United States than that price has hitherto been. I simply want to fasten one proposition clearly in the mind of the Senator from Missouri and of the Senate, that, so far as these things are concerned and upon this evidence, instead of reducing the cost of living, the tendency will be to increase the cost of living.

Mr. STONE. Another proof that our friends on that side are shifting their position. Now, as to whether free trade in live stock—since we are confining ourselves to that——

Mr. CUMMINS. I confine my suggestion to live stock.

Mr. STONE. Would result in an increase of exports to Canada. I think it is safe to say that if the relative prices, as given in the statistics I have submitted, should be maintained; that is to say, if the prices for cattle, horses, and so forth, should be higher continually in Canada than in the United States, the natural impulse of our export trade would be to Canada—inevitably so; but with free trade between the Provinces of Canada and the United States, it seems to me as certain as the sun shines that prices would seek a common level, very much as they do between the States where we have free trade. In some of the States prices are higher than in other States, as in some of the Provinces prices are higher than in other Provinces. Cattle may be higher in the Northwestern Provinces than in the Northeastern Provinces, and higher in the Northwestern States than in the Northeastern States, but there is no perceptible movement of live stock on that account from the East to the West either in Canada or in the United States. Canada and the United States adjoin as Iowa and Missouri adjoin. With free trade between the two countries the prices of cattle in the two countries will find a common level, and the trade will be regulated by the same economic principles which now obtain between the States or between the Provinces.

There would be no more reason for larger exports into Canada than there is for exporting New Jersey dairy cows to Washington. If it be true, as I have no doubt it is, from what my friend from New Jersey says, that dairy cows command the price he gave in his State; and if it be true, as I have no doubt it is, from what the Senator from Washington says, that dairy cows command a higher price in his State than in New Jersey, why, as I asked the Senator from Washington, are not dairy cows shipped from New Jersey to Washington? The Senator from Washington said that transportation charges and other considerations would make that impracticable and unprofitable. No more can you transport dairy cows, or any other cows, from Quebec to British Columbia for market purposes. And if we had free trade on live stock between Canada and the United States, you could no more ship cattle from Quebec to Washington than you can from New Jersey to Washington. The same law of commerce would obtain, and the prices of cattle of all kinds, young or mature, calves or beeves, would be substantially the same in the markets of the two countries. I believe that is true.

Mr. CUMMINS. I fully agree with the Senator from Missouri with regard to his general analysis; but there is a single reason why these things are higher in Canada, if they are higher—and I think they are—than in the United States; and that is because it costs more to produce them, assuming that they want no more profit there than we do. If it costs more to produce them in Canada than it does in the United States, then the production of Canada will give way to the production of the United States; and I am sure the Senator from Missouri will admit that at least there will be no tendency whatever to reduce the price of any of these articles if we establish free trade in them between the United States and Canada. That is all the point that I desired to suggest to the Senator from Missouri, because I wanted him to draw a conclusion before he left the facts.

Mr. STONE. I do not know just what character of conclusion the Senator desires me to draw that I have not drawn, and hence I am at a loss. I have already said that I did not believe that Canadian cattle raisers would be imperiled by reciprocal free trade, although many Canadians contend that they would be. If the Senator means to ask whether I believe that free trade in cattle between these two countries would reduce the cost of beef in the United States or in Canada I will say to him that I doubt it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, I simply want this discussion, so far as I can help it along, to proceed upon its true basis. There are some people who think, apparently, that if we enter into free-trade relations with Canada there will be an appreciable reduction in the cost of living. I do not so believe. If there is a reason for entering into this relation—and I do not say that there is not—it is not because it will reduce the cost of living. The conclusion that I drew from the Senator's very lucid and illuminating statement was that, with respect to live stock at least, no hope could be based upon these statistics for any reduction in the price of horses or dairy cows or other cattle or sheep or swine, and when we reach that conclusion, if that be the proper one, we are prepared to examine the proposition from some other standpoint.

Mr. STONE. I think the Senator understood me correctly. I have said several times that my chief purpose has been to show that free trade in live stock between Canada and the United States would not result in depreciating the value of cattle in the States. As to the benefits that might result from this agreement, that is another and totally different phase of the question. In due time I will express my views on that phase of the subject, but I will wait until I reach it in the course of my plan for discussing the whole subject before taking it up.

Mr. President, I wish now to thank the Senate and Senators for their attention and kind indulgence.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, I desire to ask him a question. I do not know that I understood the Senator a little while ago when he made reply to an inquiry I put. I am very much interested in his reply. After the Senator had stated that he was in favor of the free-list bill, which is now pending in the other House, I inquired if he would favor joining that free-list bill with the reciprocity agreement, so as to incorporate them both into the same act. That was the scope of the inquiry I made of the Senator, but I am not sure that I understood the Senator's reply to that question. The Senator said he was in favor of both, as I understood him.

Mr. STONE. I can not make myself more intelligible than I attempted to do in the reply I made to the Senator's question.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator may have made himself clear to others, but I did not hear him distinctly.

Mr. STONE. I am in favor of a free list, and without having examined it critically, I will say that in the main I approve the free list embodied in the bill before the House. Personally, I would be more than willing to incorporate the free list as an additional section on the reciprocity bill, if it can be done without defeating the whole legislation. I would like to know, however, something more than I now know as to the effect such an amendment would have on the chance of passing the reciprocity bill. I am for the reciprocity bill; I am also for the free-list bill, and I would be delighted if we could pass the two together as one.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am delighted to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. STONE. But at the same time I would want to have some conferences with other Senators with respect to that matter before committing myself unreservedly to a program of that kind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I understand the Senator to say that he sees no objection in the nature of the two bills to coupling the legislation, and that he would be in favor of doing so, provided he was assured that the two measures so coupled could receive a majority vote of the Senate so as to become a law?

Mr. STONE. Oh, certainly.

Now, Mr. President, I feel considerably fatigued, and if there are no further questions to be asked, I will again thank Senators for their kindness and close this installment of my reciprocity series. I hope my future addresses will not be so protracted as this has been.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. In view of the fact that the Senate has agreed to adjourn over until Thursday, I think it important that we should have a brief executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, May 4, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 1, 1911.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Perry M. Lytle, of Pennsylvania, to be surveyor of customs in the district of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania. (Reappointment.)

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Charles W. Cobb, of California, to be Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department, vice Oscar Lawler, resigned.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE, SUPREME COURT OF NEW MEXICO.

John R. McFie, of New Mexico, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico. (A reappointment, his term having expired.)

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS.

James Ward, of Pennsylvania, to be first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps with rank from April 27, 1911.

To be first lieutenants with rank from April 28, 1911.

Rufus Bartlett Hall, of Ohio.
Richard Henry Whitehead, of Virginia.
John Overton, of Tennessee.
Charles Sherman Carter, of Alabama.
James Jesse Peterson, of Alabama.
William Henry Condit, of Minnesota.
Robert Emmett Austin, of California.
John Elmer Bacon, of Arizona.
Joseph Lawyer Bell, of California.
Caspar Ralph Byars, of Texas.
Malone Duggan, of Texas.
Charles Henry Fischer, of Colorado.
Albert Pope Fitzsimmons, of Nebraska.
Edward Burke Bailey, of Alabama.
Bonaparte Preston Norvell, of Oklahoma.
David Wilmot Overton, of New York.
Archibald Moltz Wilkins, of Ohio.
George Francis Wilklow, of New York.
Charles Franklin Smith, of Michigan.
Daniel Baen Street, of New Jersey.
Joseph G. Wilson, of New York.
Robert Emmett Caldwell, of Maryland.
Gerry Sanger Driver, of Colorado.
Francis Valentine Langenderfer, of Ohio.
Fred Fellows Sprague, of California.
Michael Edward Connor, of Massachusetts.
John Milton Armstrong, of Minnesota.
Thomas Andrew Burcham, of Iowa.
Frederick Ellsworth Clark, of Vermont.
Herbert Clay Lieser, of Washington.
Frederick William O'Donnell, of Kansas.
Cassius Derby Silver, of New York.
Alfred Harrold Thomas, of New York.
Frank Christollo Vanatta, of Wyoming.
William Cotman Whitmore, of Maine.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Chaplain Aldred A. Pruden, Second Infantry, to be chaplain with the rank of major from April 26, 1911.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander Harry Phelps to be a captain in the Navy from the 4th day of March, 1911, to fill a vacancy.

Lieut. Commander George W. Williams to be a commander in the Navy from the 4th day of March, 1911, to fill a vacancy.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Alexander S. Wadsworth, jr., to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 4th day of March, 1911, to fill a vacancy.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Kenneth Whiting to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 4th day of March, 1911, to fill a vacancy.

Machinist James J. Cullen to be a chief machinist in the Navy from the 29th day of December, 1910, upon the completion of six years' service as a machinist.

The following-named carpenters to be chief carpenters in the Navy from the 7th day of March, 1911, upon the completion of six years' service as carpenters:

Stuart P. Mead,
William H. Sampson, and
Louis Haase.

POSTMASTERS.

ILLINOIS.

E. E. Nicholson to be postmaster at Beardstown, Ill., in place of John S. Nicholson, deceased.

INDIANA.

Hood P. Loveland to be postmaster at Peru, Ind., in place of Hood P. Loveland. Incumbent's commission expired February 19, 1910.

IOWA.

Louis C. Kurtz to be postmaster at Des Moines, Iowa, in place of Joseph I. Myerly. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1911.

MISSISSIPPI.

Sallie Millsaps to be postmaster at Hazlehurst, Miss., in place of Sallie Millsaps. Incumbent's commission expired May 7, 1910.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Robert F. Emerson to be postmaster at East Rochester, N. H. Office became presidential January 1, 1911.

NEW YORK.

Frederick Rohde to be postmaster at Stapleton, N. Y., in place of Adolph Lienhart, removed.

OKLAHOMA.

Clay Cross to be postmaster at Skiatook, Okla. Office became presidential April 1, 1911.

PENNSYLVANIA.

William M. Deihm to be postmaster at Honey Brook, Pa., in place of Thomas F. Hampton, deceased.

John W. Ramsey to be postmaster at Midland, Pa., in place of Frank P. Oberlin, who failed to qualify.

G. Clinton Williams to be postmaster at Spring City, Pa., in place of G. Clinton Williams. Incumbent's commission expired February 21, 1911.

TENNESSEE.

John R. Richards to be postmaster at Oliver Springs, Tenn., in place of Abraham L. Williams. Incumbent's commission expired January 18, 1911.

H. Filmour Shoun to be postmaster at Greeneville, Tenn., in place of Joseph W. Howard. Incumbent's commission expired January 30, 1910.

VIRGINIA.

Charles A. Lacy to be postmaster at Houston, Va., in place of Charles A. Lacy. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1910.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 1, 1911.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

William Lindsay to be United States marshal for the district of Montana.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Reed M. Fawell to be a lieutenant.
Midshipman Arnold H. Vanderhoof to be an ensign.

POSTMASTERS.

FLORIDA.

Horace M. Bradley, Green Cove Springs.

ILLINOIS.

John C. Hale, North Chicago.
E. E. Nicholson, Beardstown.

INDIANA.

Edgar T. Botkin, Farmland.
Enos Coffin, Carthage.
Robert B. Hanna, Fort Wayne.
William H. Hathaway, Aurora.
John Lynn, La Fontaine.
Joel F. Martin, Bourbon.
Frank R. Morrison, Galveston.
William O. Nash, Jasonville.
Percy V. Ruch, Mulberry.
John C. Schleffler, Wolcottville.

IOWA.

Daniel P. Ellsworth, Lohrville.
O. C. Hill, Clearfield.
Louis C. Kurtz, Des Moines.
Almon C. Steele, Coon Rapids.

LOUISIANA.

B. F. Edwards, Marksville.
Richard E. Hodges, Jena.

MAINE.

Abial H. Jones, Wilton.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Chestina B. Robbins, East Templeton.
Harriet F. Seaverns, North Scituate.

MICHIGAN.

Charles Gauntlett, Milan.

MINNESOTA.

Cornelius Berghuis, Clara City.
Sarah Dahl, Cottonwood.
Fred W. Olson, Raymond.

MONTANA.

John J. McDonald, Townsend.
Don E. Schanck, Libby.

OHIO.

John Shaw, Leroy.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Clark D. Eckels, Cambridge Springs.
Burd R. Linder, Orwigsburg.

TEXAS.

John H. Carson, Dayton.
William D. McCaslin, Detroit.
Rufus H. Windham, Newton.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 1, 1911.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Saturday, April 29, 1911.]

The recess having expired at 11 o'clock, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS, COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make the following announcement: Hon. EDWARD L. TAYLOR, Jr., of Ohio, is hereby appointed a member of the board of directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb. Hon. THETUS W. SIMS holds over.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4413, a bill to place agricultural implements on the free list, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4413, a bill to place agricultural implements on the free list, and for other purposes, with Mr. ALEXANDER in the chair.

The bill was read by title.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss]. [Applause.]

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this debate it was not my purpose to engage in it. There are so many orators among the Members of this distinguished body that to sit and listen is not only a pleasure, but it seems to be almost a duty since one orator rarely enjoys the orations of other men. If some men love to talk, others should prefer to listen. But, Mr. Chairman, this whole debate has raged around the farmer and the interests of the farm; assertions have been made with such recklessness that I am in sympathy with Mark Twain when he said that he did not object to any speaker knowing all about his subject, but that he did object to any man knowing so much that was not true. The farmers of our country are patriotic citizens whose only interest in good government is that it shall promote the common interests of all our people and not the special interests of a few of them; and I wish to voice my protest against the good name and reputation of the farming classes of our country being used to protect the well-known abuses which have grown up in our Government and that the supposed interests of the farm shall be used to defeat progressive legislation which is intended for the benefit of all our people.

This is not the first instance, Mr. Chairman, when an attempt has been made to use the virtue which has its home on the farm to shelter the vice which exists in the commercial systems of our great cities. We have only to recall the debates on the floor of this House in 1906, when the frauds and corruption in the great packing houses was exposed to public view. The Beef Trust was then known to be a criminal corporation which had been systematically robbing the farmers on every load of cattle which were driven across the scales which lead from the feed lot to the slaughter pens. They were even then under indictment and active prosecution for criminal exploitation of the products of the farm; but when it became noised about that their methods of preparing and distributing their products were even more destructive to the general welfare of society than their methods of buying their produce from the farmer—that both producer and consumer were exploited—and that not even the public health was protected from their insatiable greed for gain, what influence was invoked to shield them from exposure? It was a frantic appeal to the President to hold his hand, because the exposure would hurt the interest of the farmer. If ever brazon effrontery were carried further it is at the present moment, when the same appeal is being made to defeat the progressive legislation now under consideration. When will good citizenship be respected by the representatives of the special interests of this country?

F. J. Hagerbarth, vice president of the American National Live Stock Association, was among the first to attempt to use virtue to shield crime. In a signed statement published in the National Provisioner of June 16, 1906, he says:

The President has seen fit to ignore urgent requests from official representatives of the live-stock industry requiring him to withhold any radical message or reports to Congress bearing on abuses of the packing interests, for the reason that such message if heralded over the world would work irreparable loss, both at home and abroad, to the producers of live stock.

What a libel on the patriotism of the American farmer, that he could wish to coin the health and the well-being of the world and weigh it in the balance against the profits on his cattle. What convincing evidence of the power of money to dwarf even the soul of a man, born in the image of his Maker! Not a thought was given to the welfare of the thousands of employees who worked in these insanitary plants; not the least concern manifested for the health of the world; but the demand went forth that all this vice be smothered in order to protect the cattle growers of the Mississippi Valley from irreparable losses.

This plea for the farmer soon found its way to the floor of this House. In the National Provisioner of the same date is found this significant statement:

Members of Congress, inspired by the feeling of indignation among their constituents over the injury done to American industry by the President's ignorant and ill-considered assault on the meat trade, could not wait for a committee report on the meat-inspection bill, but began to express their sentiments as early as Tuesday of this week on the floor of the House.

The editors of the American Economist must have read this statement before writing some of their recent editorials about President Taft and Canadian reciprocity. This feeling of indignation was first aroused in the breast of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The RECORD shows that he asked unanimous consent that he should address the House on this important subject before the report of the committee brought it regularly before them for consideration. Mr. MONDELL appears in the RECORD as saying:

These reports and criticisms scattered broadcast, highly colored and exaggerated as they were passed along, have resulted in incalculable injury not only to the packers, but to the live-stock industry of the country generally. It was a bad day for Chicago and the packing and live-stock industries of the United States when that now historic porker slipped his trolley and fell—just where he fell is in controversy—and he goes down in history as entirely eclipsing that other famous Chicago animal, Mrs. O'Leary's cow, in the awful havoc and loss he has wrought. If the packing industries of this country were alone affected, their rights should demand attention; but the great live-stock industries of the country are equally affected. They have already suffered losses amounting to many millions by this agitation.

Now, was not that an awful blow to be landed on the solar plexus of the honest farmers of our country merely because the packers were selling decayed and diseased meats to the country and were destroying the health of their employees as well as of their customers? This message of President Roosevelt was nearly as destructive to the farming industries as the reciprocity pact as seen by the gentleman from Wyoming. Is it not wonderful how the American farmer manages to recover from these irreparable damages and recoup these incalculable injuries? And to think that these plagues should be visited on us one after the other by the headstrong action of Republican Presidents. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No wonder that western papers are running an advertisement in the want columns for a candidate for President on the Republican ticket. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not wish to weary the committee with numerous quotations from the RECORD. If time permitted, it can be shown that many Members who profess to believe now that the recommendations of President Taft will ruin the farmer were equally convinced that the recommendations of President Roosevelt would ruin the stock grower in 1906. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They were wrong then, Mr. Chairman, and they are mistaken now. Their former efforts fastened an army of tax eaters on the Federal Treasury for life in order to give a decent reputation to the commercial products of "Packingtown" in the markets of the world, and their purpose now is to defeat the enactment of progressive legislation which will revise the tariff in the interests of the great consuming masses of our citizenship.

The policy of reciprocity has been attacked on the ground that it is inimical to the farming interests of the country, and that it is being adopted hastily without investigation or information. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS] was reckless enough of his reputation to hazard such a statement. He says:

You are proposing a great new policy that goes to the very social fabric of America, and where is the great committee of this House that has probed to the bottom of it and where is the book that has spread its investigations before the American people?

This well illustrates, Mr. Chairman, the difficulties which a famous specialist meets when he gets beyond his reservation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the gentleman from Maine were as familiar with current agricultural literature as he is with the contents of Hinds' Precedents he could not have been betrayed into so glaring an error. I do not know what estimate the farmers of Maine will put on this point of order which is raised by the distinguished parliamentarian against this pending legislation, but it will be a revelation to the intelligent and progressive farmers of the Middle West who have discussed this question for years and have been knocking at the doors of Congress and demanding the enactment of reciprocal legislation in the broadest terms. In the few minutes which have been allotted to me I can not attempt a full discussion of the advantages which reciprocity will bring to the farmers of our Nation, but I trust that I shall be able to show that the wonderful growth of public sentiment in favor of reciprocity in this country is due to the intelligent expression of agricultural thought and of the agricultural press. The gentleman from Maine regrets that Mr. Emery and his associates on the Tariff Board have not had time to make an exhaustive report on the subject. Does he not know that Mr. Saunders, who is Mr. Emery's associate, has written exhaustively on this very subject, and that he did so after careful study and personal investigation? No student who is at all familiar with agricultural literature or the evolution of progressive policies in the minds of the American farmer could have shown the ignorance which has been displayed in this debate by the would-be leaders of the farmers.

The great national movement among the farmers of the United States to advance reciprocal legislation began with a meeting held in the Grand Pacific Hotel in Chicago in 1905. There were present at that meeting delegates representing the National Live Stock Association, American Short Horn Association, National Live Stock Exchange, Chicago Commercial Association, Millers' National Federation, and other great producing and exporting interests. It was decided to hold a national conference to advance reciprocal tariff legislation. Mr. Alvin H. Saunders was chosen as the leader of the new movement. Who is Mr. A. H. Saunders? He is a member of the Tariff Board which was appointed by President Taft, and one of the men, according to the gentleman from Maine, who could so well make a scientific investigation of this subject. Mr. Saunders at that time was the editor of the Breeder's Gazette, the most influential and widely read farm journal in the United States. In accepting this appointment, Mr. Saunders issued a signed statement as to the purposes of the conference and of the necessity for its organization. This statement should prove interesting to those who have assumed that no investigation has been made and that no authority stands sponsor for reciprocal legislation. Mr. Saunders said:

The managing editor of the Gazette was unanimously requested to act as chairman of the committee on arrangements. He has consented to do so with the specific understanding that the interests of the farmers and stock growers should be paramount; that their wants should receive first consideration, and that partisan politics will have no place in the campaign to be waged.

I call particular attention, Mr. Chairman, that this movement at the very beginning was to be devoted to the interests of the farmer and the stock grower, and that it was to be nonpartisan in its character. The statement went on to say:

We have in years of average production a large surplus of breadstuffs and provisions for export. We grow more grain and mature more meat than is required for home consumption. The price received for the product consumed at home is largely governed by the price commanded by the surplus for which a market must be found abroad. We have virtually prohibited France and Germany from selling part of their manufactures here, and they have retaliated by gradually closing their markets against us. It is time therefore that somebody should take up the cudgels in this matter against those who for selfish purposes destroyed Blaine's reciprocity conventions, slaughtered the Kasson treaties, and are still barring the American stockmen and grain growers from a large and lucrative outlet for their goods.

There is no question of Republicanism or Democracy involved in this proposition. It is simply a matter of passing an act of Congress which will enable the President and his successors, no matter to what political party they belong, to open the doors of the hungry millions of Europe, put a roast in every French and German pot, and a loaf of good American bread upon every shelf from Rome to Copenhagen, and in doing it put probably $100,000,000 per annum in the pockets of the American producers.

The thing can be brought about if we will drop party lines and put none but friends of this proposition in positions of Federal power. If Senators and the present Members of the House of Representatives will not do this thing, the people have the power to send men to Washington who will exercise that power. The sooner our public men understand this the better. This fight for better markets, worth unknown millions per year to the farming communities, will not be won in a week or a year. It means a battle royal against intrenched power, but it will be won because it is right.

Mr. Chairman, that is the report to the farmers of this country by a member of the present Tariff Board, which they have studied for six long years. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Maine has never read it. It was published before he began the study of farm economics. There is always that disadvantage in a sudden change in occupation, but I can not forget the impression it made on my mind when I first read it. I was then an active farmer and was walking behind the plow and through the feed lots. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I had shipped my cattle to markets which were glutted, and had seen the sellers begging to receive decent bids for their offerings, and had my stock sold for prices which did not leave me the reasonable profit which was guaranteed to the manufacturers in the last Republican platform. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I enlisted in that campaign against intrenched privilege and helped to fight the battle because it was right. I was with Mr. Saunders for reciprocity then and I am for it now whether he is with me or against me. I would rather follow a plain American citizen on his honor as a man than to take my opinions from an official whose salary may depend upon the official reports he may sign. I did not foresee that I was one of the men who were to be sent to Washington with the power to act to take the place of some of those who having the power were refusing to act. But I am here, Mr. Chairman, ready to act, and I am proud of the intelligent vote which sent me here. I may not be able to fight the good fight, but I am willing to keep the faith. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

No better presentation of the subject of reciprocity from a farmer's standpoint can be made than this statement made by this member of the Tariff Board, and I commend it to those who need instruction on this subject. It leads up to the very point which the gentleman from Maine well says is the "whole situation," the equilibrium between agriculture and manufactures. The gentleman says:

> But the farms, being an aggregation of homes, disorganized and each impelled by its own necessities, tend constantly to overproduce. And this overproduction becomes disastrous unless the limitation of acreage possible to be cultivated intervenes to prevent. Therefore the element of prime importance in this discussion is the relation of acreage to the capacity of the home market furnished by the nonagricultural classes.

The gentleman from Maine was chosen to open this debate and therefore is the leader of the opposition to reciprocal legislation; his words are an orthodox statement of stand-pat Republicanism as applied to the development of our agricultural industry. Now, what does this statement mean? The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] denounced the scheme of valorization or monopoly by which the Brazilian Government is seeking to maintain an equilibrium between the production of coffee and its consumption. This system, simply stated, is a limitation of the acreage which can be devoted to the cultivation of coffee. Mr. NORRIS says:

> This agreement has been in successful operation since the latter part of 1908. In accordance with its terms, the Brazilian Government enacted a law preventing the planting of additional coffee trees and providing for severe penalties for any offense against this provision of the statute. Inspectors were appointed who went through the country and destroyed any new trees that had been planted and administered severe punishment against those who were guilty of an infraction of the law.

Did the gentleman from Maine get his ideas of valorization from Brazil, or did the Brazilian statesmen come to Maine for inspiration and instruction? Which nation has the genuine and which one possesses the "phony" statesman? The burden of proof is in favor of Brazil, because the gentleman himself informs us that "we have heard little of this doctrine of equilibrium of the home market among English-speaking nations." Therefore he kindly informs us just what it means—

> And it is evident that both farmer and artisan will be most prosperous and the happiest when there are enough farmers to take the artisan's goods at a fair price and enough artisans, professional men, and so forth, to take the farmer's surplus at a fair price.

And to bring this ideal state about he proposes to limit the acreage to the capacity of the home market. Now, what does that mean to the farmer and to the Nation? We sold last year in the foreign markets over $1,000,000,000 worth of the surplus products of American farms. This new statesmanship proposes to stop this production, refuse this enormous national income, and throw out of employment the thousands of farmers and their sons who produced this vast volume of wealth. Why take this radical action? Why, to establish an equilibrium between agriculture and manufacture. The southern farmers sold $450,000,000 worth of cotton to foreign nations. The cotton acreage will have to be reduced until the equilibrium is restored.

The farmers of the West sold $135,000,000 of surplus meat products. The breeding of cattle must be checked until our home markets can consume the entire output. We foolishly sold $133,000,000 of grain. The plows must be stopped. Our farmers sold $38,000,000 of tobacco; the planting must be stopped, the equilibrium is in danger. This new statesmanship resembles the fable of the monkey dividing the cheese between the two cats [applause on the Democratic side]; if the yield of grain is heavy, let more acres lie idle; if the mills are supplied with improved machinery, employ fewer hands. But whose lands are to lie idle and whose mills are to be closed down in order to maintain this sacred equilibrium? Who is to be the monkey and who will consent to be the cats? I do not know what the people of Maine think of such wisdom, but in Indiana the whole scheme would be called monkey business. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We grow a surplus of farm products beyond any possible needs of our population. The latest report of the Department of Agriculture says this is true back as far as inquiry has been made. We grow more grain and mature more meat than our Nation can consume. In 1910 we exported $286,728,126 in value of grains and meats from our farms. Yet we are told by some of the Members of this House who practice law in the great cities and who see the farms from an automobile or car window that reciprocity will ruin the farmer. What is the effect of the export trade on prices? Mr. Armour, in his work, "The Packers and the People," says:

> It is the export business that absorbs the surplus live stock grown by American cattlemen and farmers and steadies and supports the home markets for live stock. If this export business were taken away or even reduced, the effects of it would be directly felt by every farmer who raises a steer, sheep, or hog for market.

This testimony by Armour is fully sustained by Mr. Holmes, Chief of Division of Foreign Markets, Department of Agriculture. In Bulletin No. 55, speaking of the influence of our exports of meat products on domestic markets, Mr. Holmes says:

> If such an immense quantity of surplus meat food were to be confined within this country by the refusal of foreign countries to buy it, there would follow consequences to farmer, rangeman, slaughterer, and packer which would be financially disastrous.

Mr. Saunders knew these facts, and without ever a thought of restoring an equilibrium by limiting our production, and thus destroying industry and the national wealth and income, he proposed to enlarge our foreign markets and thus encourage and stimulate industry and increase our national wealth and income.

There are but the two ways of maintaining an equilibrium between agriculture and manufacture. The gentleman from Maine proposes to restrict the agricultural acreage to an artificial basis, and thereby decrease production. The member of the President's Tariff Board would increase our markets so as to stimulate industry and increase our national wealth. The choice between these two theories is really a choice between a tariff for revenue and a tariff for protection. Our prohibitive tariff laws prevent the people of continental Europe from selling to us, and in retaliation they prohibit us from selling our agricultural products to them. This reduces the competition in the markets where the farmer sells and also prevents competition in the markets where he is compelled to buy. This naturally reduces selling prices and increases buying prices to the farmers of our country. This destroys the equilibrium between manufacture and agriculture, from the farmer's viewpoint, and is the condition which the American farmer is most anxious to remove.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if the Hinds theory of economics is followed and the restriction of the agricultural products of this country is limited to what the manufacturers take, if that would not have a tendency to reduce very materially the value of farm lands in the upper Mississippi Valley, and, in fact, the value of lands that are suitable for agriculture generally?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. There can be no question in the world of that, Mr. Chairman. It is high prices for the products of the farm that make high-priced land. To reduce the total income of all the farms of the United States is to reduce the value of these farms, because if you were to destroy entirely their productive capacity you will have destroyed their selling value.

Do you wonder that the farmer is in deadly earnest about reciprocity and that he has been the real leader in the great educational movement which has grown strong enough to overthrow the Republican majority in this House and which promises to make Democratic success nearly certain in 1912? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This national conference of agricultural organizations was the beginning of a new era in our political world; it was the genesis of that spirit of insurgency which has since become so rampant in both political parties that Gov. Woodrow Wilson is quoted as saying:

The only essentials in American politics to-day is the difference between the progressives and the reactionaries. We have in the last 10 years come out of the merely negative in politics.

That great movement to center public thought on measures of legislation and not upon the party organization to which any man may belong goes back to that day when the farmers of this Nation declared that legislation was not a question of Republicanism or of Democracy, but of the enactment of laws, and they will not soon forget that fundamental truth. This great conference was attended by more than 600 delegates, representing every principal agricultural organization in the Nation. I will print in connection with my remarks a complete list of these organizations. From the State of Indiana were the Farmers' Congress, Society of Equity, Angus Breeders' Association, Live Stock Exchange, and State board of agriculture, and at the close of its session the following resolution was passed:

That we recommend that a permanent organization be formed under the style of the Reciprocal Tariff League, and that a committee of 15 be appointed by the Chair with full power to organize and further the work for which this convention was assembled.

I do not wish, Mr. Chairman, to follow this movement further; it is an active, virile force in our body politic, molding public sentiment, breaking down slavery to party organization, and creating a commendable spirit of independence among the voters of our country. It was significant that at the very moment when this great convention was sitting in Chicago trying to secure better foreign markets for our food products that 2,000 butchers and meat dealers in Germany were holding a still greater convention to demand that the Fatherland should open up the frontier and permit importations of American cattle, so that the German workman might have meat on his table. What a strange situation. The farmers of America willing to sell and the workmen of Germany eager to buy; we desirous to trade a small portion of our surplus food for a small proportion of their surplus manufactures, so that the people of both countries should be better fed and better clothed, because labor in both countries will be better rewarded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes additional to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman, but I wish to ask the date of that convention.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. It is August, 1906. I can give the gentleman the exact date.

This beneficent result is prevented by a prohibitive tariff system in both countries, behind which the industrial trusts and combinations of this country are sheltered and from which the landowners of Germany secure equal freedom from competition. Thus we have the swollen fortunes and idle rich nourished and sustained in republic and empire by the same methods of legislation.

The gentleman from Maine was again unfortunate when he applied his celebrated theory of equilibrium to the agriculture of Germany and England. It seems that he had read a book on agriculture written by a railroad man [applause on the Democratic side], and after comparing it with his home-market theory he established the following facts about equilibriums:

As we turn from England and her sad picture we find another story in Germany and France, where statesmen and people united to preserve the equilibrium of the home market.

As his whole argument rests on equilibriums, I am going to call a witness as to the conditions actually existing in the markets of England and Germany. I am not going to summon a railroad man, but will call on a member of President Taft's Tariff Board. I shall quote from a signed article written by A. H. Saunders while he was in England and published August 5, 1908. The article states that he was in personal attendance at the markets in question. Mr. Saunders says:

The English are the best-fed people in the world. Their ports are open to the food supplies of all nations.

That is the picture that a member of our Tariff Board draws of the English people—that they are the best-fed people in the world. Now, what splendid condition did he find in France and Germany to contrast with this picture? He says:

But a few hours distant by steam across the English Channel there are millions of people who scarcely know the taste of a good rib or loin of beef. What little beef there is on sale is mostly lean and tough. No wonder horseflesh sells readily alongside of it. No wonder that the canine and feline creations are called on to make good the dearth of good bovine supplies.

Now, that is another way of keeping up the equilibrium in the home markets. The Germans can kill dogs and cats to supply the beef which they have not got and can not get. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But the gentleman from Maine says that this proud position of the German farmer is due to the wisdom of Bismarck, who investigated and then acted, instead of acting first and then investigating. The record shows that this sentiment was applauded by the membership of this House on his side of the aisle. What does Mr. Saunders, of our Tariff Board, say is causing this condition of the German Nation? He omits to mention the wisdom and statesmanship of Bismarck, but says that—

Continental parliaments are in the grip of the landed proprietors, who prefer to see a virtual meat famine among the laboring people and classes, with cattle and hogs selling at 12 to 15 cents per pound, live weight, rather than to consent to the relaxation of the rigid rules and high tariffs by which foreign-grown foodstuffs are excluded.

After this signed article had been published in the Breeders' Gazette an Iowa farmer wanted to know the "true cause" why America and Germany could not get together on a trade agreement. Mr. Saunders replied as follows:

The true reason is the effective opposition up to date of people who are profiting largely by the status quo—plethoric German agrarians on the one hand and certain well-fed interests on the other. The former are very active in the German Parliament and the latter in the American Congress.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Since the publication of this report many a Republican Congressman has failed to maintain his equilibrium at the ballot box. I commend these reports to the gentleman from Maine when he begins a revision of his theory of equilibriums of the home market.

Agriculture is the basis of our national wealth, and to make this foundation secure for the future generations we must conserve the fertility of our soil. Every bushel of grain which we sell abroad reduces our national wealth to the extent of the loss of plant food which produces that product. We can not go on forever selling our raw grains to be fed on foreign soils, because you can not take away from the land without making a return to the land. Grain farming encourages soil erosion and thus lowers or destroys the life-sustaining power of the soil in two ways—by washing away of the soil particles and by a loss of the chemical elements which produce the growth of plants. In both of these directions our losses are appalling. It is estimated that 1,000,000,000 tons of soil washes from American farms and is carried to the sea by our rivers every year. The waters of the Potomac are never clear, and the mighty current of the Mississippi can not carry its burden of silt to the sea. Our farmers are spending millions of dollars for fertilizers every year, and the tax is an ever-increasing one. We need to have no fear of an increasing population if we can only avoid a decreasing soil fertility. For this reason alone it is wise statesmanship to extend our markets for finished food products rather than to stand paralyzed with fear of competition in raw grains. The best farmer in any community is he who sells his products in their most concentrated form and who saves his by-products to increase the fertility of his lands. This means that the progressive farmer is in reality a manufacturer. His grains, his grass, and his hay are only raw products; his eggs, his cream, butter, and live stock are his finished products. Under this system of agriculture it is possible to return 90 per cent of the fertility to the soil, and by a scientific rotation of crops maintain the fertility of the soil for all future time, and thus insure the future prosperity of our Nation. This is not possible under any known system of grain farming. The opponents of reciprocity are laying much stress on the possible competition in wheat.

Our experiment station in Indiana sent a wheat train over our State last fall to demonstrate that wheat is now grown at a loss in Indiana under our present methods. Every farmer knows this to be true, but his only remedy is to turn to increased live-stock farming if he would increase his yields of wheat. Intensive farming would double the present output of our farms. This would add billions of dollars to our national income every year. If some method of extracting annually a billion of dollars from the rocks of our hills could be discovered it would usher in a golden era in the life of our Nation; yet this is a small sum compared to the possible increase in the annual output of our farms; but intense agriculture is impossible, except as it may be based on live-stock industry. There is thus a direct relation between our prohibitive tariff system and our crude agriculture, which is so rapidly exhausting the fertility of our farms and thus depleting our national wealth. We can not go to intense farming without stimulating our live-stock industry; we can not increase our live stock, because we can not sell our meat products in the markets of Continental Europe; and we can not sell in their markets, because we prohibit them from selling in ours. Thus our prohibitive tariff really forms a vicious circle, which is reducing the fertility of our soil, driving the boys from the farms, and is rapidly changing us from an agricultural nation to a manufacturing nation. Our present high-tariff system is thus actually destroying the tillage of the soil as the most desirable occupation among men, to which all other occupations should be subsidiary.

The gentlemen on the other side of this question are preparing to appeal to the farmers for support at the ballot box. I welcome the test. It has been said that there must be a national revolt against the worship of manufactures and trade as the only forms of progressive activity among our people. Mr. Chairman, this revolt has come and it will be sustained by the deliberate judgment of farmers, whose labors are the very fountain from which all other occupations flow and by which they are nourished and fed. [Loud applause.]

The following is a complete list of all agricultural and live-stock associations which appointed delegates to the national reciprocity conference in Chicago:

National Live Stock Association, American Stock Growers' Association, American Shorthorn Breeders' Association, American Hereford Cattle Breeders' Association, American Polled-Durham Breeders' Association, American Aberdeen-Angus Breeders' Association, American Galloway Breeders' Association, National Polled-Hereford Breeders' Association, Holstein-Friesian Breeders' Association, Ayrshire Breeders' Association, American Clydesdale Association, American Percheron Horse Breeders' Association, French Coach-Horse Society of America, American Saddle-Horse Breeders' Association, Aldie Horse Breeders' Association, American Shetland Pony Club, American Suffolk Horse Association, American Shropshire Sheep Association, American Oxford Down Association, American Suffolk Flock Registry, Dorset Horn Sheep Association, Hampshire Down Breeders' Association of America, the Continental Dorset Club, American Cheviot Sheep Society, American Milch Goat Record Association, Southwest Poland China Record Association, American Yorkshire Association, American Poland China Record Association, American Berkshire Association, National Duroc-Jersey Record Association, Improved Stock Breeders' Association of the Wheat Belt, Cattle Growers' Association of Texas, Indiana Aberdeen-Angus Breeders' Association, Corn-Belt Meat Producers' Association, Wisconsin Shorthorn Breeders' Association, Cattle Growers' Association of New Mexico, Ohio Wool Growers' Association, Ohio Horse Breeders' Association, Oklahoma Improved Breeders' Association, North Dakota Live Stock Association, Pennsylvania Live Stock Association, Kentucky Live Stock Association, Rock County (Minn.) Breeders' Association, Western Live Stock Protective Association, Southeast Missouri Shorthorn Breeders' Association, Southeastern Stock Growers' Association, Shorthorn Breeders' Association of Southeast Virginia, Platte Valley Live Stock Association, North Missouri Combination Cattle Sales Association, Fountain County Hereford Breeders & Feeders' Association, Ray County Shorthorn Breeders' Association, Central Missouri Hereford Breeders' Association, Marion County Improved Live Stock Association, McLean County Shorthorn Breeders' Association, Keokuk County Polled-Durham Breeders' Association, Chicago Live Stock Exchange, Cleveland Live Stock Exchange, East Buffalo Stock Exchange, Indianapolis Stock Exchange, Kansas City Stock Exchange, Louisville Stock Exchange, Milwaukee Stock Exchange, Omaha Stock Exchange, Peoria Stock Exchange, Pittsburg Stock Exchange, St. Joseph Stock Exchange, St. Louis Stock Exchange, Sioux City Stock Exchange, South St. Paul Stock Exchange, Cattle & Horse Growers' Association of Colorado, Indiana State Board of Agriculture, Illinois State Board of Agriculture, Wisconsin State Board of Agriculture, Minnesota State Board of Agriculture, Iowa State Board of Agriculture, Nebraska State Board of Agriculture, West Michigan State Fair Association, Wisconsin Farmers' Institute, Minnesota Farmers' Institute, Illinois Farmers' Institute, Illinois Farmers' Institute of the Third Congressional District, American Society of Equity, Illinois Seed-Corn Growers' Association, Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, Rob Roy Union American Society of Equity, Cotton Growers' Protective Association, Farmers' National Congress, Kansas Corn Breeders' Association, St. Louis Cotton Exchange, California Fruit Growers' Association, and International Apple Shippers' Association.

Delegations appointed by governors of States:

Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, South Dakota, Nebraska, Wyoming, and New Mexico.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to yield time now?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, before doing that I would like to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to ask considerable time to discuss this measure, but I have received a telegram this morning which will carry me to the State of Kentucky at 2 o'clock to-day, and therefore I shall have a few things to say upon this subject at this time.

This is my first term in Congress. I am inexperienced in tariff legislation; and since the tariff is the paramount issue before the American people between the two dominant political parties in this country, and since the ripened judgment and matured statesmanship of both parties have for years struggled in vain to arrive at any satisfactory settlement of this vexed question, you can readily realize with what trepidation I approach the discussion of any phase of this great problem.

I was opposed to Canadian reciprocity and voted against that measure. After that bill had passed this House, after the farmers' products of our country had through its provisions been exposed to unjust discrimination and injury, both at home and abroad, I had hoped that the farmers' free-list bill, now under discussion, would be presented to this House in such a form as that I could give it my hearty support.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I want to give some of the reasons why I voted against the reciprocity pact with Canada, and later some reasons why I would gladly support this so-called farmers' free-list bill, if it were modified in such a way as to strip it of at least some of its unjust and unfair provisions.

In my judgment, the high cost of living in this country gave birth to the reciprocity treaty with Canada. It was in the hope of reducing the cost of living and relieving the masses of that burden that the reciprocity measure had its origin. Stripped of all disguise, that was, and is, both its aim and object. The President intimated so much in his measure of January 26 last, when he said:

Reciprocity with Canada must necessarily be chiefly confined in its effect on the cost of living to food and forest products.

The President was, and is, sincere in his belief that the cost of living in this country is too high and that the great mass of the American people demand a reduction therein.

The Democratic Party, with its ear to the ground and with the hope of ingratiating itself with the American electorate, coupled with a desire, I grant, of being responsive to the public will, came forward as the chief champion and defender of this measure emanating from a Republican President. It is true that the cost of living is too high. I am also free to say that there is a just popular demand for a reduction in prices; but I shall not agree that the farmer should be the hack horse and the burden bearer of these blessings to the rest of humanity. If corn is too high, so is clothing; if potatoes are too high, so is rice and sugar. If cattle are too high, so is beef. If wheat is too high, so is flour. If hogs are too high, so is pork. If the raw materials which the farmer produces and has to sell, are put upon the free list under this bill, why are not the products made out of the raw materials which the farmer produces likewise put upon the free list? Why is the farmer forced to sell his wheat in a free market and then buy back the flour made from that wheat in a protected market? Why protect the manufacturer of flour at the expense of the farmer? If the farmer's cattle and hogs are put upon the free list, why have not beef and pork likewise been put upon the free list? Why protect the great Beef and Pork Trusts at the expense of the farmer? Why protect the trust products and leave the farmer's products unprotected? If the rye and oats which the farmer raises are too high, so is the hat which he wears upon his head and the shoes he wears upon his feet likewise too high. Why have not they been put upon the free list in this bill? You have put upon the protected list the things which the farmer buys; why do you leave off of the protected list the things which he sells? The things which the farmer buys, no less than the things which the farmer sells, go to make up the cost of living.

Under this reciprocity agreement the tariff duty of 25 cents per bushel has been removed from the wheat which the farmer sells, while a duty of 50 cents per barrel has been retained on the flour which the farmer buys. In other words, the great flour mills of Canada are given the opportunity of buying from our farmers their wheat free and then selling to our farmers the flour made from their own free wheat with a protection of 50 cents per barrel.

Under this Canadian pact a tariff duty of 10 cents per bushel has been removed from the oats which the farmer sells, while a duty of 50 cents a hundred pounds has been retained on the oatmeal and rolled oats made out of the oats bought of the farmer free.

Is it right for the Beef Trust and the great packing concerns of the country to buy free live stock from the farmer and then be protected by a duty of 1½ cents on every pound of meat which the farmer buys?

Is it fair and just and right to remove protection from the farmer's barley and protect the brewer at the rate of 45 cents per 100 pounds?

Is it fair and just and right to remove protection from the farmer's rye and protect the distiller at the rate of $2.60 per gallon on the whisky made therefrom?

Is it fair and just and right to remove protection from the farmer's corn and barley and wheat and rye and oats and tomatoes and other vegetables and protect the manufacturers of these products into articles prepared for the farmer's consumption?

Is it just and fair and right that the Beef Trust and packing concerns, the millers, the bakers, the brewers, and all the rest should be protected in what they make out of the products they buy from the farmer free?

Under this reciprocity agreement things which the farmer produces and has to sell were put upon the free list, but the things which he can not produce, but has to buy, were placed on the protected list. In other words, the manufactured products, in the main, are protected; the farmer's products, in the main, are unprotected. Both Canada and the United States, under this agreement, propose to protect their factories, but mutually agree that the products of the farmers of both countries may enter the markets of the other free of duty. Is it right that the American manufacturer should be permitted to buy the things he consumes from the Canadian farmer free and go on selling his manufactured and protected products to the unprotected farmer of our own country? Grant that the price of living is too high; is not that which the farmer buys too high as well as that which the farmer sells? And, as a matter of fact, the farmer, in the main, is not getting an exorbitant price for the products of his farm.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in his report (1911), shows that the farmer does not get 50 per cent of the price the consumer is forced to pay for agricultural products. He also points out that the prices received by farmers in many instances were even less than the cost of production; and that the middleman, and not the farmer, is the one mostly responsible for the high cost of foods. The trouble lies with the middlemen. The profits are made after the farmer's products leave him and before they reach the table of the consumer. Is there anything in the reciprocity pact designed to remedy this evil? Nothing. Should the farmer be singled out as a victim and made the burden bearer for all other classes? In an effort to reduce the cost of living should the farmer's pocketbook be the only pocketbook called upon to contribute to that end? But the argument has been made here by gentlemen on this floor that the reciprocity agreement with Canada will reduce the cost of living and at the same time will not affect the price of farm products. Since it is conceded by the President, the author of the reciprocity agreement with Canada, that the agreement will chiefly affect the products of the farm, and since the farmer's products are the ones put upon the free list in this bill, it is beyond my conception to understand how the cost of living is going to be reduced without reducing the cost of farm products, and it is equally incomprehensible to me how the farmer's products are going to be reduced in price and the farmer profited thereby. How it is going to help the farmer to sell what he has got to sell in a low market and buy what he has got to buy in a high market is a problem the solution of which the champions of this measure will have to solve, for they solemnly tell us that the farmer is going to be blessed and benefited by the transaction and that he should welcome the day when he sells cheap and buys high.

Canada has a population of about 7,500,000 people; the United States has a population of over 92,000,000. In other words, the United States has about twelve times as many inhabitants as Canada. The advocates of this bill tell us that it is going to be a blessed privilege on the part of the farmer of this country to have the glorious (?) opportunity of selling his farm products to one Canadian in return for the privilege on the part of the one Canadian to sell his farm products to 12 Americans. In other words, that the farmers of this country should welcome the day when they have the right, without tariff interference, to at least partially stop selling their products to 12 Americans in exchange for the privilege of selling them to one Canadian.

Republican protection has built up for our farmers a market here on American soil amounting to $25,000,000,000 a year, and it is now proposed by Canadian reciprocity to turn that over to the Canadian farmer free. We are told that even if our American farmer should get no market of any consequence for the one he gives up, and even if he is forced to sell his products into a foreign market at a reduced price, and even if the Canadian farmers have contributed nothing to build our bridges and roads and churches and schools, or to maintain or keep up our institutions, that the American farmer should look upon this Canadian agreement from a "high plane"; that the things I have just mentioned are sordid considerations; that Canada is our neighbor, and that free intercourse with a neighbor nation is a lofty sentiment and one which should control our actions in this matter. In answer to that argument I want to say that this reciprocity pact with Canada is not a matter of sentiment, but a matter of business; it is a transaction involving the welfare of the American farmer, and the American, not the Canadian, farmer is the one entitled to our sympathy if there is any sentiment at all in this proposed agreement.

Most of the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber have been loud in their praise of the reciprocity pact, because it is a free-trade measure, they say; or, to say the least of it, "a long step in the direction of free trade"; and with that statement I fully agree. This pact is a good deal more than a reciprocal agreement with Canada. It is not a pact for the purpose of exchanging with Canada what we have for what she has not, or what she has for what we have not. It is putting our farm products in open competition with the farm products of Canada. It is not reciprocity; it is free trade. If our farmers are to be exposed to free trade with Canada, why should not our manufacturers be exposed to free trade with Canada? If free trade with Canada is a good thing for the American farmer and the American people generally, why is not free trade with the world a good thing for the American farmer and the American people generally?

I can understand why the Democratic Representatives in this House and the Democratic Party of the Nation seized the opportunity to pass the Canadian reciprocity measure. It was not mainly for the purpose of enlarging our trade with Canada and securing the Canadian market, for we already have that. We now have 60 per cent of Canada's entire foreign trade.

The reason why the Democratic Party embraced with such undisguised delight the opportunity to pass the Canadian pact was that it is a heavy blow to the time-honored doctrine of Republican protection. In fact, it is in many respects a radical free-trade measure. It does not stop with the "tariff for revenue only" doctrine of the Democratic Party. It does not look to revenue at all. Its most earnest advocates admit that we will loose from two to ten million dollars in revenues yearly by reason of the passage of this bill. It would not surprise me if we lost yearly $50,000,000 in revenue.

The central idea in the fertile brains of the Democratic Members of this House, and the motive which actuated their hearts in the passage of the Canadian reciprocity measure, were to strike a body blow to our protective system.

They are not unmindful of the fact that our protective tariff system is a logical whole; that protection must either apply to all industries or apply to none. You can not protect the manufacturers and leave the farmer unprotected. Protection must protect everybody that needs protection or protect nobody.

I have made these observations, Mr. Chairman, explanatory of my vote on the Canadian reciprocity measure and preparatory to a few observations I am now going to make on what is called the farmers' free-list bill now pending before this House.

As I have intimated heretofore, I had hoped to be able to give what some are pleased to call the farmers' free-list bill my hearty support. As an original proposition I would have opposed it in whatever form presented. What I mean to say is, that if the Canadian reciprocity bill had not passed this House and if this misnamed farmers' free-list bill had been introduced as an original proposition, and not as an intended balm (supposed in the minds of some to rehabilitate the status of and compensate for the injury done) the American farmer by the passage of the reciprocity bill, I would have cast my vote against it because of its free-trade provisions. That this measure is a blow at our protective system no one doubts or denies, and that the United States owes her greatness, in a great measure at least, to our protective policy is the belief of many of her citizens.

The truth is that the protective system has been the generally accepted economic policy of the United States. For years our people have been divided as to the amount of protection and about just what should be protected and what should not be protected; but few of our people have been open advocates of free trade. The Republican Party has stood for such duties on imported articles (coming in competition with our own) as would furnish protection to American capital and American labor. The Democratic Party has stood for such rates of duty on imported articles as would furnish us sufficient revenues to run the Government when economically administered, apparently without regard to the effect on American capital and American labor. The "insurgent" and "stand-pat" Republicans differ on matters here and there, but all stand for some sort of protection and none for free trade. The tariff is essentially a selfish question. The Democrats want a tariff for revenue only. The Republicans want a tariff not only for revenue, but a tariff so levied as will protect American capital and American labor. Most everybody wants a tariff levied on the products of foreign countries coming into our own country, in order to raise sufficient revenues to defray the necessary expenses of this great Government. We differ as to just how to get this money; but all agree that it is much to our liking to get it from the pockets of the foreigner, if we can, rather than to take it out of our own. And here at home I find that our views as individuals are much warped by how tariff duties, or the lack of them, on this article or that are going to affect us. The Middle West and their Representatives here, or the most of them, want free lumber and protection on agricultural products. Why? Because they produce the one and do not produce the other. They want to buy as cheap and sell as high as they can. The lumber-producing districts want protection on lumber and would like to see farm products on the free list. Why? Because they want to sell what they have to sell as high as they can and buy what they have got to buy as cheap as they can. The New England manufacturer is interested in having protection on the product he manufactures and apparently would take quite a delight, some of them, in buying products of the farm from the farmer free.

It has been wisely said that the tariff question is a local question, and the author of that saying could have added, with equal truth, "and a selfish question." The tariff will have to stand as a whole, or it can not stand at all.

The Democrats, through their representatives here, have put the products of the American farmer on the free list, so far as Canada is concerned; and Canada is our closest and most dangerous competitor. It seems to me that any unprejudiced mind must admit that great injury has been done the farmer in the passage of the reciprocity agreement with Canada. In fact, the Democratic majority on the Ways and Means Committee, in making a report on the farmers' free-list bill, admitted that the American farmer was getting the worst of it in the reciprocity agreement with Canada, and urged that the farmers' free-list bill be passed to remedy that wrong. In the report just referred to this significant language is used:

> In fact, action on the Canadian agreement involves the necessity of further and immediate action in removing a number of duties on imports from other countries, in order that justice may be done to the great army of our agricultural producers.

The Democratic Party knows that the American farmer has been unfairly dealt with in putting his products in open competition with the products of the Canadian farmer. Canada is a new and undeveloped country, with matchless possibilities and unbounded resources.

It seems that many, if not most, Americans realize this fact, for in the year 1909, $304,000,000 belonging to enterprising inhabitants of the United States were invested in the Dominion of Canada, most of it being put in mines and timber and timber lands.

Ninety thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine residents of the United States left this country in the year 1899 and made their future homes in Canada. North Dakota furnished 16,000 of this number, while Minnesota and the State of Washington each furnished over 11,000.

Canada, in 1910, produced 95,000,000 bushels of wheat available for export. Her total yield that year was 166,744,000 bushels. She, therefore, produced twice as much as she needed for her own consumption, and actually exported that year 57,000,000 bushels of wheat, much of it coming to the United States. In that same year the United States exported only 114,000,000 bushels of wheat. This gives some idea of what Canada will do along this line when her 8,000,000 people reach the 92,000,000 point, which we boast of possessing in this country.

The Canadian wheat lands, of which there are 30,000,000 acres in the Provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, and Saskatchewan alone, average, when in cultivation, 22 bushels of wheat to the acre, while the average yield of the United States is only 15 bushels per acre. Experts say that Canada is capable of producing as much wheat yearly as is now produced in the United States.

Canada exported to the United States in 1908 $2,582,001 worth of live stock, cattle, hogs, sheep, and horses. In 1909 Canada shipped to the United States $1,847,836 worth of breadstuffs, wheat, rye, beans, and so forth. In the same year she shipped $382,118,000 worth of provisions—beef, cheese, eggs, and so forth—to the United States.

In the year 1909 Canada produced $2,912,509 worth of hogs, $2,705,390 worth of sheep, and $7,234,085 worth of cattle. In the same year she produced 55,398,000 bushels of barley, 166,744,000 bushels of wheat, and 353,466,000 bushels of oats. The total field crops of Canada in 1909 were valued at $552,992,100. In the year 1908 Canada stood tenth among the nations of the world as a wheat producer, and in 1909, one year later, she held the fifth position.

These figures show something of Canada's capacity along agricultural lines and something of her danger to us as a competitor in agricultural products.

For these and other reasons I voted against the reciprocity agreement with Canada and did what I could to avert its passage, believing that great harm and injury would result to the American farmer by reason thereof. But since that bill has passed this House, since the Democratic Party has, through its passage, made this onslaught on the farmers of our country—about one-sixth of our population—in the interest of "cheaper food," and since our farmers are, as far as Canada is concerned, forced to sell the products of their farms in a free market and buy the things they have got to buy in a protected market, I repeat that I much regret that the farmers' free-list bill, now soon to be voted on here, has, what appears to me, so many unwise and unfair provisions in it.

If this free-list bill had been one to benefit and not merely appease the American farmer, it would have had my hearty support. If it had been a bill really to help the American farmer and not to make political capital at his and others' expense, it would have had on the floor of this House no advocate more earnest than I, although, as I have said, I would have been against it as an original proposition.

Now, let us look at some of the provisions of this so-called farmers' free-list bill. It provides that "plows, tooth harrows, disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, cotton gins, farm wagons, farm carts, and all other agricultural implements—whatever that may mean—of any kind and description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts, * * * shall be exempt from duty when imported into the United States."

The gentlemen on the opposite side of this Chamber maintain that they propose to pass this bill in the interest of the American farmer. That being their avowed purpose, it would be well to look dispassionately at the situation and see whether or not this portion of the bill, if passed, will redound to the benefit of the farmers of our country, and to what extent, if any. If this part of the bill, when passed, will greatly benefit our farmers, then it ought to receive the hearty support of all the Members here.

To ascertain whether or not this part of the bill, if enacted into law, will benefit our farmers, it is necessary to determine at least three things: 1. What is the present status of the articles mentioned in this part of the bill relative to tariff duties? 2. What are the prices on these various articles now, in our own country and abroad? 3. And what effect, if any, will the passage of this bill have on the price of the articles mentioned herein?

Addressing myself to the first inquiry I find under section 476 of our present tariff law, which is now in operation, that "plows, tooth and disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins, and so forth, shall be imported into this country free of duty," provided "no tax or duty" shall be imposed on us, "on like articles imported from the United States" into other countries, and in the event any foreign country refuses to let us ship our agricultural implements, and so forth, free of duty into it, then we charge that country 15 per cent ad valorem for shipping its like implements into this country and enjoying the privilege of our American markets.

Is there anything radically wrong about these provisions of our present tariff law? We offer to let farming implements of other countries come into this country free of duty if they will let our farming implements go into their country free of duty. Anything unfair about that? Is it right for us to give the various countries of the world a free market for their agricultural implements in this country and, in turn, be denied a free market for our agricultural market in theirs? Should we discriminate against our own industries, or any part of them, in favor of the industries of foreign countries? Should the American manufacturer, simply because he is a manufacturer, who employs well-paid American labor, be discriminated against in favor of another manufacturer, who employs cheap-paid foreign labor? Is it right that American manufacturers of agricultural implements, who employ American labor, should be forced to pay a duty on the agricultural implements which they send to other countries and let the manufacturers of agricultural implements of other countries, who employ foreign labor, send their agricultural implements into this country free of duty? Such a course discriminates against both American capital and American labor. And, besides that, it is my information that the International Harvester Co.—and which is sometimes referred to as the Agricultural Implement Trust—has manufacturing plants not only in America, but in Canada, Sweden, Russia, France, and Germany; and that agricultural implements are as cheap, or about as cheap, in America as they are elsewhere.

If that be true, and if this tariff law, which is soon to be enacted here, is to remain long in force, would it not be a wise idea for the International Harvester Co. and other concerns in the United States engaged in making farm implements to remove their plants to Canada and elsewhere and save the thousands of dollars annually which are now paid this Government in tariff duties for the privilege of shipping and selling agricultural implements into this country.

In that event this Government would not only lose the thousands of dollars paid in tariff duties, but our wage earners would lose $50,000,000 annually now paid American labor in the manufacture of agricultural implements.

In 1905 the United States produced $111,344,975 worth of agricultural implements. There were in the year of 1900 46,582 wage earners employed in the United States in the manufacture of agricultural implements. In that year there was $157,707,951 of American money invested in the manufacture of these implements. The State of Kentucky alone had $1,735,595 invested in this enterprise, and paid Kentucky wage earners over $300,000. The State of Illinois had $62,202,320 invested in the manufacture of agricultural implements, and paid over $9,000,000, exclusive of officers and clerks' salaries, to American wage earners.

To let the cheaply made agricultural implements be shipped into this country free of duty would be, indeed, an unjust and unfair discrimination against American capital and American labor, especially in view of the fact that tariff duties must be paid by us on all the agricultural implements which we send for sale to other countries.

Since agricultural implements are already as cheap in this country as elsewhere, and since we lose thousands of dollars in revenue for this Government and transfer millions of dollars from American to foreign labor, it is evident, it seems to me, that this section of the farmers' free "fake" bill if enacted into law, will hurt, not help, both the American farmer and the American people generally.

This farmers' free "fake bill" provides also "that on and after the day following the passage of this act beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, and meats of all kinds, fresh, salted, pickled, dried, smoked, dressed and undressed, prepared or preserved in any manner, bacon, hams, shoulders, lard, lard compound and lard substitutes, sausage, sausage meats shall be exempt from duty when imported into the United States." Before the passage of this bill I propose to introduce the following amendment:

Provided, That beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, and other meats stipulated in this section of the bill, and which are produced in the United States, shall be admitted free of duty into the country or countries, dependency or dependencies, which import any of like articles into this country.

I have no idea that the amendment I will offer will pass this House. The truth is that the Democratic Representatives here have already held a caucus on this bill and have already decided that no amendment, however meritorious, shall have a chance to become incorporated into and made a part of this measure when enacted into law.

The Democrats of this House have decided that this farmers' free-list bill shall pass this House without amendment from anybody. That, however, shall not deter me from offering whatever amendments, which, if enacted into law, would, in my judgment, prove to be beneficial to the country at large, and especially the district I have the privilege and honor of representing. The Democratic Party, through its Ways and Means Committee, said in its report on the farmers' free-list bill that great injury had been done "the great army of our agricultural producers" through and by reason of the passage of the Canadian pact; that "the advantages of the agreement are greater for the people of Canada than for the people of our own country"; and hence the introduction of the farmers' free-list bill to remedy that wrong. But does it remedy it? Will this section of the farmers' free-list bill, which removes the duty on beef, mutton, pork, and so forth, actually help the American farmer—the American producer?

We produced in this country, in the year 1905, $760,764,477 worth of fresh and preserved meats, while only $477,755 worth was imported into this country from other countries for consumption.

In the year 1910 we produced in this country in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000 worth of fresh and preserved meats, while only $736,165 worth were imported into this country from other countries for consumption and on which $159,865 in duties were paid to us by foreign countries. But they tell us if we will let foreign meats come into this country free of duty that we can well afford to lose $159,865 yearly in duties paid to this country, because they say that if we permit free meats to come to this country it will greatly reduce the price of meats and therefore the cost of living.

If it be true, as contended by Democratic Representatives here, that the importation of meats into this country from foreign countries free of duty will greatly reduce the price of meats, and therefore the cost of living, on whom, I ask, will this burden of reduced cost of meats fall? The American farmer raises cattle and hogs and sheep, and so forth, from which beef and pork and mutton, and so forth, are produced. Now, if the price of beef and pork and mutton, and so forth, are greatly reduced, will not the price of cattle and hogs and sheep, and so forth, be necessarily reduced and will not the American farmer be the great sufferer from this transaction?

We now have over 6,000,000 farmers in the United States, and no legislation should be enacted here or elsewhere that fails to give their interest due consideration.

The interests of the farmers and stock raisers of our country are already greatly imperiled by the importation of cheaply produced frozen meats from other countries. A number of our competitors in such meats are the countries of Canada, New Zealand, Argentina, Australia, Mexico, and other countries, which produce much more of meats than they consume and are already exporting largely to other countries.

Canada, three years ago, shipped $11,000,000 worth of cattle, on the hoof, to Europe; five years ago we shipped $22,000,000 worth of meats to Europe; and last year we shipped only $12,000,000 worth of meats to Europe.

The countries which I have already referred to, which are producing cheaper meat than it is in our power to produce, have already taken much of our foreign markets from us. Argentina, for instance, in 1909 sent $32,000,000 worth of meats to Europe; New Zealand sent $17,000,000 to Europe; other countries were and are heavy meat exporters.

The authors of this free-list bill propose to let all these other countries send their cheaply produced meats to the United States and enjoy the privilege of the American market without paying a cent duty for the privilege of doing so; and in turn our farmers and stock raisers are denied the privilege of sending their meats to other countries without paying, in many instances, heavy tariff duty thereon. But we are told that even if the American farmer does have to sell his farm products cheaper, and, especially his meat products cheaper, by reason of the passage of this free-list bill, that in turn he can buy what he has to buy so much cheaper by reason thereof that he will in the end be greatly benefited. Let us look into that claim for a few moments and see what truth, if any, there is to that statement.

The Democratic Party has for years contended that the price of any given article to the consumer is increased by the amount of the tariff duty levied on that article. In other words, that the consumer pays the tax. I am not saying that that is true; but if it be true, as contended by the Democratic Party, let us see whether or not the American farmer will be benefited by the passage of this farmers' free-list bill. Taking the ad valorem rate of duty in the year 1909 on the articles mentioned in this farmers' free-list bill, which the farmer has to buy, and the farmers' consumption of these articles herein in the year 1905—the only one on which I now have the figures at my command—I find that the farmers of our country under the Democratic theory would save $93,869,914 in buying manufactured articles and other things he has to buy which are enumerated in this free-list bill. But while that is true, the same process of calculation shows that the farmers of this country would lose each year $292,618,285 by the reduction in prices of farm products, or a total loss of $198,758,371, or $33.12 annually to every farmer.

TABLE 1.—Showing supposed reduction to farmers in manufactured products which the farmer buys, included in H. R. 4413, which is the farmers' free-list bill.

Articles.	Consumption of article in United States 1905.	Ad valorem duty 1910.	Supposed reduction in price.	Farmers' part of reduction.
Agricultural implements	$90,637,110	20	$18,127,422	$18,127,422
Bagging for cotton sacks, burlaps, etc	26,031,614	28	7,288,851	7,288,851
Cotton ties (hoop or band iron)	12,639,953	36	4,541,373	4,541,373
Leather, boots, shoes, harness, saddles, saddlery, etc	493,005,263	7	33,510,366	11,170,112
Barbed and other fence wire, wire rods, strands, ropes, etc	113,027,205	28	31,647,617	31,647,617
Lumber, laths, and shingles	699,599,293	8	55,963,979	18,654,659
Sewing machines and parts of	8,497,464	30	2,549,239	849,746
Salt	9,540,827	50	4,770,412	1,590,134
Total annual gain to farmers				93,869,914
Average annual gain to each farmer				15.64

In the above table I have assumed that farmers will get the benefit of all the reduction in prices of farm implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, and barbed and other wire for fencing. But leather, boots and shoes, lumber, sewing machines, and salt are used by all classes of citizens. I have therefore assumed that the farmers would consume one-third of these articles, and hence should be credited with only one-third of the reduction in the cost of these articles.

TABLE 2.—Showing supposed reduction in price of articles manufactured from farm products, which the farmer sells, included in H. R. 4413, which would be a loss to the farmers.

Articles.	Consumption of article in United States 1905.	Ad valorem duty 1910.	Supposed reduction in price.	Per capita to each farmer.
Fresh and preserved meats	$614,895,219	23	$152,959,564	25.47
Flour and grits, cereals and bread	665,041,533	21	139,658,721	23.27
Total annual loss to farmers			292,618,285	48.74
Average annual loss to each farmer				48.74

In other words, by taking the Democratic contention and figures which I have referred to, it is shown that by the passage of this bill there will be a total loss annually to the farmers of the United States of $198,758,371, or each farmer will incur a net loss of $33.12 yearly.

We exported, in 1910, $106,844,808 worth of fresh and preserved meats to other countries, American markets having first been supplied by the products of the American farmer, all except $736,165 worth of meats, which were shipped into this country from other countries.

Now, it is proposed by the framers of this bill not only to turn over the entire annual American market of about $1,000,000,000 free to all the countries of the world, with a loss in revenue of over $200,000 annually, but at the same time to force us to pay a tariff duty on all the meats, and so forth, we export to other countries.

Under this arrangement all the other countries of the world can have the benefit of the American market without paying a copper for the privilege of selling their meats, and so forth, in this country; but when we seek a market in which to sell our surplus, then we have to pay for it in the shape of tariff duties.

The amendment I have referred to and which I propose to offer will remedy this evil will at least force foreign countries that make us pay a duty for the privilege of selling our meats, and so forth, in their markets likewise pay a duty to us for the privilege of selling their meats, and so forth, in our markets. It is not fair nor just nor right to furnish free markets to the world and in turn be denied by the world free markets for our products.

I will not attempt to discuss at length the leather, boot, and shoe schedule in this bill. The truth is that the American shoe worker is paid from 35 to 90 per cent more for wages than the foreign shoe worker, but he does more work and better work than his colaborers in other countries.

Our present tariff of 10 per cent on shoes made of bovine and calf and 15 per cent on shoes made from other leather fall far short of equalizing the wages paid in foreign countries, which, excepting England, have practically a prohibitive duty. In Canada it is 30 per cent; France, 57 to 95 cents per pair; Belgium, 27 cents per pound; Germany, 25 per cent; Austria, 20 cent per kilo; Japan, 40 per cent, and so on.

If the tariff duty of from 10 to 15 per cent which is now in operation in this country is wiped out, as is proposed in this bill, without requiring a similar concession from other countries, it puts both American capital and American labor at great disadvantage.

According to the last Government report, the United States pays her boot and shoe employees an average of $38.33 per month, or five times as much as they are paid in some of the foreign countries.

Tan bark is used in the manufacture of shoes from hides of cattle, and so forth. We produce in the eleventh congressional district of Kentucky a good deal of tan bark, and if the boot and shoe industry of the United States is crippled, it will greatly cripple that industry in the district I have the honor to represent, injuring both the laborers and owners of tan bark, as well as those owning the timber from which tan bark is taken.

There is another provision in this farmers' free-list bill which ought to defeat its passage. The section of the bill to which I refer provides that—

> Timber, hewed, sided, or squared, or round timber used for spars or in building wharves, shingles, laths, fencing posts, sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed, etc.—
>
> Shall be—
>
> exempt from duty when imported into the United States.

We produced in the United States in the year 1910 $724,705,700 worth of lumber, laths, and shingles, and we exported in that same year to other countries $47,504,809 worth of lumber, laths, and shingles. The lumber has been and is yet one of our big industries. At one time the United States was the greatest timber country in the world to its size. There was a time when the forests of the United States covered 850,000,000 acres. It is claimed that we have left something near 550,000,000 acres of timber lands, but great inroads have been made upon the supply of valuable timber in all parts of this country.

We now take from our forests yearly 20,000,000,000 cubic feet of wood, 90,000,000 cords of firewood, 40,000,000 feet of lumber board measure, 118,000,000 hewn ties, and a billion and a half of staves, besides immense quantities of lumber used in other ways, and it is a heavy drain upon the forests of our country.

In my judgment a pretty hard blow was struck at the lumber business of the United States in the passage of the Canadian reciprocity agreement, although a duty of 10 cents per 1,000 pieces was retained on laths, and a duty of 30 cents per 1,000 pieces was retained on shingles, and a duty of 50 cents per 1,000 feet, board measure, was retained on "sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber planed or finished on one side." It is true, of course, under the reciprocity agreement, that "sawed boards, planks, and other lumber not otherwise manufactured than sawed," as well as "timber hewn, sided, or squared, otherwise than by sawing," and so forth, were put upon the free list with Canada, but not with the rest of the world. In other words, rough lumber, in the main, was put upon the free list with Canada under the reciprocity pact, while lumber partly or at all manufactured was not. But under this free-list bill lumber of all kinds, except mahogany, rosewood, and a few others, are put upon the free list. Shingles and laths were put upon the free list, and while Canada can now ship shingles and laths into this country free of duty, we will have to pay a duty for the privilege of shipping our shingles and laths into Canada.

In lumber, shingles, laths, and so forth, our northern neighbor, Canada, "the lady of the snows," is our closest and most dangerous competitor.

Canada is a vast country in area, containing 700,000 square miles more territory than the United States, leaving out Alaska. It is a country largely undeveloped, with boundless resources. Take British Columbia, for example. That Province possesses the largest compact area of merchantable timber anywhere to be found in the whole of North America. The truth is that western Canada will soon be furnishing lumber for a large part of the world's requirements. The lumber produced in British Columbia now finds a market all over the world, large quantities of it being shipped into the United States.

The Province of Ontario produced $24,399,077 worth of lumber in 1909; the Province of Quebec produced $10,838,608 worth the same year; while other Provinces in Canada rushed the grand total up to $54,439,036. In the same year Canada produced over $1,000,000 worth of laths and over $3,000,000 worth of shingles.

In the month of October, 1909, Canada shipped $1,935,977 worth of planks and boards into the United States, $244,525 worth of laths, palings, and pickets, and $178,119 worth of shingles. If Canada can ship this much stuff into the United States in one month and pay our tariff duties on same, what may we expect now, when she has no tariff duties to pay? Lumbering will for many years be one of the chief industries of Canada. Much of her virgin forests are yet untouched by the hands of man.

To expose to the cheap-paid labor of Canada, and without tariff interference, except to our detriment, the lumber interests of this country, big and little—whether on the country farm and in the tree or at the mill and manufactured into planks, boards, or otherwise—is to me a proposition so preposterous as to merit the condemnation of every fair-minded American.

The reciprocity pact with Canada did give the lumber interest of our country a little protection in that our lumber was put upon an equal footing with Canadian lumber, except we were exposed to the cheaper paid labor of that country; but under the free-list bill, Canada has the privilege of sending practically all of her lumber to this country free of duty, while the United States can not send any of her lumber to Canada that is partly, or at all, manufactured without paying a heavy duty on same. That this is an unfair discrimination against us and in favor of Canada, as well as other countries, it seems to me, no one can either doubt or deny.

In behalf of the lumber owners (not the Lumber Trusts) and the lumber industry of the United States, and especially in the interest of the farmers of the eleventh congressional district of Kentucky, who have tracts of timber on their farms, and others engaged in the lumber industry in that district, I propose to offer an amendment to the lumber section of the farmers' free-list bill, which will provide that no country that charges us duty on our lumber, when shipped into its territory, can ship its lumber into this country free of duty.

The amendment I have prepared and which, at the proper time, I shall offer, is as follows: After the words "cabinet woods," in the section of this bill providing for no tariff to be charged or levied on lumber, and so forth, when shipped into this country, add the following:

> Provided, That each and all the articles specified in this section, and produced in the United States, shall be admitted free of duty into all countries, dependency, or dependencies, which imports any of said articles into this country.

This is a fair and just amendment—one that ought to pass this House. No country that charges us a duty for the privilege of shipping and selling our lumber, and so forth, into its market should be permitted the privilege of shipping and selling its lumber here, in our market, free of duty.

I feel sure that the amendment I have offered will not pass this House. No amendment offered by any Republican will pass this House, because the Democratic majority here have determined to pass this bill without amendment; but I want to enter my protest against its unfair provisions. There are some things in the free-list bill I would be glad to vote for, and would vote for, if presented separately and not coupled with such unfair provisions as the lumber and meat schedules, for instance.

If the southern rice planters and sugar growers or producers are to have the privilege of buying free lumber, those who own timber up in my district, or engaged in its manufacture, would like to have the privilege of buying free rice and free sugar from their neighbors in the South, who are permitted to buy their lumber free.

In the year 1910 there were $79,000,000 worth of beet and cane sugar produced in the United States, and in the same year our neighbors to the south produced 1,000,000,000 pounds of rice. Why did not the framers of this farmers' free-list bill put rice and sugar on the free list? Its authors put ground meal and wheat flour on the free list. They are produced in my district and in the North and West, but lemons, oranges, grapefruit, and rice and rice flour, which are produced in the South, are left on the protected list. Did the framers of this bill put lumber and ground meal and wheat flour, and so forth, on the free list because they are produced in certain sections of the United States, and leave sugar and rice and rice flour and lemons and oranges, and so forth, on the protected list because they are produced in certain other sections of this country—certain Democratic sections of this country?

This is the first time in 16 years that the Democratic Party has had a majority of Representatives on the floor of this House. In the main, for more than a score of years, the Democratic Party here has been a party of obstruction—a party of theory. And the political tidal wave that brought the Democratic Party in the majority in this House was not so much of an expression of confidence in the Democratic Party as a rebuke to what the people thought was a dereliction of duty to them upon the part of the Republican Party, coupled with a lamentable division in its own ranks. The Democratic Party does not now have the confidence of a majority of the American people. The Democratic Party can win that confidence only by wise and constructive statesmanship. It can not win it by striking down an industry here and an industry there. It can not win it by legislating for one class of our people and against another class of our people. It can not win it by legislating for one section of our country and against another section of our country. It can not win it, and it does not deserve to win it, by legislation more favorable to other countries than our own. The championship of the people's rights should be confined by this House to the championship of the rights of Americans. Let foreign countries, except in extreme cases, look after their own. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in the bill which we have before us we see the concrete result of 16 years of Democratic deliberation. I regret that I find myself unable to compliment the majority of my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means on this their first essay in tariff legislation. The product of their deliberations is a bill which they themselves can not explain except in the vaguest terms. If there is one thing desirable in a tariff bill, and particularly in one like this, which affects millions of people and perhaps billions of money, it is clarity, and clarity is a feature of this bill that is conspicuous by its absence. It is utterly impossible for either friend or foe of this measure to more than guess at what it means. Its friends do not seem able to explain what they intend it to mean. Its opponents can form no idea of what it does mean. No one knows, or if he does he has not so far explained, either what industries this measure is intended to affect or what industries, as a matter of fact, it does affect.

We are told in the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee that it is hoped that it will not cause a loss of revenue of more than about $10,500,000; but we can not be sure from anything that we have so far heard that it may not amount to millions upon millions more. In their zeal to show that, at least upon its face, this bill is intended to benefit one particular class of the community, its proponents have employed general terms. For instance, the word "agricultural" is used in so loose a way that it is impossible to tell how the provisions in which this word appears shall be construed. In reply to questions asked by some of us on this side who really want to know what we are voting for, we are asked to wait until the courts in the future shall have construed this measure.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, my very good friend, and the one man on that side of the House particularly qualified to discuss any question of the tariff, was unable to cite me the other day the paragraph in the existing law to which an item on which I questioned him would apply. And later on, when I happened to hazard the remark that this paragraph might be difficult of construction by the Treasury officials, he replied, with a rather contemptuous reference to the high-priced Republican machinery which we had provided for the construction of tariff measures. I devoutly hope, Mr. Chairman, that this "high-priced Republican machinery" may never be called upon to construe this bill. But in the meantime it occurs to me that the membership of this House is entitled to know what we are voting upon now.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader upon this side of the House, in his speech the other day drilled this measure so full of holes that neither the polished suavity of my friend from New York [Mr. HARRISON] nor the brusque eloquence of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] can make any pretense of stopping them up.

There are such phrases as these:

All other agricultural implements of any kind or description.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will ask not to be interrupted now. I will be glad to yield further on to my colleague.

Also the following:

Other materials suitable for bagging or sacking agricultural products.
Wire for baling hay, straw, or other agricultural products.
Other kinds of wire suitable for fencing.
All prepared cereal foods.

They all occur in this bill.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and others have asked what these phrases mean. Your answer has been, "They mean what they say." Now, that is no answer, gentlemen. It is no argument to say that we upon this side of the House are unduly technical, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] said the other day. The membership of this House is entitled to know what it is voting on. It does not know to-day, and it can not know under the language in this bill.

We have, at least, the right to know how much revenue we are voting away from the Government, and there is not a man upon this floor that can more than vaguely guess within millions. In the absence of any satisfactory explanation as to how this bill should be construed, in the absence of any amendment or amendments which would clarify its language, it is our duty as Members of this House to vote it down.

This House, intrusted as it is with the origination of tariff legislation, ought not to pass a bill such as this, no matter how unfavorable the ultimate prospect may be of its becoming a law.

In the time at my disposal I do not intend to discuss every feature of this bill, and only one in any great detail. I take up this feature not only because it affects millions of capital and thousands upon thousands of workmen, not only because it is a great industry in the district which I have the honor to represent, but because it is the best example I can imagine as illustrating the present and future policy of the Democratic Party with regard to the treatment of American industries. I mean the shoe and leather schedule.

If I approved of every other feature of this bill, Mr. Chairman, I should oppose it because it undertakes to put shoes and leather made from cattle hides on the free list. This proposition, it seems to me, strikes at the very foundation of the Republican theory of protection. If we are to vote this proposition into the law we might as well forever abandon the thought that we shall in the future give any consideration whatever to American industries or to American labor in making up tariff bills.

We are here asked to wipe out absolutely the meager duty that is still maintained upon leather and shoes, and which is placed there to equalize the difference between their cost of production here and abroad. Not the slightest attempt is made to show that there is no such difference in the cost of production, but we are simply told that if shoes and leather are placed on the free list it may possibly in the end reduce their price in the hands of the consumer.

The interests of the consumer are alone considered. The interests of the producer, both employer and employee, are thrown absolutely to the winds. If there were a high duty on shoes and leather; if it were claimed that there were inordinate profits made in their manufacture; if any one of you would even remotely suggest that there is a combination in the shoe and leather business there might be some excuse for bringing in this proposition at this time. But no such statement has been made. No such statement can be made. The duties on leather and shoes are the lowest of those on the products of any great American industry in a highly manufactured state; in the one case but 5 per cent, in the other case but 10 per cent.

In the report of the majority of this committee the average duty on the paragraph in this bill is placed at but 7.38 per cent. Does anyone, even the most radical free trader, claim that a duty of 7.38 per cent is prohibitive, or even excessive? Can anyone claim that a duty so small as this adds perceptibly to the cost of an article in the hands of the ultimate consumer?

If there is one industry in which the keenest competition exists and always has existed in every part of this country, it is the shoe and leather industry. If there had been any chance of a combination in a portion of it—that is, the tanning industry—it was killed absolutely by the passage of the Payne law, which placed hides upon the free list.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I voted for free hides, not in the interest of the shoe manufacturer nearly so much as in the interest of the independent tanner. The prospect seemed to be that if hides were not placed upon the free list, if the existing duty was maintained, the Chicago packers would go into the tanning business; and controlling as they would practically the entire American supply of hides, they would have had an advantage over their competitors of not less than 15 per cent, because their competitors would be thrown back upon the foreign market and have to pay a duty where the packers did not.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The placing of hides upon the free list has made free competition among all the tanners of this country, and they have now a duty of only 5 per cent as against all their competitors throughout the world.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield for a very brief question.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Did the gentleman take into consideration, when he voted to put hides upon the free list, the interests that the farmer and the stock grower had in the hide industry in this country?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why, I believed at the time I voted to put hides on the free list that it would not reduce the price of cattle to any farmer, and the results seem to have proved that I was right, because the gentleman from Colorado may remember that immediately after the passage of the Payne law hides began to go up in price.

I have always accounted for that by the supposition that the independent tanners were so afraid that a duty would be maintained on hides and that they would be at a disadvantage of 15 per cent, as compared with their big Chicago competitors, that they were not buying in the hide market at all, and when hides were put on the free list all of them at once began to buy their raw material.

Now, in their wildest moments our opponents upon the other side of the aisle have never claimed that there was a combination of the shoe industry. The word "shoe" trust is perhaps the only trust that is absolutely absent from their vocabulary. There are more than 1,300 shoe factories in this country, and they are not confined, as some people seek to prove, to the territory of my friend from Massachusetts. In fact, New England altogether produces probably less than half of the shoes produced in this country. No one has ever claimed that the cloak of combination has been thrown over either few or many of them. On the contrary, their competition admittedly is fierce everywhere. In consideration of giving them their principal raw material—hides—free, Congress a few years ago reduced their protective duty 65 per cent, and it is to-day only 10 per cent. You propose now to wipe this absolutely out, still leaving the existing duties on the many other materials that are used in making shoes. Is this fair? Does this industry deserve the punishment you intend to inflict upon it? You say, "Yes; because some New England shoe manufacturers came before the Ways and Means Committee and said, 'Give us free hides and we will take free shoes.'" Now, my recollection of that incident is that there was just one man who ever made the statement in a public hearing that he was willing to have shoes go on the free list if hides were placed on the free list. But if it be true that anyone from New England advocated free shoes, it is not true, so far as I know, that anyone from any other part of the country did; and it is certainly not true as to any shoe or leather manufacturer in the district which I have the honor to represent.

I am not willing, if I can help it, that legislation should be passed which would wipe out these industries or, at the very least, cause a certain reduction in the wages of the labor employed therein. If you are for free trade in leather and shoes, why not announce it as your policy with regard to all industries? Why do you single out this industry in particular, upon the flimsy excuse either that representatives of this industry ask for free trade, or that a duty of 7.38 per cent is a great burden upon the consumer?

But you say that the American manufacturer is not entitled to any protection at all, because under a duty of 25 per cent he was able to sell largely abroad and practically to control the American market. It is true that with modern machinery and modern methods American genius has been able, with a 25 per cent duty, to beat its competitors abroad in some classes of this trade, and this moderate duty has been sufficient to prevent the flooding of this market with foreign shoes of an inferior grade. But the situation to-day is very different. The shoe manufacturers in every country abroad have adopted our methods. They have installed our machinery in their factories. It will not be many months before practically every large factory abroad will enjoy every advantage, both in method and equipment, which has enabled the American manufacturer to compete with them in the past. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] cited the instance of the factory in Helsingfors, Finland, which is being equipped with precisely the same machinery as that in the largest factory in Haverhill, Mass. Already foreign competition is making itself very substantially felt in our market, and not only that, but our business in every country in Europe is rapidly falling off. It has ceased almost entirely in South America, where a very few years ago we had a large trade, and it has absolutely ceased in Australia, because Australia has just imposed a 30 per cent duty against us, three times our present duty against Australia.

I desire to insert at this point an article from the Boot and Shoe Trade Journal, of London. I will only read a sentence or two now, as it is somewhat long.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN SHOES.

Our readers will receive with some amazement the news that it is the intention of the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co., of Brockton, one of the largest direct shoe-distributing houses in America, to open stores in England. A few years ago we should have hesitated to use so strong a term of astonishment, but many changes have taken place since then and conditions have materially altered. Nevertheless, the pluck displayed by this concern in endeavoring to find a footing in England in the face of the now existing circumstances is worthy of all praise. To the manufacturers of America we owe much, and to those who have opened retail stores here we owe perhaps a little. To the shoe manufacturers of the United States belongs the credit of waking up the shoe manufacturers of England, and we grant it to them in no ungrudging spirit, because we are not only thankful that they came and woke us up, but the awakening has been to the shoe trade of this country a veritable godsend, for we are now fully able to meet their competition at home and, furthermore, carry it with undoubted success into the very heart of America itself. The Douglas Shoe Co., therefore, comes to us under vastly different and vastly more difficult conditions than those firms who established their stores here when the demand for American shoes was at its height and when the makers of American shoes could lay claim to features in their productions which were not to be found in goods of British manufacture. To-day the facts are otherwise. There is no good point in an American shoe that can not be found in British goods of equal value, and there is in addition much that is not to be found in the rival production. If the belief therefore exists that our American friends will again forge ahead and leave us behind, and that the belief is inspiring the new venture and furnishing food for consolation amongst the proprietors of the American stores established here, then the sooner the delusion dies the better. This might not be the case if we were not meeting Brother Jonathan in an open field, if we had not his competition to meet at home and on the Continent, and if we had not to meet the competition of the continental manufacturers, who are waking up to new methods as ours have done. Although the consumption of American shoes is declining in this country and on the Continent, we have no doubt that very considerable quantities will continue to be sold here and there, but such goods will undoubtedly be distributed mainly through the medium of American-owned stores. The more stores of this kind there are the less there will be for each. Few retailers stock the American article, and those who do are carrying it in diminished quantities each year. Looking at the figures just to hand for the last seven months of 1910, we find that America sent us only $799,453 worth of shoes as against $988,762 worth during the same period of 1909. Her shipments to France fell in like manner from $229,028 to $165,814, and to Germany from $371,266 to $300,718. On the other hand, the shipment of English shoes to the continent went on increasing, and indications point to a further increase in the number and extent of the transaction. Let us take the case of Belgium as an example of the influence of the British boot on the Continent. France and Germany are her nearest neighbors, yet England supplies the greatest part of her imported footwear. The following are the principal figures: Great Britain, value of sales last year, £67,400; France, £25,750; Germany, £20,600; Austria, £4,300; United States, £9,000. The reason is not hard to find. We are selling shoes to America, and the world knows it pretty well by now. The continental buyers of foreign shoes know it, too, and doubtless reason with themselves in this way: That if England is selling shoes to America it is because they are better and that it is policy for them to buy English shoes instead. In this way the continental trade in foreign shoes is drifting from America to England. It is, of course, a matter of much gratification to us not only because it brings extra grist to the Britisher's mill, but because this journal was instrumental in getting British shoes onto the American market. It is gratifying to us to know that our pioneering work has been successfully followed up and that a steadily growing trade is being built up in the United States and Canada. This week the representatives of six British firms start out to lay their samples before the buyers of the above-mentioned countries, and in our minds we have no doubt that the results will be pleasant to the firms in question. The interest displayed by both American and Canadian buyers in British goods is a happy omen. We say this because the American citizen is the most patriotic of all men. He does not change his bootmaker for sentiment; he changes for something better; and, despite every attempt on the part of our ultrapatriotic contemporaries in the States to belittle the merits of English-made footwear, our goods are forging a way for themselves out there, and it is now more readily granted that British boots are best, that they are all we claim for them, and that, money for money, they are, owing to our national economic conditions and cheaper methods of production, of exceedingly better value. (From the Boot and Shoe Trades Journal, London, England.)

I call the English shoe manufacturers themselves to witness that they can produce shoes of the same quality cheaper in England to-day than we can and undersell us in our home market. And yet your proposition is to put boots and shoes, under these conditions, on the free list.

Why can they produce shoes cheaper in England than they can here? This brings me to the very foundation of the question before us. Have the English shoe manufacturers any advantage by way of machinery over us? Not at all, because they have our machinery, or at least machinery manufactured on the same lines, in accordance with their patent laws.

Have they any advantage of method over us? Not at all, because they have adopted our methods. What advantage, then, have they? Simply and solely a lower wage scale. The wages in England are somewhere about one-half—possibly a little more, but in most cases about one-half—what they are in this country.

Now, if it be true that England can produce cheaper than we can, then it is all the more true that other European countries can produce cheaper even than that, because there their wages are lower than England's wages. They are anywhere from two to four times lower than they are in this country. Here, Mr. Chairman, we have an industry competing not only for the foreign, but to-day even for our home market, with every European nation, an industry in which we have no advantage whatever over any one of our foreign competitors and but one marked disadvantage, to wit, the high wage cost here. Here we have the Republican policy of protection reduced to bedrock. We do not have to argue in this case about insuring profit to the manufacturer.

The question here at issue is insuring reasonable wages to American workmen; and that is all there is to it. In your zeal for cheapening cost you propose to do it by reducing wages. You can not get away from it by any high-flown rhetoric or appeal to the farmer or anybody else. Your proposition is to make shoes cheaper by paying less wages to the man that makes them. You propose to reduce his purchasing power to the level of that of the worst paid laborer in any foreign factory. [Applause on the Republican side.]

How about the shoe workers themselves? Do you think they are going to receive this proposition with equanimity? I call your attention to a letter printed in the RECORD of April 24, on page 566. I will only read one sentence of it. This letter is written by Mr. John F. Tobin, general president of the National Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, protesting against the passage of this measure:

> The greater efficiency of labor in the shoe industry in the United States as against any foreign country is not sufficient to offset the lower standards of living in all foreign countries as compared with the United States, notwithstanding cheaper labor prices which prevail in foreign countries. To put shoes and finished leather on the free list, or in any way to reduce the present tariff, would compel the American shoe manufacturers to meet foreign competition through the only avenue open to them, namely, to attack the wages of the shoe workers and thereby bring about a standard of wages lower than at present, and which would result in an industrial warfare, and no doubt eventually would lower the standard of wages and constantly lower the standard of living.

There you have the whole question in a nutshell. It has been one of your stock arguments that although wages were higher here than they were abroad, the increased efficiency of the American workmen more than make up to the manufacturer for the difference in wages. If that is true anywhere it is not true here. Admitting that the American shoe worker may be more intelligent than his competitor abroad, his equipment and his means of production are no better. They are on exactly the same basis. Therefore, what Mr. Tobin says is perfectly true, that if you put shoes on the free list, the only recourse the American manufacturer can take if he desires to retain the American market will be to reduce wages.

My friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] the other day made a witty and eloquent if not a thoroughly convincing speech upon this bill. He devoted much time to the discussion of the free list, and apparently enjoyed himself hugely in enumerating many of the articles that are contained therein. He reveled in the pronouncement of such items as broken bells, dried blood, fossils, and junk. He displayed some familiarity with the humors of this paragraph. He was funny, but he might have been funnier. He spoke of "catgut" and "whip gut," but he forgot their ancient companion, "worm gut." He mentioned "junk," but he forgot its romantic colleague, "punk." He spoke of "fossils," but he forgot "bones." He spoke of "dried blood," but he forgot "pula" and "divi-divi." He mentioned "leeches," but he forgot "unmanufactured lava." He displayed an almost inexcusable unfamiliarity with some of the more abstruse features of the free list—and I call this particularly to the attention of my friend from New York [Mr. HARRISON], because he is an authority upon the chemical schedule and all the products of chemicals—by neglecting to mention, for instance, "amidonaphtolsulfoacids," "binitrochlorbenzol," "diamidostilbendisulfoacid," "dimethylanilin," and other chemicals of the kind which will readily occur to any close student of the free list.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. He did not forget them. He only forgot how to pronounce them; that is all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. His failure to enumerate "beeswax," "burgundy pitch," "cudbear," "cuttlefish," "dragon's blood," "uncleaned horsehair," "jalap," "munjeet," "manna," "myrobolans," "nux vomica," "salep," sometimes called "salop," "skeletons," "turmeric," "witherite," and last, but not least, "zaffer," was to my mind reprehensible, if not inexcusable, in a member of the majority side of the Ways and Means Committee, who was essaying to enlighten this House and the country upon the tariff in general and the Republican free list in particular.

Now, these and many other things upon the free list are funny, and they are always brought in to illuminate the sometimes turgid speeches of Democratic orators upon the tariff question. Why are they funny? Simply and solely because they are not produced in this country. They are unfamiliar to the average man. No American capital is invested in producing them. No American labor is employed in producing them. If American capital and American labor made these things, there would be nothing funny about them. There is no more inherent humor in the word "zaffer" than there is in the word "wool." There is nothing funnier about the word "munjeet" than about the word "shoes." There is nothing more inherently comic about the word "spunk" than there is about the word "leather." And yet the pronouncement of "wool," "leather," and "shoes" does not make people laugh. It is for the reason that shoes and leather and wool are great American industries, and conducted in sharp competition with other nations of the world, that they are not upon any Republican free list, and I hope never will be on any free list.

Our policy is to put noncompetitive articles on the free list, articles which can not be produced here at all. It develops that it is the policy of our opponents to put competitive articles upon the free list, articles which can be and are produced at home. Under our present law about half of everything imported into this country comes in free of duty, and that is because we are unwilling to risk the increasing of the cost of any article to the consumer unless some American industry can be established and maintained and some American workmen given employment. The logical result of the theory of gentlemen upon the other side of a tariff for revenue is that a duty should be placed upon every article which can not be produced in this country, because what can not be produced here must be imported, and must produce revenue if you put a duty upon it. That policy, carried to its logical conclusion, would burden every American consumer without benefiting a single American producer.

We are opposed to a policy which would burden any American unless we are certain thereby to benefit some other American.

Your free list would not be so humorous as ours. You would cut out some of the humor by transferring it to the dutiable list and add to its seriousness by a transfer of serious subjects from the dutiable list. In your desire to make the free list less comic you will undoubtedly succeed if you are elevated to power in the Nation. When you have transferred to it articles well known in the everyday vocabulary of the American people; when you have placed the American producer on an exact level with the foreign producer; when you have placed American labor on an exact equality with the ill-paid labor of the rest of the world, there will be mighty little left to laugh at on the free list. And that is the result of the Democratic policy of a tariff for revenue! [Applause on the Republican side.]

Upon this side of the House we have recently differed slightly as to the true conception of the doctrine of protection. Some of us have evidenced by our votes on the Canadian reciprocity bill that we do not believe that a duty upon any competing article should be abolished or substantially lowered, even in favor of some one country, and whether we get corresponding advantages in the way of lower duties from that country or not. There are others of us, of whom I was one, who evidenced the belief that the ordinary rule does not apply in the case of a reciprocal arrangement with one other country only, one similarly situated and where industrial conditions are substantially the same, and where, by a mutual policy of give-and-take, whatever possible detriment we may suffer in one direction would seem to be compensated for by corresponding advantages in others. To my mind the difference between a duty fixed by Congress to carry out the terms of a reciprocal agreement negotiated with another country and a similar duty fixed in the general tariff is the difference between black and white. To me the distinction between a free list of competitive articles in a reciprocal agreement and in a general tariff is as clear as day is from night.

If the reciprocity bill which lately passed the House had contained free flour and free meat, I should have been glad to vote for it. I wish it had. I am perfectly willing to give Canada free flour and free meat if she will return the compliment, but I am not willing to put meat and flour on the free list as against every other country in the world whether they make any corresponding reduction to us or not; nor am I willing to give free shoes to Australia when Australia still retains a duty of 30 per cent against us. I am in favor of reciprocity in some cases in competitive articles, but I am opposed to free trade with the world in competitive articles.

But I do not intend to discuss in detail the question of reciprocity now. It is probable that the distinction which seems clear to me is a distinction which may seem to be without a difference to some of my colleagues. But upon the proposition that we are to place on the free list, as applied to every nation in the world, articles which cost more to produce in this country than abroad, and in the production of which American capital is invested and American labor employed, I believe there is no difference among us. We stand together upon the tariff plank in the last Republican platform. We insist that upon every article which we produce in competition with every nation in the world that the duty shall be maintained at least equal to the difference in the cost of production here and there. In this bill you have in one article, at least, an example of the working of this theory of protection in its simplest form. You are asking us to put upon the free list an article which it is proved costs more to produce here than it costs to produce in any country in Europe, by an amount at least equal to the difference in the labor cost there and here. In your alleged zeal in the interest of the consumer you ignore absolutely the interest of the American producer, both employer and employee; you consider only the interest of his foreign competitor. If there were nothing else in your bill that is objectionable, this alone ought to condemn it in the eyes of any man who believes in the Republican theory of protection. Upon such a proposition as this I believe that we upon this side can unite, and if we do, regardless of what may be the ultimate fate of this bill, we shall have done our duty to American industries and to American labor. We shall have been true to the principles and traditions of the Republican Party. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HELGESEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question before he sits down?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; I will first yield to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Ohio. It is the contention of my colleague that the part of the bill which relates to boots and shoes will be harmful to the shoe industry in Ohio, is it not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Is it not true that the largest manufacturer of boots and shoes in Ohio besieged this body two years ago with a request to take the duty off boots and shoes because it was unnecessary?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. COX of Ohio. You do not know whether the Wolf Bros., of Columbus, asked this House to take the duty off boots and shoes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not aware of that fact.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Every Member of this House received a letter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not.

Mr. COX of Ohio. It is the contention of the gentleman from Ohio that two years ago, if I am correct, boots and shoes might have been placed on the free list, but that since then the foreign manufacturers have adopted modern American machinery. Is that correct?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It would have been safer then than now.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Then, the duty two years ago should not have been put on boots and shoes, because our methods of making them were much more modern than foreign methods?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not discussing now whether a duty of 25 per cent on shoes in consideration of the fact that there was a duty of 15 per cent on hides was the absolutely correct duty or not. I am simply discussing the question as to whether the removal of a duty of 10 per cent would not absolutely destroy the boot and shoe industry. It may be possible that some gentleman in Ohio begged my friend and other Members of Congress to put hides upon the free list, saying, in an excess of enthusiasm, that if hides were placed on the free list the large manufacturer could stand free shoes. That was the statement made by one individual before the Ways and Means Committee. I do not know whether it was correct or not. I do know that the gentleman who made it, and who was representing at that time some of the New England shoe manufacturers, within a very few days came back and withdrew the statement absolutely.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The promise was made to the Ways and Means Committee that if hides were placed on the free list that boots and shoes would be placed on the free list?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No such promise was ever made.

Mr. COX of Ohio. If the gentleman will permit, he speaks of the humor of the situation. I think, in our State particularly, if he obtrudes the observation that two years ago shoes could have been placed on the free list, but now they can not, inasmuch as the foreign manufacturer has recently adopted American machinery, he will be contributing considerably to the humor of the situation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman now, I think, is contributing somewhat to the humor of the situation. I said that the humor of the situation consisted in the enumeration by Democratic orators of funny things they found on the Republican free list. Would the gentleman like to have wool on the free list? Would he see any humor in that?

Mr. COX of Ohio. No. [Applause on the Republican side.] I will say frankly that I am not for free wool at this time, favoring a cut of about 50 per cent in the whole woolen schedule. But I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Two years ago he dilated considerably upon the virtues of the maximum and minimum provision. It is significant that you do not refer to it to-day. Why? Has it not worked out well?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It has worked out beautifully.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Is it not true that the maximum is not in operation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It has worked out so well that there is not a country in the world that does not give us as good treatment as it gives to any other country, and there is no occasion for enforcing the maximum.

Mr. COX of Ohio. As a matter of truth, Germany, whose tariff relations with us are not as desirable as with other countries, has been given the minimum provisions, and the gentleman himself knows that the beginning of the Canadian reciprocity movement was inspired by the fact that the maximum and minimum provision had proven an absolute failure.

Mr. LONGWORTH. On the contrary, it has been an eminent success.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN].

Mr. HELGESEN. In speaking of the position taken by the Republicans in their last national platform you said that we stood for a duty that should equal the difference in the cost of production abroad and at home; is it not also true that they said plus a reasonable profit to the manufacturer?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is quite true, and I said that here was a case where we do not have to haggle about that. It has come down to the absolute labor cost. It is the difference in the wages paid to shoemakers abroad and the shoemakers at home.

Mr. HELGESEN. Was that element taken into consideration when the Canadian reciprocity question was discussed?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have just said that I believe in this distinction—not admitted by some other gentlemen, whose opinion may be worth a good deal more than mine—that there is a substantial difference between placing an article on the free list or reducing it substantially in an agreement with another country, where that country makes the corresponding reduction, and doing the same thing in the general tariff.

Mr. HELGESEN. In all the discussions that have been heard on the floor of this House during the consideration of the Canadian reciprocity question there has not been one man who suggested that under the new arrangement the farmers could make a reasonable profit, and therefore I would like to know whether the gentleman and others who voted for that agreement believed that in the question of guaranteeing profits the manufacturers were the only ones to be considered and not the farmers?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, I will say that that question did not occur to my mind in my vote on reciprocity.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman, in reference to the distinction he makes between reciprocity legislation and tariff agreements, whether he would be willing to have free trade with the entire world provided it should be secured through reciprocal agreements?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman tell us the particulars of the distinction in that case?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was speaking simply of this particular reciprocal agreement negotiated by the duly authorized representatives of this country with the authorized representatives of Canada. I do not regard it as a blow aimed at the policy of protection as enunciated in the last Republican platform, even if, perchance, there may be some duty which by that arrangement might be lowered below the competitive point. I hope that in this case there is not. I doubt whether there are many such instances, if any, in the Canadian reciprocity agreement.

Mr. SHERLEY. Following the gentleman's viewpoint on the question of protection and reciprocity, is it his idea that there is no advantage to this country in the lowering of duties on goods from Canada other than that which comes from having the Canadians lower their duties to us?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no. That is one element in it, but there are a great many other elements.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us follow that a moment. The gentleman admits that an advantage is obtained from the lowering of the duties, aside from what Canada gives us in the way of a wider market?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, certainly. For instance, Canada at present has a duty of 3 cents a pound on meat. We have a duty of 1½ cents a pound on meat. We are therefore at a marked disadvantage in trading with Canada, with her duty 100 per cent higher than ours. Canada, in consideration of our reducing our duty, reduces hers. I wish they had gone the whole length; I wish they had put meat on the free list.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, we only get an advantage by reason of having the Canadian market made easier of access to us by the lowering of the duties?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is an advantage.

Mr. SHERLEY. And we may or may not get an advantage, from the gentleman's viewpoint, from the lowering of our duties? I would like to ask the gentleman what his idea is as to the effect of our lowering our duties on Canadian products, without regard to the advantage we get in the Canadian market?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I doubt if there is any substantial advantage to us.

Mr. SHERLEY. In other words, then, the gentleman's justification for the reciprocity treaty is simply the opening up to us of the Canadian market?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a large element.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, that is not the only one?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The proposition in the Canadian reciprocity treaty, which I believe is going to insure to us ultimately the benefit of the pulp wood of Canada, by the removal of the restrictions which now prevail in some of her Provinces, is worth an immense amount.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, the gentleman thinks we can have an advantage by getting imported into this country cheaper something from a foreign country?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not say we would get anything from Canada cheaper.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, well, the gentleman says the great justification of the treaty is the pulp-wood provision.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I said that this is a case of a treaty between two countries which are substantially similarly situated, where the people are of the same kind and where the industrial conditions are substantially the same.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let me put a concrete case to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say this to the gentleman, that I would not be willing to give Canada free entry into our market on anything of which the cost of production was greater in this country than there under any circumstances, unless she would give us a corresponding advantage. That is as far as I am going. I submit that that does not apply in this case, because here the question is of a free list open to the entire world, with no possible reciprocity.

Mr. SHERLEY. If I understand the gentleman aright, then there is no circumstance in the home market that would warrant, in his judgment, the taking off of a duty on any article brought in from another country unless the other country gave us a similar concession?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not where there is a substantial difference in the cost of production in those articles here and abroad.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not even where the market was absolutely controlled by the home producer and there was a false price exacted?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If it developed that there was no difference in the cost of production here and abroad, I might be willing to put such article on the free list.

Mr. SHERLEY. But suppose there was a difference, and the home market was being absolutely monopolized at a false price?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am opposed to any duty which would offer an opportunity for a monopoly. I would be glad to vote to reduce that duty; and wherever it is shown to me, as long as I am in Congress, that the duty in this country is so much higher on any article than the actual difference between the cost of production of that article here and abroad that it offers opportunity to make monopoly prices I will vote to reduce it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why is not the burden on the gentleman to show that the duty is needed?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The burden on the gentleman, in voting for a bill like this, is to vote according to the platform on which he was elected.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a very easy way, and I congratulate the gentleman upon finding such an easy method.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a very pleasant method, and I enjoy it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will permit. Is the pulp-wood feature in connection with the reciprocity bill any different now, so far as Canada is concerned, than it was before?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, decidedly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We have made a reduction, but Canada did not have any tariff on it any more than she has now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that that involves quite a long discussion, showing what may be involved in the removal of the restrictions of the two Provinces which now impose an export duty.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was the same way with lumber. Canada has made no reduction in lumber. It is exactly as it was before, but the United States did give Canada the advantage of lowering her duties, to pay Canada for putting her agricultural products into the United States, to put down the price of the product of the American farmer.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. About one minute more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, I will yield to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY].

Mr. ANSBERRY. Did I understand my colleague to say that the reason he was in favor of protection on shoes was due to the fact that American machinery was now being used in Europe for the manufacture of shoes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. For that and other reasons. The other reasons are that our home market is in danger, our foreign market is being taken away from us, and that our exports are falling off every day.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not understand that protection will give us the foreign market.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is simply an illustration of the fact that the duty to-day is as low as that industry can possibly stand, and I am not willing to put it lower.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes; but I understand the gentleman to take the position he does for the reason that he wants protection against American machinery in Europe, and not against foreign pauper labor, which has been the excuse heretofore.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not talking about American machinery in Europe. I am simply stating the changed conditions of manufacture over there. Their method of production and their equipment are now as good as ours, and the great advantage they have over us is the reduced cost of labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed.

For the benefit of the membership I wish to inform them that this passage is from the Scripture, and they will find it in the fifth chapter of James and the sixteenth verse. [Laughter.]

I congratulate you—the Ways and Means Committee—for the forthcoming of this bill. It is familiarly known as the farmers' free-list bill. It is a confession that the measure recently passed by the House and denominated "A bill to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," was an inconsiderate blow at the food-producing toilers of our land, and as merciless as their poor and needy condition was undeserving. [Applause.] I hope and trust with you that by the passage of this bill you will heal the wounds you have received and avoid the others these producers had in store for you because of the passage of the other bill. This bill may well be denominated in legal parlance "A bill of confession and avoidance." The bill you passed, called "A bill to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," viewed from the standpoint of these toiling sons is a misnomer. They believe in contractual parlance it should bear another cognomen, namely, "A bill to promote reciprocal trade relations between the people of Canada, parties of the first part, and the metropolitan newspapers and the trust manufacturers of the United States, parties of the second part." [Applause.] Again, reduced to legal parlance, the bill might be more comprehensive should it read, "The metropolitan press, the trust manufacturers of the United States, and the Dominion of Canada on the relation of the President, petitioners, against the farmers and stock growers of the United States, respondents." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I hope that some good friend, either upon the Republican side or upon our side, and I am thankful their name is legion, will remind me before I am through to give my views about what is meant in the bill by the "and for other purposes." Before I go any further, however, allow me to advert to what may be regarded as a matter personal to myself. You know I opposed the reciprocity agreement, and it has been intimated by some one—and doubtless, so far as I know, has been well circulated in this body on our side of the Chamber—that under the caucus rule I could not absolve myself and therefore was not at liberty to vote against the agreement. Upon that I wish to say I was before the campaign, and have been ever since, connected with three great organizations, namely, the Grangers, the Farmers' Union, and the Stock Growers' Association; that at their picnics, county fairs, and all my meetings during the campaign, when honored by members of any of them as auditors, I pointed out the very condition of things which might occur and which has occurred by the presence of that bill in Congress. I took as my text the report of the Massachusetts commission on the high cost of living, which report is found in Senate Document No. 523, Sixty-first Congress, second session, presented by Senator LODGE, and I quote therefrom as follows:

On the other hand, however, it is clear that in a period of rising prices like the present the tariff cuts off possible relief to consumers by closing access to the cheapest sources of food supply in the world's markets. In the past, the duties on the necessities of common consumption, foodstuffs, have been largely inoperative, because the country produced not only its own food supply, but a large surplus for exportation.

The United States appears, however, to be approaching rapidly the turning point when it will become instead of a food-exporting a food-importing country.

Under these conditions, as the duties on foodstuffs become actually operative, their effect must be to increase the cost of living to wage earners and the expenses of production to manufacturers, thus hampering the development of industry and defeating the very purpose of the protective policy.

The commission is therefore of the opinion that when the tariff shall further be revised, the expediency of removing all duties on food products be considered carefully by the National Congress, and it hopes that the Tariff Commission will be equipped with such funds and powers as may be necessary for researches adequate as a basis for future changes, to be founded on a commercial rather than political consideration.

I pledged them that when the time came that the farmers' product was asked to be put upon the free list I would resist to my utmost such action, until all of the articles of consumption purchased by the farmers were simultaneously free listed. [Applause.]

The rule of the caucus I invoked for the purpose of absolving me from being bound by its action is as follows:

7. In deciding upon action in the House involving party policy or principle a two-thirds vote of those present and voting at a caucus meeting shall bind all members of the caucus: Provided, The said two-thirds vote is a majority of the full Democratic membership of the House: And provided further, That no Member shall be bound upon questions involving a construction of the Constitution of the United States or upon which he made contrary pledges to his constituents prior to his election or received contrary instructions by resolutions or platform from his nominating authority.

8. Whenever any member of the caucus shall determine, by reason of either of the exceptions provided for in the above paragraph, not to be bound by the action of the caucus on those questions, it shall be his duty, if present, so to advise the caucus before the adjournment of the meeting, or if not present at the meeting, to promptly notify the Democratic leader in writing, so that the party may be advised before the matter comes to issue upon the floor of the House.

I complied with the rule. I said to my constituents that the Republican Party had maintained its imperial power by imposing on the credulity of the farmers and stock raisers; that to obtain their votes, and for that reason alone, the party had for years kept on the statute books laws placing high duties on all the flocks of the pasture, the yield of the fields, the products of the garden, and the fruits of the orchards; that for all those years practically everything they consumed was also by these same laws protected by high duties; that the difference, however, was that the laws in the one case were inoperative and useless to them, in the other actively operative against them. The duties on the things he produced came not into competition with those of any other country, and therefore these duties were mere "make believes," or, in other words, "fakes," and deliberately calculated to deceive. [Applause.]

I recalled to them that the Republican Party had always attributed their improvement to these duties on their products; that they well remembered improvement in their condition was never omitted to be mentioned by the advocates of high protection; that if one thing above all others was indelibly traced upon their memories it was that one word "improvement."

I told them that, reading between the lines, I could see from the tenor of the report of this Massachusetts commission that if the Republican Party should be returned to power a knock would soon be heard at the doors of Congress, demanding that now, since those old fake laws were about to become operative and the farmers and stock growers might receive a benefit, the time had arrived for their repeal. And I begged of them, if they would avoid such a calamity, to dethrone the party of false pretenses and bring back to power the grand old Democratic Party—their tried and true friend. I told them that in the revision of the tariff its first main effort would be to lift the yoke from their bowed necks and unburden their stooped shoulders from excessive taxation. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in the main I am for the present bill. It has the merit of a good name. Without its passage, however, I am afraid the farmers would liken it and the reciprocity bill to an incident occurring in one of the villages in my district where lived an old German and his wife. She was taken ill and sent to a hospital. Hans, as he passed from day to day to and fro from his work, would ask the attendant, "How is mine vife to-day?" The attendant would answer, "Improving." This went on for many days, and the last time he asked "Vell, how is mine vife to-day?" the attendant answered: "We discharged the old doctor, and before the new one could quite understand the case she suddenly passed away." Hans, rushing off to the first saloon to assuage his grief, said to the barkeeper: "Mine Gott in himmel, gif me von glass of beer; mine poor vife, she pass avay." "Why," said the barkeeper, "Hans, this is very sudden." "Yah," answered Hans, "sudden vass vot de new doctor dit, but she had von bad disease unter the old doctor." "Why, Hans, what was that?" asked the barkeeper. Hans answered, "Vy, dot disease vot dey calls 'imbrovements.'" [Laughter and applause.]

As I am in duty bound as a good Democrat, I propose to go back to my old farmer friends and tell them that they were right in discharging the old doctor; that the improvement of their condition claimed by the Republican Party was in a truthful sense but an imperfect cauterization of a cancerous growth; that the disease was complex as well as chronic; and, therefore, no wonder the new doctor got confused in his diagnosis and gave the patient at first the wrong dose, but it had no sooner been given than he saw the black shadow approaching and immediately administered the antidote, and, now, thanks to a wise Providence, the patient is in reality improving. [Applause.]

I am happy to bear back these glad tidings, but if they say to me, "The reciprocity bill passed the House and the Senate and was signed by the President, but the farmers' free-list bill did not pass the Senate," I shall say to them that the Democrats on this floor who voted to send the two measures to the Senate separately—all of them, with the possible exception of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], whom I believe gave the excuse that he was not under oath, or something of the kind—swore they believed both measures would pass the Senate and be signed by the President. I do not want to be compelled to tell them—and I am assured by my friends on this side that I will not—after their long wait upon sore feet without a shade from the broiling sun, begrimed with soil of the farm, or upon frozen ground with gloveless fingers benumbed, and frost-bitten feet, shod in worn-out but costly brogans, shivering in their shoddy and threadbare common clothes, unsheltered by any friendly windbreak from the cold blasts—no; I do not want to tell them that the cars on this route do not carry a trailer; that the only car is loaded with the well-to-do city folks, and they must walk. No; I must tell them that the trailer is surely attached and it is especially reserved for them; that the conductor has been directed under penalty of instant discharge to collect only the usual fare, and not to side switch the trailer. [Applause.]

No, my fellow Democrats, do not have any misgivings but what I will make doubly plain to them that you are sincere and that if anything happens to these measures, either at the other end of the Capitol or at the other end of the Avenue, it will not be chargeable to any intentional blunder on your part.

It is proven beyond cavil that, considering the high prices of things the farmer consumes, the increase of wages, and so forth, he is not making a profit beyond his due. Even the Massachusetts commission, the Senate committee, and the testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture, as well as the arguments in the debates on the subject in these Halls, concede that fact and with one accord they all agree that the middleman gets the profit; that such profit measures the increase of cost to the consumer.

The following food bill of New York City for last year tells this story:

	Received by farmer.	Paid by consumer.
Onions	$821,000	$8,212,000
Potatoes	8,437,000	60,000,000
Coffee	2,402,000	12,009,000
Rice	1,354,000	6,191,000
Cabbages	1,825,000	9,125,000
Milk	22,912,000	48,880,000
Eggs	17,238,000	28,730,000
Meat and poultry	219,300,000	291,000,000
	274,289,000	464,147,000

From the foregoing table it will be observed that of the products enumerated the middle man received of the sum expended for onions, ten-elevenths; of potatoes, seven-eighths; of coffee, nearly five-sixths; of rice, more than four-fifths; of cabbages, five-sixths; of milk, more than two-thirds; of eggs, more than three-fifths; and of that expended for meat and poultry, more than one-half.

Therefore, why reduce the farmers' price? If he is not getting more than his just allowance, why not strike at the middle man and make him yield a part of his profits? [Applause.]

But some of these economists tell us that to tear down the wall between Canada and this country and allow their farm products to come into competition with the products of our farmers can not hurt the latter, because, forsooth, that country is bleak and cold and its soil of short-lived productiveness. Why then tear down the wall at all? If the farmer is not to be injured and the consumer is not to be benefited, does it not appear an unnecessary performance? Economists of another school tell us that our farmers are a shiftless lot—they do not work hard enough, their methods of farming are antiquated, they ought to produce more, and if they would only rise a little earlier in the morning and work a little later at night, perspire a little more, and so forth, they could produce enough to fully satisfy the middle man and cheaper food would pass on to the consumer. Others tell us the farmer is rolling in wealth and is spending his time in idle luxury. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] emphasizes this idea by his good-natured sarcasm when he referred to the old farmer cheerily sitting before his blazing fire, produced by corn fuel, smoking his cob pipe, and his sons rejoicing they did not have to chop wood. [Laughter.]

When the gentleman from Massachusetts was thus demonstrating his utter ignorance of the present-day condition of the farmer, I not only recalled that it was also but a piece of the same cloth of indifference shown by the Massachusetts commission, to which I have referred, but I was also reminded of a boy I once knew whose father lived on the opposite side of the creek from where I did. His father was taken very ill, and being solicitous concerning his condition, I often hallooed across asking the boy how his father was. After his illness had lasted quite a while, on making another inquiry of the boy one morning, he answered, "Oh, dad's dead, but I've got his jackknife!" [Laughter and applause.]

I will not diverge further to express my disapproval of the sentiment of derision at the expense of the farmer, revealed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], than to observe that he and his colleague Mr. PETERS appear in entire accord in their sympathy with the manufacturers of their State, and are equally oblivious to the heavy burden the farmers have carried and are still carrying, and view with equanimity the revenues derived by their constituents at the expense of the farmers through the high protective duties under the present tariff system. [Applause.] It will serve no purpose to refer further to the many other scholars of the other economic schools whose equally divergent views are spread on the RECORD. Suffice it to say that, in my judgment, the reader of these pages in years to come will cease to regard the degree of confusion that fell upon the tongues of the plainsmen of Shi-nar as at all marvelous. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, denuded of veneer, subterfuge, sophistry, and demagogy, what are the simple facts, and how are the interests of that third of our population constituting the staff of the Nation to be affected by the reciprocity measure?

The Dominion of Canada occupies a space to our north extending from one ocean to the other, a distance of 3,200 miles. The five great western Provinces have a domain equal to that of the combined States of Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the two Dakotas, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas, and Colorado. The prairie Provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, equal the domain of England, France, Germany, and Italy combined, and therein are over 200,000,000 acres of land upon which a furrow has not yet been made, capable of growing wheat of a production of 3,000,000,000 bushels annually—five times as much as we produced last year. Besides that, these Provinces have an acreage of over 250,000,000 of the best grazing land now known. It is only within the last 10 years that any considerable attention has been given to the development of the section, yet the production of wheat from the whole area last year was approximately one-third of our own. A false impression has gone abroad to the effect that in the three great Canadian Provinces the cold is so intense that production of crops and stock raising is impossible. Yet the facts are that stock are turned out on the range in early March and are not rounded up until October, and fall plowing is carried on up to the last of November.

I know it must appear strange to this membership that I am so dense upon such questions as the cost of the manufacture of eyelets and shoestrings, that enormous product of the State of Massachusetts [laughter], but they should not start in amazement when I tell them the rigors of the late spring and fall months, even in Colorado—a place of perennial sunshine and a mile or more nearer Heaven—forbids the growing of crops and the raising of stock as economically as appears to be done in Canada.

Those who prophesy that these Western Provinces will never be settled up and their products come in competition with the American producer should take warning if they would only remember that such statesmen as Josiah Quincy, of Massachusetts, opposed the Louisiana purchase on the ground that it was only inhabited by blanket Indians and half-breeds and never would be settled by white men, and threatened secession on the part of Massachusetts if the purchase was consummated. He, by the way, was the original secessionist of this country, and when called to order by the presiding officer was compelled to retract the threat. The same may be said to have been the opinion of another great statesman from that Commonwealth, Daniel Webster, who entertained the same views. Even that great statesman of a much later period, Horace Greeley, enjoyed the same opinion respecting that portion of the purchase lying west of the Mississippi River. After his visit to Colorado in the sixties, he advised the readers of his paper not to go west in search of the precious minerals, and yet the sod had hardly grown firm upon his grave—at least, his great personality and ability as a journalist and statesman was still fresh and green in memory—when the State of Colorado alone up to 1908 contributed to the wealth of the world in precious minerals the grand total of $1,052,303,180.36; and from that time forward has maintained its average contribution. [Applause.]

You all remember that side-splitting speech of Proctor Knott, of Kentucky, delivered in this House 40 years ago last February, known as the Duluth speech. When a measure was before Congress for the granting of certain lands to build a railroad whose terminus would be Duluth, such a place could not be found on the map. He opposed the bill, not so much because it was paternalistic, but because no one, as he said, would ever ride on a railroad to such a far-off, unknown, and uninhabitable country, and that we were not in special need in this country of pine bushes, the only product, he asserted, that could be found there for a back haul. [Laughter.]

And yet we behold, contrary to these early as well as these modern prophets, that within the borders of the Louisiana

Purchase is contained practically one-third of the population of the United States; that the little village of Duluth, which was not on the map 40 years ago, has added to its population 2,000 every year since Proctor Knott made that speech, and the population of that shrubbery State in which it is located has increased until it is now close to seventh in rank among the States of the Union and produces one-eighth of the wheat crop. Its metropolis, Minneapolis, has increased from 13,066 in 1870 to 301,408 in 1910, and its capital, St. Paul, has grown from a population of 20,030 in 1870 to 214,744, as shown by the recent census report.

Further than that, they should remember that in 1790 our population was under 4,000,000 and the population of Canada was 180,000. Basing our population at 90,000,000 to-day and that of Canada at 8,000,000, the advance of Canada's population is nearly double ours, and based on the increase of latter years the population of Canada in the next generation will equal the number we have to-day.

These lands in Canada, according to statistics, yield more than 5 bushels per acre more than the average of ours; their farm lands are selling from one-third to one-half less than ours; normal wages are from 25 to 30 per cent less than ours; that country enjoys the benefit of the preferential duty with the mother country to our disadvantage of from 25 to 35 per cent.

The following is a table which speaks for itself:

Comparison of Canadian and United States tariff.

	Canadian tariff.	United States tariff.
Earthenware	15 per cent	60 per cent.
Tin plate	Free	45 per cent.
Tinware	15 per cent	Do.
Wire:
Some kinds	Free
None over	10 per cent	75 cents per 100 pounds.
Hats	20 per cent	55 per cent.
Sugar	35 per cent	80 per cent.
Carpets	17½ per cent	60 per cent.
Oilcloth	25 per cent	45 per cent.
Furniture	20 per cent	35 per cent.
Cotton cloth	25 per cent	50 to 60 per cent.
Soap	65 cents per 100 pounds	50 per cent.
Gloves and mitts	22½ per cent	60 per cent.
Hose	25 per cent	70 cents per dozen pairs and 15 per cent, to $5 per dozen pairs and 55 per cent.
Dress goods	15 per cent	60 per cent.
Automobile farm trucks	22 per cent	45 per cent.
Pianos	20 per cent	Do.
Celluloid goods:
Some kinds	Free
None over	5 per cent	60 per cent.
Cement	do	10 per cent.
Underclothing	22½ per cent	45 per cent.
Salt	Free	11 cents per 100 pounds.
Axes	15 per cent	45 per cent.
Shovels	20 per cent	Do.
Scythes	15 per cent	Do.
Stoves	do	Do.
Chains (iron)	5 per cent	45 per cent and up.
Knives and forks	20 per cent	50 to 65 per cent.
Agate ware	22½ per cent	40 per cent.
Sewing machines	20 per cent	30 per cent.
Oranges	Free	1 cent per pound and 30 per cent on the package.
Lemons	do	1½ cents per pound and and 30 per cent on the package.
Window glass	7½ per cent	60 to 75 per cent.
Rice	50 per cent per 100 pounds.	$2 per 100 pounds.
Figs	40 cents per 100 pounds	$1 per 100 pounds and 35 per cent.
Jute bags	15 per cent	45 per cent.
Cotton thread	17½ per cent	Do.
Glassware	15 per cent	60 to 100 per cent.
Lamp chimneys	20 per cent	60 per cent.
Brass goods	do	45 per cent.
Lamps	do	45 to 60 per cent.
Baskets	Free	40 to 60 per cent.
Rubber coats	15 per cent	35 per cent.
Rubber boots and shoes	do	Do.
Books	do	25 per cent.
Lead	Free	2½ cents per pound.
Clocks and watches	20 per cent	40 to 60 per cent.
Bicycles	do	45 per cent.

Much is said about the place where the price of wheat is fixed. Let us assume alone, for the sake of argument, that the President is right, and the time is fast approaching when we will become importers of foodstuffs instead of exporters, then it follows we borrow the day by the passage of the reciprocity agreement to not only shut out our wheat, as can be demonstrated, from the Liverpool market, but bring the products from Canada into our home-market place to compete with ours.

If the figures given are correct, and they are if the Government reports are to be relied upon, then, by the terms of the agreement, the prediction of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] will come true that we of the West and Middle West must soon turn our wheat fields into "truck-garden patches." [Laughter.]

The following is a table showing the wheat statistics of Canada and the United States for the years 1909 and 1910 on wheat production, home consumption, and exports, together with average yield per acre for 1909:

Wheat statistics.		Bushels.
Wheat produced in United States, 1910		691,767,000
Wheat exported	bushels 24,257,392
Flour exported (8,370,251 barrels)	do 35,666,129
		59,923,521
Wheat consumed in United States		631,843,479
Wheat produced in Canada, 1909		166,744,000
Wheat exported	bushels 49,000,000
Flour exported (1,000,000 barrels)	do 4,500,000
		53,500,000
Wheat consumed in Canada		113,244,000
Wheat produced in Canada, 1909		166,744,000
Wheat produced in Manitoba	bushels 52,706,000
Wheat produced in Saskatchewan	do 85,197,000
Wheat produced in Alberta	do 9,579,000
		147,482,000
Wheat produced in remainder of Canada		19,262,000

The three Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta produced this yield of wheat with less than 12,000,000 acres under cultivation. They have an available area suited to the cultivation of wheat of 220,000,000 acres.

	Bushels.
Average yield of wheat per acre, Canada, 1909	21⅛
Average yield of wheat per acre, United States, 1909	15⅛

A fair idea may be gained as to what the future will bring forth under free-cereal exchange between the two countries by observing what was the relative position of the two countries last year respecting the principal cereals, wheat and oats. It is as follows:

	Bushels.
Wheat imported into Canada	54,964
Wheat imported into the United States	152,383
Oats imported into Canada	23,361
Oats imported into the United States	946,479

The merest tyro in economics will correctly solve the problem that if the world's consumption amounts to only so many bushels, that the production of a bushel more will lower the price. If Canada can take away from us even a part of the foreign market, it lowers our price, and when she goes beyond that and invades our home market, she will indeed drive our farmers out of the business of growing wheat at a profit. [Applause.]

But, it is said in answer, only the border States and near-by markets will be immediately involved. We reply that our interests are interwoven; that the same degree of patriotism abides in our hearts as it did in the hearts of the founders of this Government when they were confronted with the situation that moved them to resolve to hang together to avoid being hanged separately. [Applause.]

All I have said applies to the oat, barley, potato, and milk production of that country. But, it is said, admitting these things you say are true, the time of their fruition is a long way off. Even if this were true, in behalf of the toiling third of the Nation I say that Congress is charged with the duty not only of passing laws for the welfare of its present citizens, but for the future ones as well, and at all times the overflow of the cornucopia should be allowed to remain at home.

But, to continue. Already the flower of our country has been robbed of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 emigrants, and "the end is not yet." I find in my mail this morning the latest advice on this subject:

CANADIAN IMMIGRATION RETURNS.

The minister of the interior at Ottawa states that the immigrants into Canada from April, 1910, to February last numbered 275,000. The number of British immigrants was 104,000, the arrivals from the Continent numbered 60,000, and those from the United States 107,000. The increase in British immigration over the corresponding period of the previous year was 109 per cent. Continental immigrants increased by 53 per cent, and United States 24 per cent. The increase in the total immigration in the same period was 54 per cent. Immigration from the United States during March showed a large increase over the same month last year.

We offer the bounties I have only barely suggested for these people to run away. We lose not only the personnel of their citizenship, but the help they owe us to pay off our immense war and other debts. We, moreover, enable them to build up an alien empire, whose citizens will soon come into sharp competition with their kindred at home. Their expatriation serves as well also to exempt them from the duty of shouldering a musket for our national defense should the occasion ever arise. But it is objected that these Canadian lands will be, nevertheless, some day occupied. This may be conceded, but why borrow the day by the giving of these immense advantages to this foreign country at such a frightful expense to our own prosperity? Many forget that our own country is not yet fully occupied; that knowledge of the soils and their adaptability is yet in its infancy; that improved farming methods have not yet been fully adopted so as to insure a maximum production which will for years to come be sufficient for our home consumption, and, but for this untoward event, enable us to compete in the open markets of the world with our surplus.

Let me call your attention for a moment to the fact that we have in this country, untouched by the plow, 711,986,409 acres of unappropriated and unsurveyed lands, and in addition thereto, in round numbers, about 200,000,000 acres of agricultural, timber, grazing, and mineral lands in the forest reserves.

I want to point out that, together with bounties offered for the occupation of the Canadian lands, there is a corresponding discouragement to the occupation and development of our own. Our Government has, contrary to all precedent, gone into the business of capitalizing for revenue purposes every natural product of the undisposed part of the public domain. This is illustrated by the separation of estates of coal land—leasing the coal right and enforcing new and such burdensome regulations for obtaining titles to the surface as well as title to the balance of the agricultural domain, and a legion of other innovations and obstacles, such as leasing the grazing land, selling the timber right—all operating to drive the homeseeker away. In my State alone last year it is estimated that 75,000 homeseekers were so discouraged at the prospect of a successful contest with the Government to obtain a home that they turned back and went to Canada. The same restrictions are thrown around obtaining title to mineral land, and the development of that portion of the public domain has ceased.

Why drive our citizens to a foreign country instead of giving them a home in their own? Why exempt this vast domain from the taxing power? Why keep in hiding its great mineral resources? [Applause.] But this is another story, to which I expect shortly, on another occasion, to draw the attention of the House.

Some economists of the altruistic type point to the fact that Canada is a great and growing country—is largely now and will continue to be a field for the expansion of our trade. They do not see in this argument a contradiction of their brother helpers in the passage of this agreement, whose main claim is that the farmers can not be hurt because of the inability of Canada to produce anything that would come into competition with their products; and along this line an appeal has been made to the farmers of the Middle West to cease their complaining for the present, because the agreement will afford immediate market for their live stock.

The figures of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] have been juggled with for that purpose, but, in this connection, it should be borne in mind the exportation of live stock in that direction could of necessity be only of short duration, such as is temporarily incident to the settlement of all new countries. And the figures are misleading, because the tide has already set in the other way, for last year the value of horses shipped from Canada into the United States was $484,560, or $86,657 more than the value of those we sent into Canada, the tariff of both countries being the same. How about cattle? The exports are $25,150; the imports, $109,772, or $84,622 more than the value of those we sent to Canada, the tariff of both countries being the same.

Therefore the outlook for the expansion of trade so far as stock raisers are concerned is "nipped in the bud" at the threshold. But when we come to the interests of the manufacturer there seems to be a firm foundation for the argument that the agreement will offer the means of great expansion for their trade. The great Steel Trust is given absolute free trade with Canada; the great Agricultural Implement Trust and the Automobile Trust have favorable reciprocal tariff duties on their goods. The exports into Canada last year by the Steel Trust amounted to $2,476,930 in value. The imports of these products from Canada for the same year in value was only $15,088. Agricultural implements exported last year to Canada amounted to $5,151,870, and there was only imported into this country from Canada $84,618 in value. Of automobiles there was exported $1,764,089 worth and none imported.

Based upon last year's exportation of agricultural implements, with the reduction in duty fixed by this agreement, the great Agricultural Implement Trust is presented with the nice little sum of over $250,000, and the automobile manufacturers, with the reduced duty fixed by the agreement, is presented with the nice little sum of over $80,000, and the list, when followed through, results in finding like benefits to other manufacturers.

We remit to Canada, based on last year's importations, the round sum of approximately $5,000,000, which sum must be recouped in some way to be devised by the Ways and Means Committee, in order to relieve the taxpayers of this country for the loss of that revenue. On the other hand, Canada remits in round numbers only $2,500,000. This is in the ratio of one to two, and yet it is called "reciprocity." [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I must hasten along, and I shall not, I observe, have the time I would like to go into detail explaining how our stock growers are affected by the trade agreement. I know something of their condition—what they have had to contend with in the past and the problems confronting them now. They do not belong to a trust; they are the victims of a trust. They have felt the fangs of that trust as well as the ultimate consumer of their product. You did the stock grower a grievous wrong when you robbed him of from $1.50 to $2.50 (aggregating millions of dollars) upon every cow or steer that met its death either in the bog or on the block by taking the duty off of hides. He told you then, through me on this floor, that the blow, although aimed at the trust, would be received by him. He tells you now, through me, that your letting into this country from Canada live stock free of duty, although aimed at the trusts, will be nevertheless received by him. [Applause.]

In proof of this let me digress to ask you if any of you have received a single letter from, or inspired by, the Beef Trust protesting against the measure, and how many basketfuls the janitors of your offices have emptied of letters in protest from the stock growers? And whilst on this subject of letters and petitions received by you, let me ask you how many letters in protest did you receive from the Harvester Trust, the Steel Trust, the Automobile Trust, the metropolitan press, the oatmeal mills, the middle men, and, lastly, the maltsters. Yes; did you hear the brewers' voice in protest? No; and can it be possible that the Democratic Party, under the leadership of a Republican President, likewise is about to forsake another of its tried and true friends for the malted kind? Alas, what misfortunes have fallen athwart our pathway! [Laughter and applause.]

You seek to parry the blow by allowing the free importation of live stock only from Canada, but have you thought out the possibility of the building of packing houses on the opposite side of the Rio Grande by the great Meat Trust and availing itself of the free-meat clause of the pending bill, bringing into competition indirectly the cattle of Mexico, and the very same may be said of Argentina and Australasia.

The Massachusetts commission said something on this subject also. After quieting the fears of those engaged in manufacturing in its State, and demonstrating that Canada could not compete with them, it said:

> These will at least not be discouraged if we can make it possible for our people to buy their food in the cheapest market. If Canada chances to profit by supplying our needs to some small extent, so much the better both for Canada and for ourselves. But there is no reason why we should restrict our new purchases to Canada. If Mexico, or Argentina, or Australasia can help us out, let us turn to them as well.

There is not a syllable of sentiment, not a thought of kind remembrance for that third of our population which year in and year out have lo these many years meekly suffered under the fleecing knife to fill the exchequer of protected interests, not a word of sympathy accompanying this adieu. The "jackknife" is theirs. Out, out, I say, upon such marble, cursed be the quality of such greed, ingratitude, and inordinate avarice! [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a revision of the tariff—a downward revision, to a revenue basis. But the burdens of taxation must be equally distributed, it must not be spotted; and I am not entirely enamored with the beginning under the direction of the Ways and Means Committee, for I am curious to know what is going to become of the hindmost man. The thought of the farmer is: "What will the harvest be?"

We have thus far seen that the Canadians have been presented with $5,000,000 of our revenue. The cotton States will be given under the pending bill more than half of the $10,000,000 in revenue we lose by this bill. Scarcely any of the benefits of the reduced duties provided in this bill will reach the other farming population.

I know you say they will get the benefits of the reduction in the products of leather, but we say that benefit was sought to be discounted when you took the duty off of hides, and neither you nor we received any. And, what is more, the revenue we are deprived of by the Canadian agreement and the present bill must be raised by increasing the taxes upon other imports, and the farmer is anxiously waiting and watching to see if in the end he is not again to be made the victim. I warn you here and now, I will stand as a rock against any further invasion of their rights. [Applause.]

We know that the export trade of meat, and especially the hoof exportation, is practically monopolized by frozen meats from Australasia and Argentina, and you seem to forget that the great beef trusts own and operate plants there, so why not in Mexico? Meat can be frozen in the Tropics as well as in the frozen north and as cheaply. What, then, will become of our cattle growers when you let in from Canada the live animals and from the other countries the dead ones? You will simply catch the stock raiser a-coming and a-going. [Laughter.]

The distinguished gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the agreement, and especially the gentlemen from Massachusetts, were kind enough to tell us what would become of the farmer, what he could turn his hand to, namely, "truck farming," but they have not essayed to advise the millions of stock raisers what we may have the liberty to do for a livelihood. I object to this reckless oversight on the part of our Massachusetts friends. [Laughter.]

But, it is said, you have no occasion to be alarmed about the cattle business of Canada. The country is too cold, the seasons are too short, corn will not grow, and so forth; hence, cattle raising can not be successfully carried on. I admit that the emblem of the Republican Party, with its loss at the last election of its few remaining hairs, would not enjoy the climate and might stray from the reservation, but the emblem of Democracy, I take it, would don a new coat in as short a time as the party itself has since the election shown such an inclination to do. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have imported cattle from Canada for personal use for breeding purposes. I know their value, and the thick coat of hair, a resistant to the severe cold of that region, nature has abundantly provided. I also know how quickly nature in this respect provides for animals exported to that country, and that calves can be shipped from Mexico by rail to Canada, and when they are 3 years old they will have taken on as much as 300 pounds more than they would have in their old environment—more than enough to pay for the freight and their keeping. These cattle will come into free competition with the cattle grown in this country, either in the home or European market.

In concluding this subject, I want to remind you that you have been told the corn-belt section of our country will be benefited by the free importation of cattle. I do not believe such will be the case. It is cheaper to fatten cattle upon grass than upon grain, and Canada can fatten her cattle upon grass even for export. Last year she exported $11,000,000 worth of grass-fattened cattle. She can ship from export points to Liverpool cheaper than corn-fed cattle can be shipped from Illinois to New York, and if she can do this, can she not take our market here from our own cattle growers?

I am here reminded that I promised you to give my views on what was meant by the words "and for other purposes." I will now make a shadowy stagger in that direction. Many men upon both sides have essayed to give a reason why the reciprocity agreement was brought before this House at this time and from what source it really emanated, and why it should be adopted. It will be remembered that the treaty of 1854 was before the American people three years before the Senate passed upon it. I want to call further attention to the fact that this is not called a treaty. Mr. Fielding and Mr. Patterson, the envoys on the part of the Dominion of Canada, took care to warn the President and Secretary Knox not to call it a treaty; not to undertake to pass a treaty. They said, "The desired tariff change shall not take the formal shape of a treaty." And I may say, by way of parenthesis, if this has the force and effect of a treaty, though not in form such, then all you have done amounts to nothing, because section 2 of Article II of the Constitution provides that treaties can only be made by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. They were correctly advised at this end of the line that a two-thirds vote of the Senate could not be obtained for a treaty.

But it came here within 14 days after the envoys came from Ottawa. They had only 14 days of discussion upon it. The President, Mr. Patterson, Mr. Fielding, and the Secretary of State took care to take no one here into their confidences, and that such a program was on foot was unknown outside of the President and the Secretary of State until the President's message came to this House within five days after they had concluded the conference. I put it up to anyone of you Members if you were able to digest this instrument as you would like to in that time. It came like a meteor from ethereal space, the only difference in the analogy being that we know the substance of this but we do not know the substance of the meteor nor from whence it was gathered.

Now, some say it was incubated by the Massachusetts commission, and I told my people back in my country that the findings of that commission would become the forerunner of such a measure. But others have said it was inspired by the great trust manufacturing interests. Others have said that it was the metropolitan press; and there has been the confusion of tongues on this subject to which I have already referred.

I have a notion of firing the other barrel of my shotgun—I am sometimes known as "Shotgun RUCKER." [Laughter and applause.] I fired one of the barrels out in Colorado before the election. I am going to undertake to pull the trigger of the other. After a very formal shaking of hands and a perfunctory passing of the compliments of the day Uncle Jonathan said, "Now, wily, winsome, but willful, Willie, don't say anything more about that peace treaty. I am not going to talk about that now. You went off over there into that new country"—— [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like 10 minutes more.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. "But you went off over there into that country and declared you would never engage in entangling alliances with any other nation. You took over that Monroe doctrine, contrary to my advice. You went into the colonial business, thinking you were as smart as your old daddy, and you got into all sorts of trouble. And now your Mexico difficulty. But, my son, I am not bereft of all filial affection, so I will tell you what I will do. I will just extend one of those due bills of Japan, and get her promise that she will not take the Philippines away from you—for a while yet, at least, until you get the Mexico troubles off your hands. [Laughter.] Now, I won't do anything more at present, and you needn't say another word, but I will tell you what you must do: Now, don't say anything more about a treaty, because that word 'treaty' is becoming a very, very delicate and serious subject all over the world, and especially with me with all those past-due bills of Japan on hand; but you have some cousins over there—those Canadian people—and we want to get some stuff over here to live on cheaper than you Americans are letting us have it for, and we want you to let those trusts of yours have a free hand among them; let your farmers go over there and settle up the country, and then I will talk to you later about the peace treaty. But, be quiet about it, Willie, because you know what a thinking and inflammable people you Americans are, and they may get it into their heads that they may have to sell us cheaper stuff, too; therefore, don't breathe a word of this before you have everything cocked and primed, for if you do, Willie, you can't carry it through. Don't detain me any longer, sonny; the roof of the east wing of the old house has sprung a leak and I must go up and put a plug in it. So, good day." [Laughter and applause.]

And, Mr. Chairman, I am in hopes, for the sake of the country, and especially for the Democratic Party, that the agreement will fail at the other end of this Capitol. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I regret my colleagues from my State were not at liberty to avail themselves of the caucus rule that was open to me, but for them I will say they will always be found on the side of the right when afforded the opportunity. Each of them is not only a true representative of our State and ever on the alert to serve its interests, but the peer of any in this body in knowing the demands of the country and in having the courage to evidence their convictions on this floor. [Applause.]

I have not time to read the hundreds of demands made by the organizations in which I have the honor of membership to oppose the Canadian agreement, nor the hundreds of compliments I have received for my devotion to their interests; but beyond that, in conclusion, I will say my conscience has been the mentor controlling me in this as it ever has and will continue to be in all my votes. I will continue to put in practice the teachings of our distinguished Speaker: "He serves his party best who serves his country best." [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the interest manifest in this debate is truly marvelous. With all of the seats filled and every gentleman listening attentively, I fully believe that when the time comes to vote upon the bill every Member of the House will be able to vote intelligently, assuming, of course, that the discussion upon the bill is along lines that are calculated to enlighten the membership of the House on the merits of the question. It is encouraging to realize that an opportunity is given to me to present the case from my standpoint under such favorable auspices. I am inspired with the enthusiasm and attention of the audience [applause], and I have no doubt that because of the interest manifested I will be able to tell those gentlemen who are present something which they will be glad to take home with them and think about. [Applause.]

I voted for the reciprocity bill when it was presented by the Republican House in the last Congress, and I am glad of it. I have no apology for having done so. I voted for the bill, which is practically equivalent to that, presented by the House now controlled by the Democrats. I doubt very much whether I would have voted for the reciprocity bill in either House had I believed that the farming communities of Canada were able to compete with the farmers of America.

I realize that the farm lands of Canada are not capable of raising the diversified crops that the farm lands of the United States are capable of raising, and I never had any serious idea that Canada had the ability to come into very sharp competition with the farmer of the United States. We have farm lands in this country where we can raise tropical and temperate zone cereals in the same fields, and no such conditions exist anywhere else on earth. The farm lands of Canada are devoted largely to the production of wheat, and the farmer engaged in this enterprise can only employ his time and his capital a very short period of every year, whereas a farmer of the United States, having the prolific soil and the magnificent climate to enable him to raise diversified crops, is able to employ his time and his capital nearly every day of the year. So, with these advantageous conditions in favor of the American farmer, I have no fear of any serious detriment coming to him as the result of legislation allowing the Canadian farm products to enter the United States free. The people of the United States and the people of Canada are substantially the same. Their hopes and their fears and their disappointments and their ambitions are alike.

They live along the same lines, they speak the same tongue, they think the same thoughts, and the only difference between them and ourselves is that we live in a land where every citizen is a sovereign, where every man is free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, where labor is exalted to comfortable homes, where the printing press and the church follow close upon the march of empire, where caste is ignored, and where the humblest child of poverty may aspire unrebuked to the highest place in the gift of the Nation; whereas they live in a land where no such opportunities prevail, and my hope is that if we can have close commercial relations with this homogeneous people that some day this close commercial relationship may blend the two people into one harmonious whole, and that the territory lying north of the northern boundary line of the United States may become a part of the United States, as it should be. And that is no idle dream with me. I have always believed we should be one people, under one flag, under one form of government; and it will be better for us all when such a thing happens, if it ever does. But, however that may be, I believe we should have not only reciprocity with Canada because of the conditions which I have attempted to describe, but I really believe that if the question related alone to Canada and the United States that we should have absolute free trade between the two nations. But the question of free trade with the world is quite another proposition.

I am not prepared to believe that we should open the American market to the products of the world. We have had some experience with Democratic legislation along tariff lines even during my short existence, and I can recollect very well when in the great cities of the country we were obliged to establish soup houses on the street corners in order to be able in a measure to appease the hunger of those who were willing to work but were unable to find it. The people of the country are beginning to think about what you Democrats are attempting to do, and I warn you that they are going to think seriously upon this subject; and when they realize, as they must soon, that you are going to do the things which have always been done under Democratic rule, namely, to close the American workshops while you open the workshops of Europe, they are going to come back to the grand old Republican Party and vote for that kind of prosperity which every Democrat as well as every Republican loves to enjoy. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Republicans claim no patent right to the enjoyment of prosperity. All they claim a patent right to is the creation of prosperity; and we have that right, but we are always glad to invite our Democratic brethren to come in with us and enjoy a good square meal at a well-spread table. What we object to in the Democratic program is the fact that while they create a condition of adversity, they compel us to participate in that adversity.

I hope the time is not far distant when the people will realize the importance and the necessity of coming back into the fold of that grand old party which has always given the country prosperity, whereas Democratic policy and Democratic legislation has always created a condition of adversity throughout every section of the land. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MADDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman, speaking for the Republican Party, recall a single time in the history of the country where we have had prosperity under Republican rule that Democrats, Prohibitionists, and Socialists alike have not benefited equally with Republicans under that rule?

Mr. MADDEN. The glory of the Republican Party policy is that it has always been able to create prosperity and every class, Democrats, Republicans, and Socialists, have participated in that prosperity.

The present bill under consideration, being H. R. 4413, to place on the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles, introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the leader of the majority side of this House, is an entirely different proposition. It is an out-and-out free-trade measure and, if enacted into law, will open our doors to free-trade Europe and glut our markets with the products of poorly paid European labor, and bring about a business stagnation such as we have always experienced whenever the Democrats undertake to revise or amend a Republican tariff bill.

I thought, Mr. Chairman, when I learned that the gentleman from Alabama intended to introduce this measure that the people would regard it as a joke; that it would not be considered seriously; that it could not possibly pass the Senate of the United States as now organized, and that it would serve simply as an excuse for the elimination, by certain Members, of a surplusage of bile and hot air, thereby bringing them back to their normal condition; and that that would be the end of it. Not so, however. According to the newspapers—and concerning such matters the newspapers are usually right—the business people as well as the laboring people are regarding this proposed legislation as a very serious matter. The cry of alarm comes not only from one locality, but from every section of our country. From the gentleman's [Mr. UNDERWOOD] own district there comes the word that if this bill is enacted into law the doors of the great steel works there will be closed and that thousands of men will be thrown out of employment. If this be true, and I doubt it not, the suffering of the families of these employees will become distressing beyond measure, and the entire business community will suffer irreparable injury.

And so, Mr. Chairman, it is no joke after all. The mere mention of Democratic tariff tinkering causes widespread alarm, and is a just warning for all classes of intelligent business men to run to cover, and it is going to be very difficult, in my opinion, for the press, having, as it does, great faith in the Senate of the United States, composed as it is by a Republican majority, to educate the people up to the belief that this bill is, after all, nothing but a joke, that the Senate will never concur in its provisions, and even though it should, the President, unless he be intoxicated with the idea of universal reciprocity, will never sign it. All power to the press, if it can calm the people and restore temporary confidence until they can have a chance to undo the evil they were guilty of in electing a Democratic majority of this body.

This is my first opportunity to watch at close range a Democratic operation on a tariff bill, and I do not wonder at the alarm evinced by the old-timers as they observe the recklessness with which the knife is manipulated as they slash in and about its vitals. They do not seem to have received their early training in a school which teaches that the best way to build up a system in order to save the patient is to gradually cut away the affected parts, but rather in one which teaches that the way to cure what is believed to be a sick body is to cut off its head, and that, Mr. Chairman, is what these Democratic surgeons are going to do.

I do not know whether the Speaker of this House personally favors this decapitation process or not, although I heard him make a speech on the floor of this House that he would, could he have his own way about it, tear down every customhouse in the United States. So I take it that he not only favors the lopping off of the head of the protection giant, but will take a prominent part in the grand lopping-off act. No one who has had the great pleasure of hearing his gentle voice or has been privileged to observe the meekness with which he handles his political adversaries would ever believe it, and I will not believe it until I hear him in one of his incomparable speeches deny it, or until I hear him vote aye on the passage of this measure.

Democrats say that this bill and the reciprocity bill will reduce the revenue of the Treasury $15,000,000 annually; and if so, that the price to the consumer will be reduced by the amount of the reduction in the tax. If that be true, the cost of living would be reduced exactly 15 cents per person per annum, because if you divide $15,000,000 into 90,000,000 you get 6, and one-sixth of 90 is 15, which means 15 cents to every individual in the United States. So, even if they do carry out the plan which they propose, and the tariff is a tax, and the price of the article is reduced by the amount of the tax when the tax is taken off, the total saving to each individual in the United States on the cost of living will be 15 cents per annum. Marvelous! Marvelous!

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman submit to an inquiry?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly; I will be delighted to do so.

Mr. SIMS. As I understand you, the reduction of the revenue paid into the Treasury will be 15 cents per person; but what about the cost of the domestic article which the home people consume?

Mr. MADDEN. If the tariff is a tax and the tax is added to the price of the article, as the Democrats claim it is, and if that tax is taken off the article and therefore taken off the price of the article when the tax is reduced, the reduction in the cost of the article will be exactly the amount of the tax taken off, and you can not reduce the cost of living any more than the difference between the tax when it is on and the tax when it is off.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. With pleasure, in a moment. I think, Mr. Chairman, before I yield that I should say to my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] that if we open our markets to free-trade Europe and let them open their mills to make goods for American consumption, we must close our mills in order to be able to consume the goods shipped here by Europe, and if we do that, even though the price be reduced by reason of the fact that the goods are made abroad under the free-trade rate of wages and shipped into America for consumption by the American people, it would reduce the ability of the Americans to buy; and the result would be that it would not make any difference, even if the price is lowered, if we have nothing with which to pay the lower price.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MADDEN. I do, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Last week, in the city of Philadelphia, was sold the machinery of the Southwark Woolen Mills, which had formerly employed upward of a thousand workingmen and women. The sale was completed on Saturday, and it is reported that many of the purchasers had come over from Canada, and that the machinery, in large part, will now be transported to that country. Does not the gentleman, in carrying out his discussion with regard to wages, observe that this would answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee, and that there will be no reduction in the cost of living here if we decrease the wage-earning power of the people?

Mr. MADDEN. Without doubt, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman, using the Democratic argument that the price is increased to the consumer by precisely the amount of the duty exacted, and then reversing that, estimates that the cost of living to the 92,000,000 people of this country will be reduced by 15 cents per head, saying he arrived at that conclusion by adding together the effect of the reciprocity measure and this so-called free-trade bill. I ask the gentleman if in the course of his compilation he has ascertained just how much the consumer will gain from the effect of reciprocity, separated from this free-trade bill?

Mr. MADDEN. It would be one-third of the 15 cents—5 cents [laughter on the Republican side]—if we assume that the logic of the Democrats be true. [Renewed laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the entire revenue of the country derived from the tariff for the last fiscal year—1910—was approximately $331,000,000?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; or, in other words, $3 per capita.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Three dollars and seventy-five cents per capita, was it not?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; about $3, in round figures.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If one of our friends on the other side would abstain from at least one theater party, would not his portion of the tax be paid, so far as he is concerned?

Mr. MADDEN. It would not be fair to assume that he indulges in such a luxurious privilege as going to the theater. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that it is a fact that I saw the other day on one of the broad highways of Washington, flanked on either side by magnificent buildings, a real, live Democrat riding in an automobile. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Well, we have some plutocrats among the Democrats, who are always railing against the so-called trusts, while at the same time they are indulging in the privileges and luxuries of the dividends derived from the so-called trusts. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the wages derived from the industries of this country could be put upon a free-trade basis, and manufacturers given time in which to adjust their business matters accordingly, and if the laboring men and mechanics and artisans and everybody interested would be agreeable to the change, the pending measure would be popular. But for how many more years will we be compelled to tell you that the American workingman will tolerate no such change by his own consent? What American bricklayer, for instance, would consent to work for $1.68 a day? That is the wage paid in Great Britain to bricklayers. Or what American bricklayer would work for $1.04 a day, which is the amount paid in Germany and France? In Belgium the bricklayer receives only 64 cents a day.

If you were to insult an American bricklayer by handing him on Saturday night $3.84 as his pay for a week's work, someone else would pay off the next week. [Applause on the Republican side.] The American bricklayer receives for one day's work more than that. As a matter of fact, the average wage paid to American bricklayers is $4.40 a day.

I will print here, Mr. Chairman, some interesting tables, showing the difference between the wages received here and in foreign countries, also a comparison of the cost of production of certain articles in the United States, Great Britain, and Belgium, and a comparison of the wages of labor employed in woolen manufacture in the United States, France, and Italy:

	United States.		Great Britain.		Germany.		France.		Belgium.
	Hour.	Day.	Hour.	Day.	Hour.	Day.	Hour.	Day.	Hour.	Day.
Bricklayers	$0.55	$4.40	$0.21	$1.68	$0.13	$1.04	$0.13	$1.04	$0.08	$0.64
Stonecutters	.42	3.36	.20	1.60	.12	.96	.14	1.12	.07	.56
Stonemasons	.46	3.68	.21	1.68	.13	1.04	.14	1.12	.08	.64
Hod carriers	.29	2.32	.13	1.04	.08	.64	.10	.80	No data.
Carpenters	.36	2.88	.20	1.60	.13	1.04	.15	1.20	.07	.56
Painters	.35	2.80	.18	1.44	.12	.96	.13	1.04	.07	.56
Plumbers	.44	3.52	.20	1.60	.11	.88	.15	1.20	.08	.64
Machinists	.27	2.16	.17	1.36	.13	1.04	.13	1.04	No data.
General laborers	.17	1.36	.10	.80	.08	.64	.10	.80	.05	.40

A comparison of the cost of production of certain articles in the United States, Great Britain and Belgium.

Articles.	United States.		Great Britain.		Belgium.
	Labor cost.	All other expense.	Labor cost.	All other expense.	Labor cost.	All other expense.
1 yard cashmere cloth of cotton and low botany wool of equal weight and quality. (Weaving wage given as labor cost)	$0.064	$0.126	$0.013	$0.143	.....	.....
1 yard cashmere cloth of cotton and botany worsted of equal weight and quality. (Weaving wage given as labor cost)	.064	.135	.015	.163	.....	.....
1 yard all-wool sateen of botany wool of equal weight and quality. (Weaving wage given as labor cost)	.058	.65	.014	.30	.....	.....
1,000 common red building brick	2.33	1.91	.....	.....	$0.66	$0.69
1 dozen ivory-handled table knives, practically same size, American make best English steel, English make ordinary steel	.94	7.18	.85	3.65	.....	.....
1 dozen knife blades used for above knives	.63	.55	.445	.40	.....	.....
1 gross green glass spirit bottles, equal capacity and weight	1.88	2.25	1.15	1.91	.....	.....
1 ton (2,240 pounds) Hematite pig iron	1.23	9.43	.79	11.25	.....	.....
1 dozen plain ironstone-china plates equal size, American make half ounce heavier	.22	.24	.15	.21	.....	.....
1 dozen plain cups and saucers same size, style, and weight	.23	.25	.12	.36	.....	.....

A comparison of the wages of labor employed in woolen manufacture in the United States, England, France, and Italy.

	Italy.	France.	England.	United States.
Sorters	$4.60	$6.40	$7.30	$12.50
Washers or dyers	3.00	4.25	5.00	7.00
Carders	2.30	4.00	3.90	6.00
Gill boxes	2.30	3.70	3.00	6.00
Comb minders	2.30	3.70	3.00	6.00
Boss spinner	7.00	9.25	12.60	18.00
Mule spinner	5.80	6.20	7.30	9.50
Ring spinner	2.30	4.00	3.00	6.00
Weavers	3.00	4.60	4.00	9.00
Fullers and pressers	3.50	4.25	6.00	7.00

The above tables tell the truth, Mr. Chairman; and being true, it is beyond my understanding how any intelligent legislator can have the hardihood to tell the American laboring man that it is to his interest to support a party which is in favor of reducing the wage scale to the level of that adopted by free-trade Europe. They do not tell him that in so many words, but it is exactly the condition they will bring him to if they succeed in enacting into law the bill now under consideration.

This bill provides that certain articles are to come into the United States free of duty.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman a moment ago referred to "free-trade Europe." Just so that the record may be kept straight and his speech properly illuminated, is it not a fact that "free-trade Europe" means free trade with America and protection in Europe, in every country thereof?

Mr. MADDEN. Without any doubt.

Mr. SIMS. Except England.

Mr. MADDEN. While we under this bill admit free everything made in Europe or grown in Europe, we are obliged to pay the tariff tax imposed by the European countries on everything that we sell to them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And then is not that substantially the situation with regard to Canada—that most of their duties are retained, whereas many of ours are being taken off?

Mr. MADDEN. That is true; and if I had had my way when the reciprocity bill was under consideration I would like to have amended it in very many particulars. Take, for example, the raw materials entering into the manufacture of agricultural implements, farm wagons, hoop and band iron, cotton ties, wire for baling, fence wire, and sewing machines. Listen to the absurdity of this. This bill now under consideration provides that all the things I have enumerated are to be admitted into this country free, whereas the materials which enter into their construction bear a tariff tax; and here is a list of the taxes that are to be paid on the materials which enter into the construction of these articles, if the materials are to be imported by a man who manufactures the same kind of articles in this country:

Dutiable raw materials entering into the manufacture of agricultural implements, farm wagons, hoop or band iron, cotton ties, wire for baling, fence wire, and sewing machines.

Par.	Articles.	Rate of duty.
117	Iron ore	15 cents per ton.
118	Iron in pigs	$2.50 per ton.
	Wrought and cast scrap iron, and scrap steel	$1 per ton.
119	Bar iron	$\frac{1}{8}$ cent per pound.
123	Ball bearings and roller bearings	45 per cent ad valorem.
127	Sheets of iron or steel, black:
	Valued at 3 cents per pound or less	$\frac{1}{10}$ cent to $\frac{1}{8}$ cent per pound.
	Valued at more than 3 cents per pound	30 per cent ad valorem.
129	Sheets of iron or steel, polished, planished, or glanced.	1½ cents per pound.
131	Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, and slabs; billets and bars; hammered molds; mill shafting; alloys used as substitutes for steel in the manufacture of tools; steel castings:
	If valued at 40 cents per pound or less	$\frac{1}{10}$ cent to 7 cents per pound.
	If valued above 40 cents per pound	20 per cent ad valorem.
142	Axles or parts thereof	¾ cent per pound.
144	Bolts	1½ cents per pound.
148	Castings of malleable iron	$\frac{1}{10}$ cent per pound.
206	Hubs for wheels, and wagon blocks	20 per cent ad valorem.

Does anyone imagine for a moment that a man engaged in manufacturing these parts of agricultural implements in American factories can continue in the business in which he is engaged if by legislation we allow the finished article to come into this country free? Does anybody suppose that the men employed in making the parts which enter into the construction of these agricultural implements in this country can compete with the men who make agricultural implements abroad under such conditions? It is absurd. This bill is a fraud and a humbug. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman suppose we are going to stop at this little free-list bill and not make reductions all along the line when we have time?

Mr. MADDEN. I was not educated in the school which gives me the ability to see into the minds of Democrats, and I am only talking about the thing which they present to me for consideration. If the gentleman from Tennessee can tell me what his party is going to do on any given subject for any given hour of any given day, I will say to him that he has more information than any other member of his party.

Mr. SIMS. We are going to pass this bill, and then we are going to make other reductions.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is fair to assume that they are going on in the exuberance of destruction which they have started.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, for example, let us consider the raw materials entering into the manufacture of cotton bagging, burlaps, and bags, which, I assume, the gentleman from Tennessee is interested in having put on the free list. For example, the dutiable raw materials entering into the manufacture of burlaps and bags are as follows:

Dutiable raw materials entering into the manufacture of cotton bagging, burlaps, and bags.

Par.	Articles.	Rate of duty.
333	Flax straw	$5 per ton.
334	Flax, not hackled or dressed	1 cent per pound.
335	Flax, hackled, known as "dressed line"	3 cents per pound.
336	Flax, tow of	$20 per ton.
337	Hemp	$22.50 per ton.
	Hemp, hackled, known as line of hemp	$45 per ton.
338	Single yarns made of jute	1 cent per pound and 10 per cent to 35 per cent ad valorem.
340	Threads and twine made from yarn of flax, hemp, or ramie:
	Not finer than 5 lea	10 cents per pound.
	Finer than 5 lea	12 cents per pound and ½ cent per pound for each additional lea.
341	Single yarns in the gray, made of flax, hemp, or ramie:
	Not finer than 8 lea	6 cents per pound.
	Finer than 8 lea	15 per cent to 40 per cent ad valorem.

Will anybody tell me how the American manufacturer of these commodities can compete with the people of India, who make these same commodities and pay labor at the rate of 50 cents or less per week, when the materials which enter into the construction of the things you are putting on the free list are taxed so that the American manufacturer is put in the position of being unable to continue in the business in which he is engaged?

Now, here are some raw materials entering into the production of meats, flour, and cereal food:

Par.	Articles.	Rate of duty.
225	Cattle:
	If valued at not more than $14 per head	$2 to $3.75 per head.
	If valued at more than $14 per head	27½ per cent ad valorem.
226	Swine	$1.50 per head.
228	Sheep	75 cents to $1.50 per head.
229	All other live animals	20 per cent ad valorem.
334	Buckwheat, per bushel of 48 pounds	15 cents.
335	Corn or maize, per bushel of 56 pounds	15 cents.
238	Oats	15 cents per bushel.
240	Rice	1½ cents to 2 cents per pound.
241	Rye	10 cents per bushel.
242	Wheat	25 cents per bushel.

We are proposing to admit free all the meat products and food products, whereas the things that enter into them are subject to pay a high tariff in order to enter this country. Oh Democratic consistency! [Laughter on the Republican side.] You are going to reduce the cost of living. Yes; you are going to reduce the opportunity for men to earn a living. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] You are going to put the men of the country on a starvation basis. You are going to close the factories and the workshops; you are going to reduce the price of property. You are going to reduce the possibility of the sale of property. Under Democratic rule there never was sale for property in this land except sales by the sheriff. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] No sound of the hammer to be heard anywhere except the sound of the auctioneer's hammer selling farms under mortgage. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] But the Democratic policy reduces the cost of living! Better give us an opportunity to make a living. We all need it. The more opportunity you can give the people of this land to make a living, the more contented and happy homes you will have in the land. [Applause on the Republican side.] I would like to have some Democrat tell me or tell the country how we can afford to admit free of duty the commodities; that is, the finished products enumerated in this bill, while the material which enters into their construction is dutiable. If the American manufacturer is required to use any of these materials in the construction of his product, and the European manufacturer is permitted to send his product in free, how can the American manufacturer continue in business? If the American manufacturer requires any of these materials in the manufacture of his products he is compelled to pay a duty on them. He can not possibly compete with the foreign manufacturer who under this bill is permitted to ship into the United States free the finished product made of these materials.

It may be well to consider this fact for a moment. It is a fact, and you can not get away from it, the logic of events will prove the truth of what I say, and I am appealing now to the men who work with their hands and their brains in this country. I am not talking to the men who are sitting in these seats; I am appealing to the men who toil, the men who are engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements, for example. The International Harvester Co., whose great plants are in Chicago, the city from which I come, have plants in Russia, in Germany, in France, in Canada. If they are allowed to bring their products free into the United States, what would prevent them from forcing a strike in their American shops, locking their men out, closing the shops, and making their agricultural implements abroad, with free-trade labor at one-quarter the price paid in the American shop? What guaranty would the American workman have that these American shops would ever be opened again? What right have we to believe that this harvester company will not do this? They are mercenary; they are anxious to make more dividends than they make now. If they can increase their dividends by employing European labor and shipping the product of that labor into the American markets for American consumption, I fear, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, that every man employed in this great industry in this country will, if this bill becomes a law, sooner or later be thrown out of employment and be cast out on the street in search of a job, with no opportunity to follow the vocation to which he has given his life.

This is a serious proposition, Mr. Chairman. We ought not to overlook the seriousness of it. It is a propositon we can not afford to overlook. It is a thing that will be done, and I warn you Democrats—I would like to save you from your own folly, for I like you personally, but you do not seem to exercise good judgment in the matter of legislation.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly; the gentleman is always gracious.

Mr. SULZER. Had the gentleman from Illinois better not tell us the heavens will fall if we touch the sacred doctrine of protection?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, the gentleman's question is hardly apropos. You know the God of the universe made the heavens, and in the order of His wisdom He has seen fit to keep them from falling upon us in the past, and I hope in the future He will have as much mercy upon us as He has for all time gone. [Applause.] I would not like to see anything fall on the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. In that connection I might say that if the gentleman pursues his line of argument I am afraid something will fall on him in his district at the next election.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman in that connection, Mr. Chairman, that if he does not need his job in this House any more than I need mine it will not worry him if he does not come back. I have always had the courage to express my views on public questions. I have had my own opinions and have had the courage to express them, and I have never waited for anybody to tell me what they were. If as a public functionary I am to be so restricted in the expression of my views as to be obliged to wait until I find out whether they please the people of my district or not, I would infinitely rather go back to private life and become a private citizen, with the right to express my views untrammeled and unquestioned by anybody on earth, with the right to try to formulate public sentiment along the lines of my ideas, than to hold any public office in the gift of the American people. [Applause.] I am not here looking for a job. I am here to express my views, and to represent my people as I think they should be represented, and I am not pandering to any maudlin sentiment or trying to trim my sails to every wind that blows that I may have a popular feeling among the people in my district for my attitude as a public functionary. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have a number of documents here that I would like to have the Clerk read in my time. First, a lot of protected articles that enter into construction of boots and shoes, and some other papers. I will ask the Clerk to read them in my time as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota (interrupting). Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman's argument sounds good to Republican ears, but I would like to ask him whether that would not have been a good argument against opening up free trade with Canada in farm products?

Mr. MADDEN. If I thought, as I said in opening my remarks, that the Canadian farmer could in any wise compete with the American farmer, I would have voted against the reciprocity bill. I have the idea in my mind, from information which I was able to gather from something of an investigation, that the productiveness of the Canadian farm is so much less than the productiveness of the American farm that I fear no danger from the competition which may arise between them.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Without going into that question of fact, I would like the judgment of the gentleman as to whether the American manufacturers are any less able to compete with Canadian manufacturers than the American farmers with Canadian farmers.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that if I had my way I would favor an even interchange between the two countries on every commodity, both agricultural and manufactures.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Of course, that is indirectly an answer to the question, but is not it true, speaking generally, that the American manufacturer is quite as well able, considering our natural resources and all that enters into manufacturing, to compete with the manufacturing enterprises of the world as the American farmer is to compete with the agricultural products of the world?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I would not like to admit that, because while the wages between the American farmer and the Canadian farmer are almost equivalent there may be a shade the best of it in favor of the Canadian farmer. The wages as between the American manufacturer and the European manufacturer is as two to five or as one is to five in some cases, and as two is to four in others; so that the American manufacturer pays from two to five times the wages that the European manufacturer pays.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does the gentleman consider that the American farmer is not an employer as well as the manufacturer?

Mr. MADDEN. They are; but there is not that difference.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. There are about 10,000,000 laborers that have their entire employment in farming, about one-third of the laboring population of this country. Do I understand the gentleman's idea to be, if he will pardon me, from his statement, that while we will conclude that the American employer ought to be protected against the employer of other countries the American farmer can afford to compete with the farm products of other countries?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I am against the free admission of farm products from other countries into the United States, while I am in favor of the free admission of the products of the Canadian farmer. I consider that the free admission of the product of the Canadian farmers into the American market is equivalent to admitting the products of Indiana into the State of Illinois or the products of the State of Illinois into the State of Ohio.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Which is only another way of saying that the Canadian farmer is the only one who is in the position really to compete with the American farmer in this market.

Mr. MADDEN. We are a homogeneous people; we live on the same plane, we think alike, we talk alike, and our ambitions are alike, our hopes are alike, and I hope some day we will all be in one country and under one flag.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I was very much enlightened by the gentleman's statement that our population of 92,000,000 people might possibly be benefited to the extent of 5 cents a head as the effect of reciprocity. Now, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he thinks that it is worth while to assess the agricultural part of our population for the benefit of all the rest of our population in order to get the problematical 5 cents per head for the 92,000,000 people?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I think it is absurd to allow the products provided for in this bill to come into this country free——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is not the gentleman affected somewhat by his city environment in relation to reciprocity?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all. I do not recognize the city as paramount to the country or the country as paramount to the city. I believe we should legislate along broad lines and along lines which are patriotic.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I applauded the gentleman when he gave utterance to that sentiment, but he seemed to have slipped a cog on reciprocity.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no. The gentleman's environment makes him ask these questions along narrow lines.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman's environment makes him answer this question along certain lines. I will not say "narrow lines."

Mr. MADDEN. I ask the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is all right.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent to include the papers which I asked previously to have read by the Clerk printed without being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has general leave to do that.

The papers are as follows:

Alphabetical list of articles entering into the manufacture of boots and shoes and the import duty thereon.

Articles.	Rates of duty.
Blacking	25 per cent ad valorem.
Box toes, of sole leather cut in form	15 per cent ad valorem.
Buttons, shoe:
If made of paper, board, papier-mâché, pulp, or other similar material, valued at not exceeding 3 cents per gross.	1 cent per gross.
If made of metal, horn, or glass	¾ cent per line per gross and 15 per cent ad valorem.
Calfskins	15 per cent ad valorem.
Counters	15 per cent ad valorem.
Cement, rubber	20 per cent ad valorem.
Cordivan, upper leather	15 per cent ad valorem.
Duck	2½ cents per square yard.
Dressing for shoes	25 per cent ad valorem.
Enamel and patent leather:
If weighing not over 10 pounds per dozen skins.	27 cents per pound and 15 per cent ad valorem.
If weighing over 10 and not over 25 pounds per dozen skins.	27 cents per pound and 8 per cent ad valorem.
If weighing over 25 pounds per dozen skins.	20 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem.
Eyelets:
Brass or steel	45 per cent ad valorem.
Enameled	45 per cent ad valorem.
Celluloid covered	65 cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem.
Flannel	3½ cents per square yard.
Goring:
If made of cotton, flax, or other vegetable fiber.	60 per cent ad valorem.
If made of silk	60 per cent ad valorem.
Glue, if valued over 10 cents and not over 35 cents per pound.	25 per cent ad valorem.
Horsehide, upper leather	15 per cent ad valorem.
Hemlock, sole leather	5 per cent ad valorem.
Heels, of sole leather, cut in form	15 per cent ad valorem.
Hooks	45 per cent ad valorem.
Insoles, of sole leather, cut in form	15 per cent ad valorem.
Kip, upper leather	15 per cent ad valorem.
Kid, upper leather	15 per cent ad valorem.
Kangaroo, upper leather	15 per cent ad valorem.
Lifting for heels, of sole leather, cut in form	15 per cent ad valorem.
Laces:
If made of leather	50 cents per gross pairs and 10 per cent ad valorem.
If made of cotton or other vegetable fiber	25 cents per pound and 15 per cent ad valorem.
If made of silk	50 per cent ad valorem.
Nails:
Cut	⅛ cent per pound.
Hob	1½ cents per pound.
Needles:
Hand-sewing needles	Free.
Sewing-machine needles	$1 per M and 25 per cent ad valorem.
Oak, sole leather	5 per cent ad valorem.
Oilcloth	3 cents per square yard and 20 per cent ad valorem.
Outsoles, of sole leather, cut in form	15 per cent ad valorem.
Patent leather. See Enamel leather.
Rands, of sole leather, cut in form	15 per cent ad valorem.
Rivets	45 per cent ad valorem.
Side leather, upper leather	15 per cent ad valorem.
Shanks:
Of steel	45 per cent ad valorem.
Of wood	35 per cent ad valorem.
Of leather board	40 per cent ad valorem.
Shellac, bleached or white, in rolls	½ cent per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem.
Silk, for facings	50 per cent ad valorem.
Stays:
Cloth, if made of flax or cotton	45 per cent ad valorem.
Leather	40 per cent ad valorem.
Skivers, sheepskin leather:
If raw	Free.
If tanned	15 per cent ad valorem.
Sole thread, per sample	22½ cents per pound.
Stain	30 per cent ad valorem.
Top pieces, of sole leather, cut in form	15 per cent ad valorem.
Twill	2½ cents per square yard.
Twine	23½ cents per pound.
Nut tacks not exceeding 16 ounces per M	¼ cent per M.

Alphabetical list of articles entering into the manufacture of boots and shoes and the import duty thereon—Continued.

Articles.	Rates of duty.
Cut tacks exceeding 16 ounces per M	¼ cent per pound.
Wrought tacks	45 per cent ad valorem.
Thread:
Cotton, white and black, in skeins	½ cent per 100 yards.
Silk	$1.50 per pound.
Union, sole leather	5 per cent ad valorem.
Velvet	47½ per cent ad valorem.
Viscol, waterproof liquid	25 per cent ad valorem.
Welting	25 per cent ad valorem.
Wax	20 per cent ad valorem.
Webbing:
If made of cotton, flax, or other vegetable fiber.	60 per cent ad valorem.
If containing wool	50 cents per pound and 60 per cent ad valorem.
Wire:
Brass	45 per cent ad valorem.
Steel	35 per cent ad valorem.

CAROLINA BAGGING CO.,
Henderson, N. C., April 24, 1911.

DEAR SIR: The farmers' free-list bill just introduced in Congress proposes to admit jute into this country free. We believe everyone should interest himself with his Congressman and Senator to prevent this part of the bill becoming a law. We ask you to do so. This product grows in India and nowhere else. Conditions there require payment by jute manufacturers of an average of about 50 cents per week to their laborers. This is very shocking, but it is taken from their Government report for the year 1909.

The duty on cotton bagging, which is made of jute, is about 30 cents per roll. With this small amount of protection manufacturers of bagging and other jute products have had a hard time to live for the last few years. Several factories have failed and gone out of business.

But there are now seven bagging factories in North Carolina, three in South Carolina, three in Virginia, and three in Georgia. Large amounts of capital are invested in these. Admitting jute into this country free of duty would ruin and close these factories and throw all their labor out of employment. Our factory employs 200 operators, who receive from $4 to $40 per week, on which they and their families live. The duty on our annual output of 100,000 rolls is about 30 cents per roll, or $30,000. Take this from our earnings and we could not go on at all, and would close our factory. May God forbid such a result. We and and our help all cry to Congress to forbid it.

Take another view of it. A few years ago there was much talk of using cotton for cotton bagging. At the present prices of cotton, of course, the farmers can not afford that.

But millions of yards of cotton bagging are used yearly for cement, grain, flour, beans, and other such purposes. If the duty on jute is removed the great and immediate inflow of the manufactured product would supply jute for all these and many other uses now supplied by cotton goods. We would thus in return for the pitiful sum of about 4 cents a bale duty now paid by the farmer on cotton bagging, have to be taxed in some other way to supply that loss of revenue to the Government, lose our factories to their owners, our wages to the laborers, and sustain a considerable reduction in the use and price of cotton. Thus the prophesy of Bret Harte will be fulfilled: "We are ruined by Chinese cheap labor." We pray you, dear sir, to aid in averting such a calamity. Aid by writing your Representative to vote against free jute. Aid by asking your neighbor to do so. And pray with us that such a calamity may be averted.

We write not as Democrats or Republicans, but as business men who protest against being prevented from making a living for ourselves and those working with us for the same purpose.

Yours, very truly,

CAROLINA BAGGING CO.,
S. S. PARHAM, Vice President.

CHICAGO, April 17, 1911.

Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MARTIN: I am somewhat concerned about the bill introduced by Congressman UNDERWOOD placing a number of items on the free list. If there is, in your opinion, any chance of the passage of this bill, I request that you advise me of it promptly, so that the shoe manufacturers may have a chance to make the fight of their lives to prevent the removal of the duty on shoes.

While we are not in possession of complete information about the cost of producing shoes in Germany, Austria, England, and other European countries, yet we believe we know enough to warrant the claim that we can not compete with the cheap labor of those countries. Only recently it has been developed by English investigators that American wages are, on the average, two and one-fourth times as high as English. While the United States has led the world in the style and appearance of its footwear, and has been able to export shoes to some countries on this account, nevertheless this exportation has been chiefly in the higher grades, the shoes worn by the better classes, who are willing to pay for style and appearance. In the cheaper grades we have been entirely unable to compete with any of those countries; as a matter of fact, cheap English shoes have been brought into this country since the duty was lowered under the Payne-Aldrich bill.

The European countries, especially Germany, are importing our lasts, patterns, and shoe machinery where it is superior to their own and sending young men over here to learn the American system of shoe manufacturing. It is only fair to assume that with their splendid industrial equipment they will soon invade this market.

We shoe manufacturers probably should not object to free shoes, provided this country went on a free-trade basis, so that wages throughout all the industries could be adjusted to the changed conditions. However, to remove the duty on one article like shoes and leave it on other articles would prevent us from lowering our wages to the foreign level, for if we did it we would lose our help, and therefore there is only the other alternative, that we should lose our business to the foreigners. If we had all of our raw materials free and free shoe machinery, so that we could get the cheapest materials and the cheapest and best machinery to manufacture our product, we might stand a chance, but with duties on the raw materials that we use ranging from 5 to almost 50 per cent and an entirely prohibitive duty on shoe machinery we are handicapped too heavily to hold our business if shoes are admitted free.

Another thing that should be investigated before the duty is removed on shoes is the shoe-machinery trust and the difference between the terms it makes in this country and in foreign countries, where it has some effective competition. In this country it has none, and the shoe manufacturers have no choice but to use its machinery on its own terms.

Yours, very truly,

SELZ, SCHWAB & CO.,
J. HARRY SELZ,
Second Vice President.

SPRATT'S PATENT (AMERICA) (LTD.),
Newark, N. J., April 18, 1911.

Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your attention is earnestly and respectfully requested:

We are manufacturers of dog cakes and other biscuits and foods for domestic animals generally, but our chief business is dog cakes. If our reading of bill H. R. 4413 is correct, it would, if passed, allow these foods to come into the United States free of duty.

We in this State, and similar industries in other States, have laboriously, and at first with great loss, built up a business under the protection of a 20 per cent tariff. It has been barely enough. We alone have invested some hundreds of thousands of dollars in an expensive plant and in the purchase of patent rights from an English company. We have felt reasonably sure of a continuous moderate protection, and, at least, that it would not be suddenly withdrawn.

If this measure becomes law, it will be disastrous to us and to a considerable number of wage earners. No class in the United States deals with us less than the farmer. To put dog biscuits on the free list would scarcely benefit him.

Very respectfully,

SPRATT'S PATENT (LTD.).

CHICAGO, ILL., April 27, 1911.

Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. D.:

Foreign shoe manufacturers have free material, pay no royalty on machinery, and get labor at about half paid in this country. How can we Illinois manufacturers and wholesalers of shoes compete under these conditions if shoes are admitted free? Tariff on shoes is only 10 per cent; on all other wearing apparel averages 60 per cent. Why should shoes bear all the burden in the plan to reduce the cost of living? We earnestly protest against the removal of duty on shoes under existing conditions.

Selz, Schwab & Co.; J. P. Smith Shoe Co.; Florsheim Shoe Co.; Smith-Wallace Shoe Co.; Guthman Carpenter & Telling; Watson Plummer Shoe Co.; J. E. Tilt Shoe Co.; H. F. C. Dovenmuehle & Son; Fargo & Phelps; A. A. Putnam & Son; The Rice & Hutchinson Chicago Shoe Co.; R. P. Smith & Sons Co.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Democrats are trying to play politics. They are not trying to give the American any advantage. They talk about a reduction of the cost of living that will result from the enactment of this bill into law, but nobody will claim that you can reduce the cost of living without reducing the standard of living, unless you reduce the wage scale, and when you do that you reduce the standard of living, because you reduce the power to buy; and when you reduce the power to buy you necessarily compel the man who buys to live on a lower grade.

God forbid that the American laborer will ever be compelled to face the awful conditions which confront the foreign laborer, and which he will be compelled to face if the Democratic Party succeeds in its desire to open the doors of the United States to the markets of free-trade Europe. If that ever happens—and happen it will if the Democrats have their way about it—a condition of distress and poverty will confront us such as I hope I may never live to see.

I have read with much interest in a book recently published by Samuel Gompers something of the conditions that confront the laboring man in England, France, Germany, Belgium, and Holland.

Mr. Gompers says that—

> Twenty-two thousand dock laborers report in Liverpool at the gates alongshore every day seeking a job, and, on the average, only 15,000 find employment.

He refers feelingly to the degree of poverty written on the faces of this great army of unemployed. He refers to the physical weakness of the men in the crowd, and declares them to be the smallest people in stature he had ever seen in an English community. He says that the deepest impression made upon his mind in England came from its poverty—that poverty and misery are everywhere in England, and that the reason for wan faces, tattered clothing, and unshod feet is to be found in the number of the constantly unemployed. The sights made such an impression upon Mr. Gompers that he sees from time to time since—

> Those numbers of demoralized, degraded objects which ought to be men and women have formed in my mind's eye a procession moving along together past me, mournful, hopeless, repellent, a disgrace to our boasted civilization.

Mr. Gompers says that in Holland and Belgium a degree of poverty exists such as hardly can be conceived by a dweller in an American city.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MADDEN. I only have about two minutes left.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that in the harvest time in Canada, when they are badly in need of labor, the British Government sends over to Canada on special vessels and sends through Canada on special trains this very product of the great cities of Liverpool, London, and Manchester which you are describing now?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, is it not true that this phase of humanity which Mr. Gompers so luridly and so truthfully describes is the kind of labor which in the harvest time in Canada comes in contact with Canadian labor and with the American labor that we send across the border—with the schoolboys and the farm boys of the United States who go over there to do work in their fields?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not say. I am not familiar with the situation, and of course I would not undertake to speak without knowledge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me say, then, that I was in Canada when a trainload came into the Alberta and Saskatchewan country, which has been so much discussed in this debate.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman not know that this class of labor which is described in England, Belgium, and other European countries is the same class of labor that comes to this country in million lots annually in competition with American labor? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MADDEN. The difference between conditions in this country and conditions abroad are that when men come to this country they are employed in accordance with the American standard of wages and they live in accordance with the American standards of living. [Applause on the Republican side.] Either we or our forefathers came to this country from abroad, and if it were not for the fact that our forefathers were permitted to come here we would not have the opportunity of sitting here and legislating for the American people to-day.

And I am glad to see the opportunity afforded the people of downtrodden Europe to be admitted to the shores of this free land, where every man has an opportunity to rise and where opportunity is the one thing in which we glory. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I began work carrying water at 50 cents a day in the institution of which I am now the head. Does anybody suppose that a boy beginning to carry water at 50 cents a day in any institution in any country in Europe would ever rise to a place where he would have a right to vote upon legislation for 90,000,000 people? No! I say, give them an opportunity to come. Treat them right when they come. Pay them the best wages that can be paid. Give them the best opportunity to live as human beings should live. The glory of this country is that we afford every man who comes to our shores that opportunity. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Is not this the same class of people that are to-day being employed in the great steel plants of our country for from 12 to 13 hours per day at the miserable pittance of 12½ cents an hour?

Mr. MADDEN. If that is true, the steel people ought to be brought to account for it, and I am ashamed if we have such an institution in this country. But I do not think that is so. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman believe that the American workingman should have to come in contact and into competition with this class of labor?

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I have been a large employer of labor, and my experience is that the first generation of foreign labor that comes here educates its children in the public schools of America, where they are taught to love our institutions, and among the second generation comes the best citizens in the land. Sometimes we may have to submit to the competition, which affords the opportunity to bring men up to the standard which the second generation reaches, and I hope that we will continue to hold out the right hand of fellowship to the downtrodden people of the world and give them the opportunity to become men in a free land and under a free flag. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have extended the right hand of fellowship to the downtrodden of all the world, welcomed them to our shores, clothed them with the dignity of citizenship, enabled them to enjoy the blessings of liberty, opened our public schools to their children, taught them to love our institutions, and encouraged them to assimilate with our people. The result is that we have developed a Nation of patriotic and liberty-loving people, through whose veins course the blood of all the nations, but whose every impulse is strictly American. We have thus proved to the world that under the beneficent influence of Republican policies we have been able to make men as well as merchandise. These deeds of the Republican Party in the interest of humanity, written on the pages of the Nation's history, will be handed down to a grateful posterity and applauded by the generations yet to come as the acme of devotion to the welfare of our common country.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to Senate Document 521, a report of the Bureau of Labor, of the investigation of the Bethlehem Steel Works, where he will find that thousands of these foreign workingmen are employed from 12 to 13 hours a day at 12½ cents an hour in competition with the American workingmen. I will refer the gentleman also to the Pittsburg Survey, where he will find the same condition exists in the great iron and steel industries in the neighborhood of Pittsburg, Pa. And I would like to say to the gentleman that in Pennsylvania 62 per cent of those engaged in bituminous coal mining are of foreign-speaking nationalities, and 51 per cent of those engaged in anthracite coal mining are of foreign-speaking nationalities, and the result is that the producers of bituminous coal in some parts of Pennsylvania are the lowest paid miners of any coal produced anywhere in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for 10 minutes more time.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania going to vote for this so-called farmers' free-list bill?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I am.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to do the very thing against which he argues. He is going to place the American workingman on the basis of European starvation wages by giving an opportunity to the European manufacturers to send their products into this country free and shut out the American workingman from the opportunity of earning American wages here. [Applause on the Republican side.]

When I was talking about this labor proposition, about which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] interrupted me, I was quoting Mr. Gompers, the leader of the American Federation of Labor. I was not making the statement. Mr. Gompers was making the statement, and I believe he was stating the truth.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asked the question whether there had not been a large number of undesirable persons brought in from the European countries to the United States to work in American mills. We concede that there have been a large number of these undesirable immigrants. But I want to ask the gentleman whether there was not a time when both this undesirable and the desirable labor left the United States because it could not procure work, and because conditions here were more appalling than those described in Europe by Mr. Gompers, and whether that time was not under the late Democratic administration?

Mr. MADDEN. There never was a Democratic administration in power for any length of time that the emigration was not about as much going from this country the other way as was the immigration coming this way. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Gompers says that agricultural laborers in the eastern central part of England receive compensation at the rate of $2.88 per week; motor car drivers receive, after paying for their gasoline, something like 2 shillings for 15 hours' work. In London the union scale for men in the binding department in printing offices is 34 shillings for 54 hours; for cutters, 30 shillings; for girl folders, 15 shillings. In Berlin saddlers earn from $6.50 to $7 per week. In Hungary the pay for skilled millers is less than 80 cents a day. The best-paid workmen in Budapest are bricklayers; they receive from $1 to $1.20 per day. This fabulous price, however, is paid only in the summer time. In winter they receive 60 cents a day for unskilled work.

I have wondered if, while looking upon the poverty stricken laboring men and women of free-trade Europe, Mr. Gompers did not frequently thank God that he was an American citizen and represented an organization in this country where under a wise and beneficent Constitution they do not have to tolerate parties which by unwise legislation can bring about such distressing conditions.

The laboring man who remembers the doleful years from 1893 to 1897 will not look with favor upon the pending bill, Mr. Chairman. Conditions in this country became almost as distressing to the laboring men during that gloomy period as those existing to-day in free-trade Europe, so graphically described by Mr. Gompers in his book I have just referred to.

The hum of the wheels in the factories and the rumbling of the machinery in the mills will never become odious to those men, nor will the smell of the smoke of commercial activity make them wish for a repetition of a like period of idleness.

The American laboring man knows he is the best paid, the best housed, the best clad, and the most contented wage earner on the face of the earth. He knows that he receives from two to five times as much for his hire as is received by any like person in this broad universe. He wants to continue to receive such compensation, but he knows—and no Democratic politician can make him understand otherwise—that the adoption of this bill into law will not better his condition, but will, in fact, bring back those days of '93 to '97 which were a curse to American manhood and American womanhood.

Tariff-for-revenue bills—I refer to general tariff-for-revenue bills—have always caused our country to suffer commercial paralysis. What will a free trade measure like the pending bill do to us? There never was a time, however, following the adoption of a Republican protective tariff measure that the country did not, under its stimulating and invigorating effect, take on new and increased activity.

The way to keep America prosperous is not by passing free-trade legislation and by opening our markets to European products. You can not employ European factories to make goods for American consumption without throwing American workmen out of employment. That is exactly what you are trying to do now. What advantage is there in being able to buy foreign-made goods cheap if to do so we are first compelled to shut off the forge and the loom? What would it profit us to have Europe take our market while we are looking for theirs? Do you want to give up the home market and take a chance on the foreign market? If so, pass this bill. I do not want to give up the home market and am therefore opposed to this bill and shall vote against it when the roll is called upon its passage, and I hope that in the other legislative branch of this country a halt will be called upon the enactment of this infamous, nefarious humbug into a law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall confine myself to one item in this bill, the item of cotton bagging. It is hardly necessary for me to suggest that my special interest in this one item is because it is manufactured in my district. We have there a prosperous factory, and I can see absolutely no reason and no excuse for putting cotton bagging on the free list, except the desire that the cotton planter of the South may buy the covering for his bale a little cheaper; and to accomplish that you are willing to take away the manufacture from operatives in the United States and transfer it to the underfed, undereducated, underclothed, underpaid natives of India. That must be the result; that must be the purpose of this clause of the bill. From a protective standpoint it is indefensible, from a tariff-for-revenue standpoint it is indefensible, from an American standpoint it is indefensible. Its only defense is a narrow sectional class advantage.

I believe the policy is as shortsighted as it is unfair. It is shortsighted because if we once drive the manufacture out of the United States, drive it to India entirely, extinguish it here, then, of course, the Indian manufacturer will have absolute control of the market, and it is not very probable that his prices will be made with any special regard to the feelings of the cotton planter of the South; they will have a monopoly and will not fail to use it; so I believe, even from your own interest, it is not wise.

But I suppose you have got to show that the Democratic Party is in power. You have got to show your gratitude for the votes of the South; you have got to cater to that section and do something to show that the South is in the saddle and the Democratic Party is caring for its own, and so you are striking off cotton bagging from the protected list. I think I can show that there is no fair argument why we ought not to give the present rate of duty to this article.

What are the facts? It was about 40 years ago that the manufacture of this article commenced in the United States. I think the first mill that started was the Ludlow Manufacturing Co., in my district.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is it not a fact that cotton bagging is controlled by a trust?

Mr. GILLETT. It is not; I will come to that later.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is it not a fact that it is manufactured practically by one concern?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Where is it made?

Mr. GILLETT. It is made in a half a dozen different places. I will come to that, and after I get through the gentleman can ask me more about it if he wishes.

When we began 40 years ago all cotton bagging was imported and sold for 35 cents per yard. We at once cut the price to 18 cents and have sold it as low as 5 cents. Inasmuch as it only takes about 6 yards of bagging to cover a bale of cotton, duty on that 6 yards would be between 3 and 4 cents. A bale of cotton is worth $60 or $70. So that simply to save—even if the whole duty was added to the price—simply to save 3 or 4 cents for the cotton planter on each bale, you are going to strike down an industry that is scattered over the United States and has been established by a determined policy.

Now, where is it that the imported bagging is made? Where is our main competition? It used to be in Dundee, Scotland, but by the tariff that was put on cotton bagging the American manufacturers were able to compete with Dundee, and we would be willing to compete with England, even with the present low duty, although all our machinery has to be imported from England, because there is none made in the United States, and we have to pay a 45 per cent duty on that machinery. Yet, with that imported machinery and with the tax that we pay on it, and with the duty on cotton bagging less than 10 per cent ad valorem, we are willing to compete with the manufacturers of England.

But unfortunately the Scotland manufacturers, when they could not compete successfully with us, moved their machinery and their foremen and their business to Calcutta, and there, on the banks of the Hoogly River, where the jute grows and is brought right into their mills, they have the same machinery that we have here, paying no duty on it, and instead of the labor that we have here they have Indian labor, for which they pay about 50 cents per week.

Now, let me read from the United States Consular and Trade Report of 1907, showing what the competition is that we have to meet, against what class of labor it is that you are unwilling to protect us by a duty of even 10 per cent.

Let me read you from United States Consular and Trade Report No. 2897, 1907:

> The wages paid to men in the mills range from $2 to $3 per month, women from $1.50 to $2, and boys and girls from $1 to $1.75. These people subsist principally on rice and vegetables made up in the form of curry, which is a peppery and sweetish mixture of rice and vegetables, with now and then chicken, duck, or goat meat.
>
> They all chew betel nut constantly as a stimulant. They eat two meals a day as a rule, one before beginning work and one after the day's work is done. The men and boys wear breechclouts, or dhooties, and the women and girls saris, which consists of 40 yards of thin muslin wrapped in a peculiar way about the loins and shoulders.
>
> The people of a mill, or several mills if the mills are nearly located together, occupy a village, which is made up of huts made of mud, bricks, and palm leaves woven into sheets and tacked onto bamboo poles. All are thatched with a long, tough grass used throughout India for covering huts and bungalows, and which makes a tight, cool, and durable roof. The floor is made of clay tamped down hard, which makes a very good floor. On this floor is spread in places matting made of bamboo grass. On this matting many of the natives throw down a cotton blanket, or possibly a thin mattress, for beds.
>
> Some have a rude bed made of four posts 16 inches high, with crosshead and sidepieces pinned together, and then crisscrossed with bedcords. There may be a few rude benches, but little or no furniture is to be seen in the huts. The natives eat on the floor, squatted around a pot or pan containing the food. The men and boys eat first and the women and girls afterwards, taking what is left. The mode of life is thoroughly primitive. No knives, spoons, or forks are used in eating, the fingers answering all purposes.

Now, those are the persons that are manufacturing the cotton bagging in competition with that made in the United States.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I remember reading in the consular report that same account, and it is said they begin to work at 6 o'clock in the morning, take one-half an hour for noon, and work 14 hours a day, and that there was an attempt then being made to cut the day down to 12 hours; and they were working for $2.50 and $3 a month, 14 hours a day.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. Here, of course, in the United States—in Massachusetts at least—they are limited to 55 hours of work a week. As the gentleman said, they work 14 hours a day and at wages about one-tenth of what we pay.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, does that report show what the unit of value of each one of these men is?

Mr. GILLETT. No; this report does not show that; but I read an English report which did show it, and my recollection is that they thought the unit of work was about one-third. The gentleman will recognize that this is about the simplest, the lowest form of work in manufacture, that there can be. It requires very slight intelligence and requires only manual dexterity. The operators of India, therefore, are better able to compete with us in this than they would be in almost any other manufacture.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman before he gets through, and I would like to have him tell us, why it was that this combination that is commonly called the Bagging Trust was trying to keep out goods that were coming in competition with it and had them classified here at the rate of 45 per cent instead of the ordinary rate on cotton bagging.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know where the gentleman gets his facts. I presume he gets them from the same circular that was sent to me. I dispute those facts. They say that this Bagging Trust has done so and so. Why, there is no trust at all, as I shall show later.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is it not a fact that a decision was made that even though they did have it classified, and they did bring the goods in, and they did claim they wanted to pay a higher rate than was necessary, yet they had a right to pay an even higher rate, if they desired, if the classification was correctly higher?

Mr. GILLETT. No; it is not a fact. This is what I am told. They brought in some bagging which was not made of jute, but of certain grasses, and not being classified as jute they were classified under the general class where they ought to go.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Did not the Bagging Trust have to appeal this——

Mr. GILLETT. There is no Bagging Trust.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Well, the persons bringing that in, did they not have to appeal in order to get themselves assessed higher?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know anything about that, but I do not see what difference it makes.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Then the gentleman did not read the circular.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman thinks this bagging made out of these grasses ought to be brought in at the same rate of duty as the jute bagging instead of 45 per cent, which is the unclassified rate, let his party say it shall come in at the same rate as jute, at 10 per cent. I have no objection to that; but that is not jute bagging. They try to bring it in as jute instead of grass, and so naturally those that were competing with it tried to make it pay the highest price they could.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman deny that that was a fabricated case——

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know.

Mr. BURLESON (continuing). And that those behind it were the American Manufacturing Co. and the Ludlow Manufacturing Co.?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know anything about it. Yes, I do; I deny it was the Ludlow Co.; I know it was not.

Mr. BURLESON. Does not the gentleman know that there was a statement made before the Ways and Means Committee in the tariff hearings of 1909 showing that the sale of the output of bagging made in the United States was divided between the American Manufacturing Co. and the Ludlow Manufacturing Co. upon the basis of 82 per cent to the American Manufacturing Co. and 18 per cent to the Ludlow Co., and that that arrangement had been in existence for years?

Mr. GILLETT. A great deal of testimony may have been presented; I do not know whether it was or not; but I deny it was true, if it was.

Mr. BURLESON. Upon what authority does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. GILLETT. Upon the authority of the Ludlow Co.

Mr. BURLESON. They were before the committee. Why did not they themselves deny it? Why should the gentleman come now and deny something that the Ludlow Co. did not then deny?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know whether they denied it or not, but——

Mr. BURLESON. I invite the gentleman to an inspection of the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means and challenge him to point out to this committee any testimony from the Ludlow Manufacturing Co. wherein a denial was made that this agreement existed.

Mr. GILLETT. I did not even know they were before the committee, but I venture to say you will not find anything where they admitted it was true, because they told me it was not so.

Mr. BURLESON. No; of course they would not admit it, because it is a violation of the law.

Mr. GILLETT. They denied it, undoubtedly.

Mr. BURLESON. They failed to deny it.

Mr. GILLETT. I read the testimony at the time, I remember, but I do not remember anything about it. Now that we are on that subject, I will say this: You talk about trusts and have doubtless received circulars, as I have, from men who are engaged in the business of importing this foreign bagging, and consequently are interested to drive the American manufacturer, their rival, out of the business. I have received circulars, and they claim there is a trust. There is no evidence of it, and I have a statement from the president of my company, a man in whose integrity I have absolute confidence, who tells me that there has not been, either directly or indirectly, any combination of the Ludlow Co. with any other manufacturers in the United States. Why, you talk about a trust when 20 per cent of the cotton bagging that is used in the United States is imported now and has been for many years. The tariff is a little less than 10 per cent ad valorem and has been for years. Is that an exorbitant duty, is that an extravagant duty, to keep out foreign manufacturers and particularly the manufacturers employing such labor as that to which I have alluded? No; it seems to me that fact in and of itself proves that the tariff is not high enough to allow any monopoly in this country. I notice the Committee on Ways and Means states in their report that we give free binding twine to the western farmer, and therefore why should we not give free cotton bagging to the southern farmer. That argument and the imaginary trust are the only excuses offered. You know that is not a fair analogy.

When binding twine was put on the free list there had not been any importations of binding twine for years. It was apparent that the tariff was prohibitory, and it was put on the free list. What was the result? Still there were no importations of binding twine. Apparently there was not any made that could compete with us, even without a duty, and from that day to within a very few years ago there was no competition on binding twine, and it could well afford to have that duty taken off.

Recently there has been a little importation, and from whom? Has it come from countries like India, where labor is employed at 50 cents a week? Why, no. The only place that binding twine has been imported from in any amount was from the only nation that I think we do not need to have any protective tariff against—from Canada. And it was produced there, I presume, simply because the agricultural-implement industry moved over there from the United States, and in that connection they made binding twine and sometimes dumped their surplus into the United States. So I claim that that has no analogy at all. It differs from this in the fact that when that was put on there was no importion of binding twine, whereas now in cotton bagging there is an annual importation of 20 per cent of all that is used, and the only nation that ever has made binding twine in competition is a nation where the standards of labor and living are almost like those in the United States, and not, as in the case of cotton bagging, so low and inferior that no one will pretend that there can be equal competition between us.

So, I say, I am assured by the president of this company that it has never been in any combination, that the price has not been fixed between them, and that they have entirely different agents. It seems to be the policy of my friends on the other side, inasmuch as they are short of other arguments, to accuse this company of being a trust. I remember when I was in the law school I was told if I had not any case, to pitch into the lawyer on the other side. And just as in different eras of the world, it has been the practice, if you wanted to hurt your enemy, to call him a Christian, or a Jew, or a witch, or heretic, so the demagogue to-day denounces every opponent as the friend of trusts and monopolies. I would like to see some evidence that this is a trust. The president of this company, which manufactures, I think, about 20 per cent of the cotton manufactured in the United States, a man interested, of course, but in whose integrity I have implicit confidence, assures me that there is no combination in prices or sales, and the fact that about 20 per cent of all that is used is imported from India is itself proof that there is no monopoly. How much must be imported to satisfy you that there is no monopoly? Apparently you want 100 per cent.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Is the gentleman prepared to state what proportion or per cent of the cotton bagging used in the United States is produced here, and what per cent is imported?

Mr. GILLETT. I say about 20 per cent is imported from India, and consequently 80 per cent of it is produced here. Some of it is produced in Ludlow; there is a large mill in Brooklyn, N. Y., and there are mills in many other States. I suppose that what originally started this talk of a trust was that a good many years ago there was apparently an attempt made to make a consolidation of all the bagging manufactories.

Mr. BURLESON. Does not the gentleman know that certain bagging mills in the South were bought by the American Manufacturing Co., dismantled and closed, and stockholders in these local concerns received as their purchase price stock of the American Manufacturing Co., and has not that condition continued ever since?

Mr. GILLETT. That is what I was going on to say. I understand there was an attempt years ago to make a large combination. A good many mills were bought out and they were formed under the title you mentioned, of the American Manufacturing Co., into one large concern, and that absorbed a number of mills. Some of them were dismantled and some kept on. But they did not absorb all; they did not acquire a monopoly.

Mr. BURLESON. I will admit that they did not absorb the Ludlow concern. But I want to know if—because all we want to know is the truth—the gentleman denies that the Ludlow concern manufactures more than 18 per cent of the American product?

Mr. GILLETT. I deny the manufacture in any specific per cent; indeed, I do.

Mr. BURLESON. You say you have no knowledge of their understanding with the American Manufacturing Co., of Brooklyn? Do you deny that through a series of years the Ludlow Co. manufactured about 18 per cent of the product that is supplied of the American product and never more?

Mr. GILLETT. The mill makes, I think, about 20 per cent. Probably the mill in Peru, Ind., is capable of making some certain per cent, and it is not always exactly the same per cent. There are at least these three different independent concerns that are now manufacturing.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman say that the Peru concern is entirely independent of the American Manufacturing Co.?

Mr. GILLETT. I think so. There is one other that is independent, and I think it is this Peru one. But if the gentleman means to intimate that they prescribe a certain percentage to each concern, I do deny it.

Mr. BURLESON. I call the attention of the gentleman to the emphatic statement made by a former employee of the American Manufacturing Co. before the Committee on Ways and Means, tariff hearings, in 1909. The gentleman can only have his information at second hand.

Mr. GILLETT. I have it at first hand from a gentleman who is in a position to know.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman must know that such testimony is only hearsay. Mr. Ludlow has not come here or before the committee to say so.

Mr. GILLETT. There never was any Mr. Ludlow, so far as I know.

Mr. BURLESON. Whoever the proprietor is, or the general manager, or some one having first-hand knowledge of the fact.

Mr. GILLETT. Whether this former employee that the gentleman refers to is a man of integrity or not I do not know. The gentleman apparently is depending upon the word of a former employee to lay a foundation for the charge of a trust, which is emphatically denied by one man, at least, who does know. And, as I say, it is very easy for the gentleman from Texas to cry "trust" and to try to make out that there is a wicked combination, in order to make unpopular the persons who are manufacturing the bagging which he wants to be able to buy cheaper. He wants it all imported. He wants it to be made in India, does he?

Mr. BURLESON. Does not the gentleman speak from hearsay? Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman answer my question first? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. I want to see the southern producer who raises cotton relieved of the tribute exacted of him and which he has been paying for so many years.

Mr. GILLETT. What tribute?

Mr. BURLESON. The tribute he pays to this Bagging Trust or combination.

Mr. GILLETT. Three-fourths of a cent tariff?

Mr. BURLESON. Now, under the fabricated case and decision of the customs appraisers, it is proposed to make it 45 per cent.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is mistaken. That applies to grass, not to the jute bagging.

Mr. BURLESON. It is sought to be made to apply to the bagging imported for use in the coming cotton crop. I would like to ask the gentleman how many people are employed in the Ludlow mill in making cotton bagging, not in making cordage and other products?

Mr. GILLETT. About 600.

Now, apparently the only claim they can make is that this manufacture is controlled by a trust; and yet, as I say, the most complete answer to that is that the tariff is now so low that 20 per cent is imported, so that there can be no monopoly. Apparently the gentleman wants to see the whole 100 per cent imported. If 20 per cent is not enough to make competition, to prevent a trust from having a monopoly, how much does the gentleman want to see imported? If a tariff of less than 10 per cent against the coolie employees of India is too much, then I agree that you might as well have nothing. If you strike out this, it simply drives the business, the manufacture, from the United States to India; and that, apparently, is the intention of the Democratic Party. They apparently want to drive these employees in Ludlow and in Brooklyn and in Indiana into some other employment.

Mr. AUSTIN. And there are also establishments in North Carolina and Georgia and Tennessee.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; in many other States, as the gentleman says. American mills will have this machinery, which was imported, paying a high duty, made useless and turned into worthless junk in order that the cotton planter may save about 3 cents on each bale of cotton that is worth $60 or $70 a bale.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman said that a bale of cotton is worth from $65 to $70 and the bagging worth only 3 cents?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. My recollection is that the recent value of a bale of cotton has been $80 or $90 a bale, whereas under the Democratic administration some years ago it was worth only $23 or $24 a bale. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma claim that any tariff on cotton fixed under the Payne-Aldrich bill is the cause of the present high price of cotton?

Mr. GILLETT. I should say it would be even a little more ridiculous now to try to save 3 cents on a bale than it was when a bale of cotton was worth only $20.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma again whether he thinks the present high price of cotton is caused by the existing tariff law?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I am making no claim. I am simply stating the facts as to what the conditions were under the Democratic administration as compared with what the conditions were under a Republican administration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURLESON. But answer. Is it caused by the tariff?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There is no doubt but that the high price was made possible by the policy of the Republican Party when it was in power and that the depression referred to was caused by the policy of the Democratic Party when it was in power. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I am sorry I can not let you have a discussion with the gentleman from Oklahoma in my time.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman know that the price of cotton was lower in 1898 than at any prior time?

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. Under the Wilson bill was the tariff on cotton bagging taken off?

Mr. GILLETT. It was.

Mr. ESCH. And, if so, what effect had it upon the industry at that time?

Mr. GILLETT. We had, as I remember, under the McKinley bill practically the whole market to ourselves, and when the duty was taken off in the Wilson bill the importations immediately leaped up from practically nothing to 16,000,000 yards the last year, and then the Dingley bill again put on this small duty.

Mr. ESCH. That was a much smaller duty than the former duty under the McKinley bill?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Right in that connection, Mr. Pierce, who represented the district from St. Louis, came before the Dingley Ways and Means Committee. He was a manufacturer of cotton bagging, and he had been on a tour round the world for two or three years and had examined the conditions in every mill in Egypt, and had also been to Dundee and examined the conditions there; and when he got through he explained the matter to the committee and stated the facts that he had ascertained, and suggested this very low duty. Some of the other manufacturers thought it was not enough to put the business again on its feet. He said he wanted as low a duty as he could get and still do the business or do a portion of it; and that is the reason that that very low duty was made in the Dingley bill. I forget what the former duty was under the McKinley bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The duty on these articles was fixed in accordance with the Republican platform, was it not, in the Payne bill?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know whether it was or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the presumption—that the duties in the Payne bill were fixed in accordance with the Republican platform.

Mr. GILLETT. I think this was a good deal less. This is the most extreme case you could get.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The theory upon which the Payne bill was framed was the declaration in the Republican platform that the duty ought to cover the difference in the cost of production here and abroad and afford a reasonable profit to the manufacturer. Now, was this duty fixed in accordance with the Republican platform, or was the promise of the Republican platform repudiated in this case?

Mr. GILLETT. Neither one. I do not suppose the gentleman imagines that every schedule in the bill is exactly and accurately matched to that platform. I think myself that this is too low to give an adequate protection against the coolie labor of India.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman if he can tell the wages that are paid in the mills in his district which manufacture this cotton bagging.

Mr. GILLETT. As I remember the wages of the 600 men, women, and children who are engaged in this industry average about $11 a week.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ten dollars is the maximum wage paid in Brooklyn, except for machinists; and what I wanted to know was whether, in the opinion of the gentleman, $10 a week is a living wage under a Republican tariff in any industry, when the tariff is fixed in accordance with the Republican platform.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts 10 minutes more.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, as I say, I think that this is too low to accord with that principle. It is one of the lowest duties in the tariff, and that is one of the strong arguments against its repeal. It is only about 10 per cent, or a little less, ad valorem, and yet the gentlemen on that side say that 10 per cent is too high against this oriental labor. Now, if the gentleman had been here before, he would have heard me say that this is an exceedingly simple and easily learned kind of labor. It is about the crudest labor that there is. Women and children are employed in it. I agree that $10 a week is very low.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ten dollars is the wages paid to the men. The women and children get lower wages.

Mr. GILLETT. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The women get $6.15, and the children get various sums.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the wages of the whole number average $10 a week.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; that can not be, because outside of foremen, assistant foremen, and machinists——

Mr. GILLETT. I included them in the average.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Machinists get $21 a week and assistant foremen $14.50.

Mr. GILLETT. They are a part of the employment. They bring up the average.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know; but you might include the compensation of the officials of the corporations.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. When you are getting an average, you include both the high paid and the low paid.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The maximum salary or compensation paid a man is $10 a week. Can the gentleman state how many hours a day the employees in these mills work?

Mr. GILLETT. They work 55 hours a week—that is the limit—whereas over there they work 15 hours a day. If the gentleman's complaint is that these wages are too low, is that a reason for their doing away with the duty? Is that a reason for taking off the duty and sending the manufacture out of the country?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's inference is hardly correct. We will discuss that when we come to the profits that have been made by those engaged in the work.

Mr. GILLETT. We can not tell what the profits are, for they have other branches of manufacture.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will put in the RECORD, if I can get it, the information which the Secretary of the Treasury has in hand under the corporation-tax act.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman can, of course, put in the RECORD what he pleases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Secretary does not wish to give it to me, of course I can not put it in.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Does the gentleman not know that many of the employees in the constituent plants of the so-called Cotton Bag Trust are paid the miserable pittance of 60 cents a day?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know; it may be so. It is the simplest and crudest and lowest form of labor that there is. It is obliged to compete with Indian labor, and doubtless the employers get the cheapest labor they can, and now you gentlemen want to wipe away the tariff of 10 per cent under which they are just able to live. If the gentleman is correct, we employ the cheapest labor there is, and now the gentleman wants to wipe that off and drive it into some other employment.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will pardon me, can the gentleman tell us what is the labor cost compared to the total cost of production?

Mr. GILLETT. I can not tell the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, I claim that this stands as a very clear case of an industry which has the lowest protection under which it can exist—less than 10 per cent ad valorem protection, one of the lowest in the whole list. Its competitor is the cheap labor of India, labor to whose standard no one wants us to descend, but what the gentlemen on the other side of the House are trying to do apparently is to drive out this industry from the United States. They want us to wind up our factories and send the work to India. I hope it is not a fair specimen of the spirit which animates the Democratic Party. You want us to abandon the American manufacture, you want to throw out of work the American laborer, and you want it done in order that you may save the magnificent sum of 3 cents a bale on cotton.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact that under this splendid system of protection of the Republican administration the employers now employ labor wherever they can get it cheapest; and is it not a fact that they are bringing about a million of foreign pauper laborers into this country every year to compete with American labor?

Mr. GILLETT. That is not a very pertinent question to this matter.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think it is. The gentleman said he wanted to protect the American workman against foreign competition.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman from Illinois want to keep out foreign labor; is that his argument?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not making any argument at all.

Mr. GILLETT. That seemed to be the result of the gentleman's question, and I want to find out what he is driving at.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts answer the question I asked?

Mr. GILLETT. I first want to find out what the gentleman from Illinois is driving at.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the foreign workman would come here of his own volition under a condition where he could exercise his freedom with the American workman, I would say let the foreigner come in, but I do object to the working people of this country being misled by the statement that they are protected by the tariff, when, in fact, there is no protection against the foreign workingman at all; they have to compete with the foreign workman.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course they do, and the gentleman's argument would seem to be that they ought not to. But what we are using here in competition with the ridiculously cheap labor of India is the cheapest labor that can be procured in this country.

It seems to me there is no tariff in our whole law which presents a stronger case than cotton bagging. The duty is low—less than 10 per cent. The foreign competition is not labor of the same class, but Orientals whose wages are only a tenth of ours and whose standards of living are as different. The present tariff is not high enough to allow a monopoly, as is proved by the fact that there has been for years an increasing importation, amounting to 20 per cent of the consumption. It is now a revenue duty, and in abolishing it you are losing revenue.

You Democrats have the power, and for the sake of the cotton planters you may strike down this American industry, turn some thousands of American operatives out of work, and hand it over to the Indian coolies; but you are demonstrating your true attitude toward labor, are showing who your real masters are, and are revealing the political principles which have so long kept you from power and which will again turn you out of power.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk to have read an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post on yesterday, a newspaper owned and controlled, as I understand, by the Hon. John R. McLean, one of the Democratic leaders and also the proprietor of the Democratic organ of the State of Ohio—the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman on what authority he says that Mr. McLean is a Democratic leader?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a well-understood proposition in Ohio and in the West. He came very near coming to the United States Senate as a representative of the gentleman's party from Ohio.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How near did he come?

Mr. CONNELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that because he may be a Democratic leader his newspaper is necessarily a Democratic newspaper?

Mr. AUSTIN. In this case the paper is Democratic and its owner a Democrat in good standing.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to have my friends on the other side listen to this editorial first and then, if I have any time, I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, I have read the editorial. I would like to have some information from the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GIVE BUSINESS A CHANCE!

If statesmen of high and low degree are anxious to do something that will meet the approval of an overwhelming majority of the American people and immensely promote the general welfare, let them wind up political agitation and give business a chance.

By business we mean the man with the hoe and the man with the check book; the manager at the desk and the engineer in the cab; the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker; everybody, in short, outside of the halls of legislation.

Every man in the United States who is willing to work ought to have a chance to work. All would have that chance if it were not for unnecessary obstructions and threatened assaults upon business. Most of the people are only too anxious to get busy and keep busy. Why can't they have the chance?

The earth is fruitful, the people are healthy, the machinery of production and distribution is all in place. The United States at this moment should be the busiest, most prosperous, happiest country on the globe. But it is halting and stumbling along, a gigantic weakling, suffering from the infantile paralysis of too much politics.

We do not believe for a moment that a majority of the people are in favor of the continual monkeying with the mechanism of industry. They are not demanding an overhauling of the country by political doctors and legislative tinkers. They are attending to their own business and they wish lawmakers would shut up shop and quit interfering with the business of breadwinning and home making.

Big business is no more vitally affected than little business, except for the fact that more persons are concerned in big business than in little business. The same influence that halts a railroad system paralyzes merchants and builders and farmers along the line, to say nothing of the mechanics and laborers directly employed by the railroad.

Injury or interruption of one business injures and interrupts others. The delay in deciding the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trust cases by the United States Supreme Court does no more harm to those concerns than it does to all other business. The harm does not lie in fear of an adverse decision, but in the delay. If the worst were known business would go ahead, but uncertainty paralyzes the will of business from the Atlantic to the Pacific. No engagements can be made for future development or extensions. Everybody marks time—not because he is a stockholder in Standard Oil, but because his business is a thread in the complicated web of American industry.

The Government can do nothing better for the people than to permit them to attend to their own affairs. The legislative branch can help by refraining from making or threatening to enact new and experimental laws. The judicial branch can help by telling corporations where they stand.

Give the plain, everyday business man a chance!

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I have been immensely interested as well as greatly benefited by the very able discussion which has been carried on upon this question on both sides of this Chamber, and I fear I can add little to what has already been said upon the important questions and items of which I would speak. I plead in defense of rising at all to speak upon the question the great interest the people of my district have in this bill. I represent, in the twelfth district of Missouri, one of the most important districts in this country from the standpoint of the tariff and of protection. The district that I represent is the second wealthiest district in this country. It has engaged thousands of men in various lines of pursuits, especially of manufacturing, and it is only to express to this House and to this country their ideas upon this bill that I rise at all.

It has been said upon this floor that this proposed law is for the benefit of certain sections of the country and will be to the harm and detriment of other sections. While I believe that to be true, I do not charge that the majority have had such in view in their proposal of this law. The only trouble that there is with the people of my district is not because they have not plenty of work to do, but their only complaint is that the cost of living is too high. I voted for the reciprocity bill, believing that that would, in a large measure, reduce the cost of living; and I still believe that it will. I agree on that question with what the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said in his address, when discussing this matter. He said:

I think I demonstrated beyond dispute, for no reply has yet been made by anybody to the proposition, that the higher cost of living which now obtains in this country was due to an enormously increased demand for food products and a proportionately decreased productive power on our part, and that this great change, due largely to immigration and a transition from agriculture to manufacturing, had begun on the Atlantic coast and was steadily moving westward, until now its influence was effective and controlling in the Central West.

I pointed out also that the transference of millions upon millions of the food-producing classes from the nations of Europe into the manufacturing industries of this country had made the tendency to a higher cost of living world-wide; and I expressed my sincere belief that the continuation of high prices for food products was inevitable and that the only possible effect of complete freedom of exchange of all natural products between the United States and Canada would be to temporarily retard the rapid advances and to steady the fluctuations of the prices of the fast-diminishing export surplus of many of the food products of both countries, and that a considerable period of time would be necessary for a permanent readjustment of the present world-wide conditions of the cost of living.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that that is the only solution of the question of the high cost of living, that the production has not been equal to the demand, and it is only by opening up the agricultural markets of Canada, which I do not believe will hurt materially any section of this country, as has been charged upon this floor, that we will get relief.

In voting for reciprocity with Canada I did not vote for free trade with the world. Free trade and reciprocity are not twins, as has been charged upon this floor. Some one has stated here that they were twin sisters—reciprocity and this free-list bill. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that they are any relation at all, not even fifty-first cousins. Protection and reciprocity have been the handiwork of the party that has developed this country's wonderful resources and made it a great country.

It is these policies of the Republican Party which has made and protected American workingmen in the factories and the mills. There is more work to-day for the laboring man in this country than there has ever been before. He is not crying for work to-day. He wants more to eat and for less money. I am with him on that, and hope he gets it through this reciprocity with Canada. One thing is certain, the relief must come through and by the Republican Party, as the Democratic Party is not now and never has been equal to the occasion. Democracy is good at tearing down, but not good at building.

Mr. Chairman, I could not, in the short time allotted to me, discuss the various items of this bill, but would speak especially of two industries, which thrive in my district, as examples of the unfairness of this bill:

First, let me call your attention to the second page of this bill and the articles it puts on the free-trade basis, if it becomes a law, beginning with line 3 and ending with line 10, and being in words as follows:

Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar fabrics, materials, or coverings suitable for covering and baling cotton, composed in whole or in part of jute, butts, hemp, flax, seg, Russian seg, New Zealand tow, Norwegian tow, aloe, mill waste, cotton tares, or any other materials or fibers suitable for covering cotton; and burlaps and bags or sacks composed wholly or in part of jute or burlaps or other material suitable for bagging or sacking agricultural products.

In the city of St. Louis we have hundreds of men and women who are working in the manufacture of various kinds of bagging. Should this bill become a law, this industry in my district would be ruined and the mills closed. This business has been crippled already by the present low tariff on the material from which bagging, and so forth, is manufactured. To show that the conditions in regard to this bagging business exists not only in my city but in other places, I call your attention to a statement that has been issued by the Carolina Bagging Co., at Henderson, N. C., under date of April 24, and which is as follows, in part:

The "farmers' free-list bill" just introduced in Congress proposes to admit jute into this country free. This product grows in India and nowhere else. Conditions there require payment by jute manufacturers of an average of about 50 cents per week to their laborers. This is very shocking, but it is taken from their government report for the year 1910.

The duty on cotton bagging, which is made of jute, is about 30 cents per roll. With this small amount of protection manufacturers of bagging and other jute products have had a hard time to live for the last few years. Several factories have failed and gone out of business.

But there are now seven bagging factories in North Carolina, three in South Carolina, three in Virginia, and three in Georgia. Large amounts of capital are invested in these. Admitting jute into this country free of duty would ruin and close these factories, and throw all their labor out of employment. Our factory employs 200 operators, who receive from $4 to $40 per week, on which they and their families live. The duty on our annual output of 100,000 rolls is about 30 cents per roll, or $30,000. Take this from our earnings and we could not go on at all, and would close our factory. May God forbid such a result. We and our help all cry to Congress to forbid it.

Take another view of it. A few years ago there was much talk of using cotton for cotton bagging. At the present prices of cotton of course the farmers can not afford that.

But millions of yards of cotton bagging are used yearly for cement, grain, flour, beans, and other such purposes. If the duty on jute is removed the great and immediate inflow of the manufactured product would supply jute for all these and many other uses now supplied by cotton goods. We would thus, in return for the pitiful sum of about 4 cents a bale duty now paid by the farmer on cotton bagging, have to be taxed in some other way to supply that loss of revenue to the Government, lose our factories to their owners, our wages to the laborers, and sustain a considerable reduction in the use and price of cotton. Thus the prophecy of Bret Harte will be fulfilled: "We are ruined by Chinese cheap labor." We pray that such a calamity may be averted.

That, Mr. Chairman, is from North Carolina, where industries have grown up, such as these and others in the manufacturing line through the Southern States, by reason of this protective tariff that the Republican Party has enacted.

From the conditions prevailing in this industry in my own city, and the facts and figures that have come to me from them, I am satisfied that the statement from the Carolina Bagging Co. is true, and I will not burden the RECORD with a statement as to the figures and conditions that prevail in this industry in my own city, as it is substantially the same as that of the Carolina Bagging Co., and of all the factories engaged in that business in this country, including the Brooklyn mills that turn out a great deal of the jute bagging for cotton baling that is used in this country. Already about 20 per cent of jute bagging is imported from Calcutta, and if you admit it free they will import all, and the ruinous results of free trade, as applied to this industry, will be seen in the extinguishing of the fires of the mills and the idleness of American laborers engaged in this work.

I have a telegram here, Mr. Chairman, and a letter from H. & L. Chase Bag Co., of St. Louis, making substantially the same complaint and objecting to the passage of this bill as that which I have read into the RECORD from the Carolina Bagging Co., of Henderson, N. C., and I ask leave to insert it in the RECORD. The letter is as follows:

H. & L. CHASE BAG CO.,
St. Louis, Mo., April 24, 1911.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Learning that the Underwood bill was likely to come up for discussion to-day in your honorable body, and being vitally affected in the jute industry, we confirm our telegram sent you this morning reading as follows:

"Before voting on change affecting jute goods, schedule J, please give opportunity for a committee representing this industry to appear before the Ways and Means Committee."

We trust that through your efforts we may at least have chance to be heard.

Yours, respectfully, H. & L. CHASE BAG CO.

There is another item in this bill that is vitally important to the St. Louis district that I represent, and that is the one which refers to the boot and shoe industry. I call your attention to the second page of said bill, beginning with line 17 and ending with line 24 of said page, as follows:

Grain, buff, split, rough, and sole leather; hand, belt, or belting leather; boots and shoes made wholly or in chief value of leather made from cattle hides and cattle skins of whatever weight, of cattle of the bovine species, including calfskins; and harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather; and leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps or other forms suitable for conversion into manufactured articles.

I will not go into the details of this industry, as it has ably and minutely been discussed in this House in the last few days by several Members of this House, and I ask you to carefully read and consider what they said upon this matter before you vote to take the duty off of this class of goods.

Just for a moment, to give you an idea of the importance of this industry as it applies only to my district, I will state that the boot and shoe manufacturers in that district, with American labor, in the year 1910, made 26,300,000 pairs of shoes; that the cost of the manufacture of these shoes was $40,000,000; wages paid were $8,100,000; the average net profits were under 5 per cent; a very small portion of these shoes were shipped to foreign countries, but practically all were sold in this country. The average wages paid to shoe cutters in the city of St. Louis were $16 a week. For the same class of work the shoe cutters in foreign countries receive about $7 a week. Reduce the tariff, if you will, on these goods, and the products necessary in the manufacture thereof, and you will cripple these industries, probably close some of the factories, and surely reduce the price of wages paid to the American workmen.

And not only, Mr. Chairman, does this industry affect this district in the importance I have called to your attention, but you all know there are men engaged in the sale of these shoes, retail and otherwise, throughout the various States of this country. It not only affects the shoe companies which are in my district, but it also affects them in their relation with the States of Missouri and Illinois. Some of these shoe companies have factories in those States.

It has been said to-day here on the floor of this House by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and it has been repeatedly charged and stated here, that there never has been any claim of a trust or a combination in the shoe industry. Then why would you tear them down? Why would you even cripple them? And why would you take away from them this small pittance of protection that they now have? Do you want to reduce the prices they are now paying to the workmen engaged in this industry? Do you think $16 a week for shoe cutters is too much? Would you have them receive the same as the foreign cutters in foreign lands now get, of about $7 a week? That is not the way to reduce the price of living and the cost of living.

It has been only a few years back, Mr. Chairman, when it was cheap to live, if you only had the money to buy. I remember the time, not many years ago, when I was upon my father's farm in Missouri, when we could not get anything for the products that we raised. It was because of the tariff legislation that had been enacted by the Democratic Party, and because of the harmful effects on American industries. Idleness was in the cities, and there was no market for the goods, and you could then truly say that the cost of living was cheap. But they had nothing with which to buy the products.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, to free shoes, etc., that this bill would bring into this country free, there is a long list of materials that every shoe manufacturer must use, but which this committee has not included in this bill. This list includes many kinds of leather and tanning materials used in producing leather, such as cloth for linings, canvas, threads, blackings, cement, nails, tacks, wire, and so forth, all of which are free to the manufacturers of England, however, and of some other countries. This gives the foreign manufacturers an unfair advantage.

The reduction of the tariff on shoes to the present 10 per cent has reached the danger limit, and I sincerely hope that the intelligence and patriotism of this House will allow its best judgment to prevail in their refusal to pass this bill, and that it will forget, if such is possible here, political issues and political campaigns of the future and fix our minds and our attention upon that which is for the best interests of this whole country.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the laws that are enacted should be laws that are best for the majority of the people and not for any particular portion of them or any particular section of them.

There is another matter, Mr. Chairman, that I would call the attention of this House to, and that is a statement prepared by the New England Shoe and Leather Association at a meeting of their board of directors held on the 22d of April of this year. It is as follows:

The proposal to put leather and boots and shoes on the free list seems to make it necessary to consider conditions as now existing in this industry.

At the time of the passage of the Payne-Aldrich bill a very thorough investigation of these conditions, both at home and abroad, was made. It will be remembered that certain manufacturers of shoes stated at that time that if hides and other necessary materials were made free no protection for shoes would be needed.

This statement aroused a very earnest discussion, and inquiries were made in the principal markets of Europe; samples were obtained, examined, and appraised; labor costs were ascertained; and the decision seemed to be thoroughly established that certain grades of American shoes, value of which was given chiefly by their style and finish, could successfully compete with foreign productions. On other grades, where the American ideas in regard to style and fit were not as important, it was found that the shoes abroad were being sold at somewhat less than prices current in this country, and that without a moderately protective tariff manufacturers in this country would be subjected to unfair competition, and the wages of labor would necessarily be somewhat reduced.

It was also found that the German tanners had made great progress in the tanning and finishing of calfskins and upper leather, and that, owing to the lower cost of labor, chemicals, and tanning materials generally, upper leather was being produced in foreign countries at less than the cost in America.

The shoe and leather industry has never claimed the protection of high tariff rates, and in accordance with its traditional policy it freely consented to very important reductions in the rates on all classes of leather and shoes at the time of the enactment of the last tariff bill. The rates established were intentionally made as low as possible without jeopardizing the manufacturing interests and the wages of the employees.

The duties as they now stand are so low as to be on practically a revenue basis.

Since these rates were established, such changes as have occurred in the situation have been against rather than in favor of the domestic manufacturer.

Modern machinery and factory methods have been rapidly introduced, and the foreign manufacturer of shoes now stands more nearly on the American level of efficiency than ever before. Under these circumstances and in view of the added cost of tanning material in this country on account of the tariff and the consequent higher cost of leather, and in view of the fact that the shoe workers in the United States obtain from two to four times the wages paid in European countries, the proposal to make shoes and leather free must be considered as without reasonable cause or excuse.

The shoe and leather industry asks no favors of Congress. They claim to have developed a much higher condition of comparative efficiency than has been established by other and kindred industries, and desire simply a fair chance to continue their development under such conditions as are in every way to the advantage of the American consumer. The products of their tanneries and factories have established the standard for equality the world over, and have been distributed to the consumers at prices at least as low as those current anywhere on earth. The tariff on shoes has never cost the wearer of shoes in the United States one cent, and free trade in shoes will do nothing toward cheapening the footwear of the farmer or lessening by one cent his necessary expenses.

Shoes made either at home or abroad must pay the producer a small margin of profit. The shoes produced in the United States under conditions of the most intense competition do not pay the manufacturer an average profit of more than about 4 per cent. The foreign manufacturer certainly would not work for less. The lower cost of labor, machinery, and materials abroad is only partially offset in this country by production on a larger scale and more efficient and systematic handling of the machinery and materials employed. The cost of the finished product is to-day slightly less on most grades in Europe than in America, and in some styles, where handwork is largely employed, the margin in favor of Europe is very wide.

For the past 10 years Europe has been constantly studying our methods and adopting our machinery. To-day she is fully on an equality with us in the production of machinery, and is organizing her industry to secure for her manufacturers the benefit of the larger production and more systematic and efficient methods which we now enjoy. At the present moment there are in the shoe factories of this country at least five representatives of the largest shoe manufacturing companies in Europe, sent here by their employers for the purpose of study and investigation of American methods.

Under conditions as they exist at the present time there can be no doubt that the advantage of European manufacturers will continue to increase for the present, and the result of the removal of the very slight protection now afforded would be to divide the market between the domestic and foreign manufacturers without result in material saving in cost to the consumer.

I also have here, Mr. Chairman, a telegram and a letter from the shoe manufacturers of St. Louis, begging that this tariff be not disturbed. They say that foreign manufacturers have free material and nonroyalty machinery, and labor about half that paid in this country. The tariff on shoes is only 10 per cent, whereas on other wearing apparel it is much more. Why should shoes bear all the burden in the plan to reduce the cost of living? Why not reduce the tariff upon sugar? They earnestly protest against the removal of duty on shoes under existing conditions. That is signed, Mr. Chairman, by the Brown Shoe Co., the Carruthers-Jones Shoe Co., and 11 other big shoe manufacturers of the city of St. Louis, including the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., which company, I want to state here, has the contract for furnishing shoes to the Army, and it was not the company that was charged here upon the floor the other day, with headquarters in Boston, that has a monopoly upon it. The shoe companies of St. Louis have been having these contracts for years and have been supplying most of the shoes that have been worn by the soldiers, and it is because, Mr. Chairman, the shoe manufacturers of St. Louis produce the best shoes in the land.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a telegram and letter from them upon this subject:

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 26, 1911.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Foreign manufacturers have free material and nonroyalty machinery and labor at about one-half paid in this country. Can we compete under these conditions if shoes are free? The tariff on shoes is only 10 per cent, whereas all other wearing apparel averages about 60 per cent. Why should shoes bear all the burden in the plan to reduce the cost of living? We earnestly protest against the removal of duty on shoes under existing conditions.

Brown Shoe Co., Carruthers-Jones Shoe Co., Geo. F. Dittmann Boot & Shoe Co., Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., John Meier Shoe Co., Roberts, Johnson, Rand Shoe Co., Burrow-Jones Dyer Shoe Co., Desnoyers Shoe Co., Friedman-Shelby Shoe Co., Johansen Bros. Shoe Co., Peters Shoe Co., Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co.

Also the following letter from a shoe manufacturer of St. Louis:

MY DEAR MR. DYER: Your night telegram, asking for data regarding shoe industry of St. Louis, received. We appreciate very much your interest and have sent you night telegram, reading as follows:

"Answering your telegram, the shoe manufacturers of St. Louis made last year about 26,300,000 pairs of shoes. Producing cost, $40,000,000; wages, $8,100,000; average net profits under 5 per cent. Very small portion shipped foreign countries. Shoe cutters have received average $16 weekly; same work some foreign countries, $7 weekly. We believe free shoes would result in a large reduction in wages or closed factories."

The figures given were obtained from the publishers of the Shoe Trade Paper in St. Louis, and we believe they are approximately correct.

The undersigned has visited representative shoe factories in Europe within the last year, when he investigated the question of foreign shoes being shipped to this country, and it is his judgment that free shoes would be a very serious matter to the shoe workers, as well as the shoe manufacturers, of this country.

BROWN SHOE CO.,
J. H. ROBLEE, Vice President.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

St. Louis is in the State of Missouri, and Missouri is the greatest State in the Union, as my Democratic friends of this House have testified to by selecting for its Speaker our distinguished son and our first citizen, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK. [Applause.] While I am not a prophet, and never had any experience in prophecy, I will say this, Mr. Chairman, which is a little away from my subject, that if the Democracy of this country wants the ablest and the best and the greatest Democrat in the country for the White House they will nominate and try their best to elect him to that position. [Applause.]

I have other letters and telegrams here, Mr. Chairman, from the shoe-manufacturing industries of St. Louis and from the district which I have the honor to represent here in this House. One of those letters, which I have read in part, has given to you the names of those men who are engaged in that industry, and they are interested, and all of the people of St. Louis are interested, in this subject.

We are not here, Mr. Chairman, pleading for capital especially, but we are here pleading for the interests of the workingmen. One of the shoe manufacturers of St. Louis stated to me that last year he visited all the representative shoe factories in Europe, where he investigated the question of foreign shoes that are being shipped to this country, and it is his judgment that free shoes would be a very serious matter to the shoe workers as well as to the shoe manufacturers of this country.

A letter addressed to me from another large manufacturer in my district is as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 26, 1911.

Hon. L. C. DYER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You are going to be asked to take off the present 10 per cent duty on shoes, and we trust that you will not do so.

Our American workmen can compete with the English, the French, and the Germans, and, on an equal basis, they can beat them, but the difference in the cost of living over there and the cost of living here is so great that if we had to meet European conditions it would mean disaster to the trade.

The duty, before the last change, we think was 20 per cent, and they cut it down to 10 per cent, which is as little as it ought to be, when you consider the fact that wages in this country average about 100 per cent more than they do over on the other side. This difference in wages can not come out of the manufacturers' profits, because, with one or two exceptions, there is hardly a shoe house in the country to-day that is making more than a living.

Conditions are exceedingly discouraging in the shoe-manufacturing trade and any further burden, such as is proposed by this increased reduction of tariff, would be the "straw to break the camel's back." To the shoe industry of your State this constitutes an exceedingly important item, and we hope you will give it your very earnest and careful consideration.

DESNOYERS SHOE CO.,
By W. L. DESNOYERS, President.

Mr. Chairman, I would also, with your permission and with the permission of the House, call your attention to the following figures on imports and exports to show to you that there is already being imported into this country millions of dollars' worth of goods in the bagging and shoe industries:

Imports and exports for 12 months ending December, 1910.

(Compiled from the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance, December, 1910.)

	Imports.	Exports of domestic merchandise.
Manufactures of—
Bagging, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics suitable for covering cotton	$3,383,171	.....
Burlaps or plain woven fabrics of single jute yarn	21,329,239	.....
Hides and skins, other than fur skins, raw or uncured	86,107,728	.....
Leather and tanned skins and manufactures thereof	16,558,059	$53,511,761

As to the number of establishments and number of wage earners engaged in the boot and shoe industry in my district and of the value of their products, I will read a statement of the preliminary totals of 1909, compared with 1904, showing also the progress that this industry has been making in St. Louis, as prepared from the records of the Bureau of United States Census, to wit:

Preliminary totals for 1909, compared with 1904.

	Census.	Number of establishments.	Average number of wage earners.	Value of products.
Boots and shoes	1909	28	11,081	$27,779,000
	1904	18	9,234	19,101,000
Boot and shoe uppers, cut stock, and findings	1909	5	1,057	6,192,000
	1904	4	97	561,000
Leather, tanned, curried, and finished	1909	9	220	2,035,000
	1904	7	211	1,107,000

I also invite your attention to some figures from the Bureau of the Census as to number of manufacturing establishments, men employed therein, and so forth, in city of St. Louis, to wit:

Census of manufactures, city of St. Louis, Mo. Preliminary totals.
(Comparative summary, 1899, 1904, and 1909.)

	Census.			Per cent of increase.
	1909	1904	1899	1904 to 1909	1899 to 1904	1899 to 1909
Number of establishments	2,667	2,482	2,646	7	[1]6	1
Capital	$268,491,000	$265,937,000	$150,526,000	1	77	78
Cost of materials used	$187,599,000	$137,740,000	$101,838,000	36	35	84
Salaries and wages	$68,105,000	$56,117,000	$39,224,000	21	43	74
Miscellaneous expenses	$40,821,000	$37,183,000	$27,404,000	10	36	49
Value of products	$327,676,000	$267,307,000	$193,733,000	23	38	69
Value added by manufacture (products, less cost of materials)	$140,077,000	$129,567,000	$91,895,000	8	41	52
Employees:
Number of salaried officials and clerks	15,349	11,381	8,867	35	28	73
Average number of wage earners employed during the year	87,097	82,698	64,832	5	28	34

[1] Decrease.

St. Louis, as the above figures show, has become the great manufacturing city it has through the Republican policy of protection. Free trade will retard its progress and ruin many of its industries.

Mr. Chairman, let me say to this Democratic House and its leaders that what I have presented here have been facts and figures in support of the protective duty now upon these articles, as against the free-trade theories and doctrines that you gentlemen have been advocating for many years, but which I hope you will never be able to again write into laws in this country. The country remembers well the last Democratic tariff law. Some one has aptly said that in its workings the law was a

"nightmare of calamity for wage earners and business men." It has been intimated upon this floor during this debate that the Democratic majority is engaged in the ripping up of the protective tariff, and the dealing with the subject in such a way as to promote the chances of the party to carry the country next year. While I do not charge your party with that in this House, I trust you will let me call your attention to the year 1893. Then you were about to take charge of all branches of the Government. You had convinced the people of that day that your principles of free trade and tariff for revenue only were for their best interests. Your lease of power was, however, brief, for the people soon revoked the power which they had given to you. Your theories and the putting of some of them into law caused a halting in business enterprises and the loss of confidence, and at the first opportunity the people turned again to the Republican Party, that party which has protected American wages and American industries, and which has made this country great in agriculture, great in manufacturing, and great in mining. You gentlemen of the majority in this House may by your votes here establish free trade upon the various items mentioned in this bill, so far as you have the power to do so, but remember that you are attacking a policy which the great American people have many times favored, and which has brought them happiness, prosperity, and contentment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I feel sure that after the members of this committee remain in this Hall another hour, if any of them do, they need have no fear that they may not be able to get insurance on their lives hereafter. [Laughter.]

The subject of taxation is an interesting one from many viewpoints. There are two well-defined schools in this country in regard to the use of the taxing power of the Government, one believing that a tax should be laid upon imports for the sole purpose of raising revenue to support the Government, and that it should be laid as lightly as possible upon the prime necessities of life, to the end that the burdens of labor may be lightened, the other believing that taxes should be levied for the purpose of protecting American industries without regard to raising revenue or the articles upon which it should be levied. Certain classes of people may differ as to what constitutes prime necessities of life, but the people at large no longer differ as to what constitutes these things. They have learned by the school of experience that those things are necessaries that enable them to live and pursue their daily toil. Among them may be mentioned food, raiment, and shelter.

While it is impossible in this day of "greed and graft" to equitably adjust these differences, but as far as possible I deem it our duty to attempt it. I recognize that almost all legislation here must of necessity be a compromise, either in the committee framing it or in Congress passing it. This must be so in the very nature of things, where nearly 400 men, representing all walks and stations in life—from the farm, factory, bank, and courthouse—come men not only from continental United States but our Territories and foreign possessions, in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, all having an equal voice in shaping legislation. In 1908 the Republican Party swept the country by an unprecedented majority in both the electoral college and popular vote. It gained its victory by a solemn promise to revise the tariff and to revise it downward.

In March, 1909, it undertook the redemption of its promise, and on August 5 of that year concluded its labor by bringing forth a measure worse than the "tariff of abominations" passed by the forefathers of the Republican Party in 1828; and as the people in righteous indignation rose up then and rebuked the party for imposing burdens upon them greater than they could bear, the people last fall rose in the power of their might and with their ballots smote the giant interests of the country "hip and thigh," with the result that to-day there are hardly enough Members on the Republican side of the Chamber to be pallbearers to the funeral of the "lame-duck" brigade who quit making tariff laws on the 4th of last March.

I recognize that no party can accept power without accepting responsibility, and the Democratic Party now gladly accepts the responsibility, so far as this branch of Congress is concerned. After legislation leaves here the responsibility is yours, not ours. We propose to give the people some relief, and if you block it, either at the other end of this Capitol or at the western end of the Avenue, the responsibility is yours. The Canadian trade agreement, initiated by a Republican President and negotiated by a Republican Secretary of State, passed this House the other day with 289 votes for and 67 votes against it. Most of the votes against it were cast by the old Napoleonic "stand-pat guard," men who see no good in anything that tends to reduce the cost of living or that lightens the burden of labor, men who would apply the rule of exclusion, excluding from our markets any foreign manufactured goods which by any process could be manufactured in this country, regardless of the effect it may have on the millions of consumers of manufactured goods, were it not for the revenue involved, and men who no doubt have aided in enacting tariff laws in the past the rates of duty of which have been so high as to become prohibitory in their effect.

The opponents of that measure directed the bulk of their argument against placing wheat on the free list; hoisting the signal of despair, predicting dire ruin to all our farmers should the agreement be enacted into law, the moment they come in competition with the wheat fields of Canada. If it brings ruination to our farmers, then it is radically wrong. If it does not affect them, then out of your own mouths you will stand condemned. Let us see. There has been a rate of duty of some kind almost for half a century on wheat, the rate varying from 25 to 50 cents per bushel. Has this rate of duty had anything to do with keeping up the price of wheat in this country? If so, why has its price fluctuated up and down? Within the memory of all here the price of wheat has ranged from 75 cents to $1.50 per bushel. Does anyone believe for a moment that a rate of duty on wheat can keep the price of it up in this country while we continue to raise more than 100,000,000 bushels per year than we consume, and which must find a market abroad?

What has kept up the price of wheat? Has it been the rate of duty of 25 cents per bushel upon it, or has it been the demand made upon us for our wheat surplus? If it has been the demand, I care not whether it be a home or a foreign demand, the principle is the same. If the price of wheat is kept up by the demand for it, then the argument against the trade agreement proposing to take the duty off of wheat falls to the ground of is own weight and needs no answer. To the man who answers that the price of wheat has been kept up by a rate of duty, I then ask him the question, Why has this price fluctuated? Why has the price not been stable in this country, one and the same price every day in the year since the duty was placed upon it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There has been no variation in the rate of duty; it has been one and the same rate since its adoption. In the last analysis, the opponents of the Canadian trade agreement are driven to the admission that the price of wheat has been kept up in this country, not by reason of a rate of duty upon it, but by a demand for the commodity. In other words, its price has been kept up by the inevitable law of supply and demand.

Suppose all these years that we have had a duty on wheat we would have had an embargo duty against its exportation; if our farmers had gone on raising a hundred million surplus each year more than we consumed, does anyone believe a tariff on wheat at the rate of $25 per bushel under these conditions could or would have kept up its price in this country? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Every sane man answers this question "No." Then every honest man whose desire is to enlighten the people should admit that a tariff on wheat in this country adds nothing to the selling price as long as we continue to be heavy exporters of it. While we have been raising and exporting wheat for decades in the past where has the surplus of both nations gone during these years? Canada's surplus has not come to this country nor has ours gone to Canada, but the surplus of both countries has gone to the empty granaries of the world. It has gone to the countries paying the most for it. If this agreement becomes a law, will our farmers quit raising wheat? Canada can not find a market for her surplus wheat in this country unless our farmers, contrary to all their past splendid history, yield up the battle and retire from the field in dishonor, something I am sure they will not do. If placed on an equal footing with the Canadian farmer in getting cheaper farming implements, I entertain no doubt but what the American farmer can and will compete with his Canadian brother in raising and selling wheat in any of the world's markets.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I will yield for a question.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman asserts that the surplus fixes the price of wheat.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Oh, the gentleman does not get the force of my statement. I said the demand fixed the price of wheat.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, will the gentleman answer this question: If Canada raises the same quality of wheat that we do—that the Northwestern States raise, No. 1 hard wheat—and the surplus goes into the empty granaries of the world and the demand fixed the price, why is it that for the last 10 or 20 years there has been a difference in the price in the United States and across the border for the same grade of wheat; why has it been higher in this country than in Canada?

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman's question answers itself. If he means by this question that the price of wheat during this period of time has been higher in this country than in Canada, then he need have no fear whatever about Canadian wheat being shipped into this country and driving its price down. On the other hand, if he means that the price during this period of time has been higher in Canada than in the United States, this condition may be due to local conditions; it may be due to transportation. Local demands may enter into the question. I have seen in my own county, on the same line of railroad, in towns not more than 15 miles apart, the price of wheat vary on the same day from 2 to 5 cents per bushel. This is due entirely to local conditions.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But the Canadian methods of exports are better than those from Minneapolis, with cheaper freight rates.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That may be due entirely to local conditions. Does the gentleman believe that the farmers of Minnesota will stop raising wheat if the Canadian trade agreement will become a law?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; but they will have to sell it at the Canadian price.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Oh, yes; your howl about the farmers of the country and the destruction of the price of wheat is nothing but the wail of the old standpatter, who sees the mountain of protection giving way under ceaseless and constant hammering on the part of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I assure the gentleman that does not apply to me, because I am not a standpatter.

Mr. COX of Indiana. You see plainly the handwriting on the wall; you see the strong citadel of protection yielding and giving way. I am glad to see you repent of your sins once in awhile. "While the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return." The latest convert we have on the proposition of a downward revision of the tariff is none other than President Taft himself. [Applause on the Democratic side.] At last he has come over to our way of thinking, and if he and some more of his brethren on that side of the Chamber will come over with a contrite heart we will welcome them to our fold.

Mr. Chairman, what I have said about wheat applies with equal force to cattle and sheep, hogs and horses. For more than a quarter of a century we have had a duty from $2 to $10 per head on cattle, and on hogs and sheep $1.50 per head, and during this same period of time we have observed the price of these fluctuate up and down. The price of hogs prior to the panic of 1907 ranged from 7 to 8 cents per pound; immediately following the panic the price of hogs dropped to 4 cents per pound, and last year (1910) we saw the price soar to 10 cents per pound, with the same rate of tariff on hogs during this same period of time. If the rate of duty upon hogs had anything to do with bringing the price of hogs up to 10 cents per pound, the same rate of duty certainly brought it down to 4 cents per pound. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways. The price of wheat commodities, like the price of wheat, is governed by the immutable law of supply and demand. When the demand is strong and the supply limited, the price goes up; when the demand is limited and the supply is strong, the price goes down, tariff or no tariff, duty or no duty. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that cotton grown in this country without any tariff upon it is a complete answer to those who oppose the Canadian trade agreement for fear it would drive the price of wheat down in this country. The reports of the Secretary of Agriculture say we raised last year 691,767,000 bushels of wheat valued at $625,000,000, and every bushel of this wheat was protected by a rate of duty of 25 cents per bushel; and he reports during this same year we raised in this country $900,000,000 worth of cotton, and not a pound of cotton was protected by any rate of duty or any tariff whatever, and for the preceding five years we raised upon an average of $685,000,000 worth of cotton, a total in value in these six years of $4,325,000,000, representing more than four and one-half times the total capitalization of all the national banks in the country, and nearly one-third of the value of the 250,000 miles of steam railroads in the country, with cotton all these years upon the free list.

The planter of the South in these short years, though unprotected by way of duty upon his cotton, was meeting and competing with millions of Hindus of India engaged in raising cotton on land where the fertility of the soil is unsurpassed in the world and where pauper labor subsists on a very small rate of wages. Nor is this all; he was competing with Chinese coolie labor, millions strong, where our friends on that side of the Chamber are wont to tell us that labor subsists on rats and mice. Nor is this all; he was competing with the fellahs of Egypt tilling the valley of the Nile, famed for its cotton and biblical lore, where pauper labor in all of its ghost-like specter stalks abroad in the land. This commodity, unprotected as it is, has brought into the country in the past six years more than $2,000,000,000 worth of foreign gold, and every pound of it, the moment it found a foreign market, had to and did meet in open competition cotton raised by the truly pauper labor of the world. You may ask me how he was able to do it. The question is easily answered. The price of cotton, like the price of wheat and corn, barley and oats, is governed by the ever-unchanging law of supply and demand. The price of cotton during the same years, though having no rate of duty upon it, like the price of wheat, corn, oats, barley, and other commodities having a rate of duty upon them, has continued to fluctuate in price exactly as the price of these other commodities has fluctuated. Last year the combined value of the farmers' products reached the appalling and startling figures of $8,926,000,000, a sum representing one-fifteenth of the total wealth of the United States; and this vast sum of money was made upon the great staple commodities upon which a rate of duty existed, except cotton.

The farmer has been prosperous no more than he deserves. His prosperity has come to him by dint of his own energy, economy, and thrift, aided by God Almighty's rain and sunshine, together with a heavy demand for his commodities. He has accomplished this in spite of conditions surrounding him, being compelled to pay exorbitant prices for the things he bought from the manufacturers.

Did you ever hear of a multimillionaire farmer in your life? I never heard of but one; he was from Missouri and died last year. [Applause.] For over 40 years the farmer has been the toadstool beneath the harrow of protection, and from his back and the backs of the toiling millions of laboring men and women in this country the high priests of protection have harrowed their millions, until to-day our country from ocean to ocean is filled by multimillionaires, able to pay $50,000 for a Guttenberg Bible, not for the purpose of learning the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," but for the purpose of having an ancient relic in his library. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Another can pay $250,000 for the world-famed Hope diamond, others can buy flying machines to sail in the air, and others yachts to ride upon the sea. I can not believe that this professed friendship for the farmer is sincere by men who opposed the Canadian trade agreement, or who oppose the free-list bill now under consideration. The wail of these men reminds me of the old, old song I used to hear, "Hark, from the tomb the doleful sound, mine ears attend the cry." It is the wail of the old standpatter, who plainly sees the handwriting on the wall against protection, needing no Daniel to interpret it, with countless thousands of people in this country daily crying, "Down with protection and up with the equality of right." [Applause on the Democratic side.] You see the ramparts of protection being stormed by a determined host of men and women, who do not propose to capitulate for terms, but who propose to pursue the fight until equality of taxation is restored in this country.

You see its outposts giving way, its picket lines driven in under the splendid leadership of the Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, which reports this bill, and who, like a patriot, stands undaunted and unmoved by the threats of the great Steel Trust, that was strong and powerful enough to bring a man once President of the United States, and who later braved the lion in its lair amidst the jungles of Africa, to his knees and compelled him to allow it to buy out its only competitor, the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., when everybody knew this to be a violation of law. This man has been threatened by this same monster. It should be the duty not only of Congress but of the people to uphold his hand and support him without regard to party affiliation in a revision of the tariff outlined by him. I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that six months ago I was very much in doubt about the wisdom of revising the tariff, a schedule at a time, but I am thoroughly convinced that this is the only safe and sane way to revise it. It is the only way a revision can be brought about in the interest of the people, and I believe that the real downright consternation on the other side of the aisle is due to the cry of the special interests that must soon capitulate and let the people come into their own. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This leads me to a discussion of House bill 4413, known as the free-list bill. I voted for the Canadian reciprocity, because I believed it was right in principle. I intend to vote for this bill because I believe this is right. I am not going to vote for this bill upon the principle that it is a compensatory measure designed to compensate the farmers for any loss that they may sustain by means of the Canadian trade agreement being enacted into law, because I do not think they have or will sustain any loss. Therefore I am going to vote for it because I believe it is right in principle. The Republican Party put forward its heaviest gun, Mr. MANN, of Illinois, to assail the free-list bill. For two hours he discussed the question, not with a view of meeting the facts in the case, but with the hope that he might laugh the case out of court. Let us see what we propose to do in this bill. We propose to put "plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, threshing machines and cotton gins, farm wagons, and farm carts on the free list."

Is there any controversy about the language in the bill down to this point? The language contained in it so far is so plain "that a fool, though a wayfaring man, need not err as to its meaning." The remaining part of the bill, reading as follows, "And all other agricultural implements of every kind and description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in part, including repair parts," seems to disturb the equilibrium of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as well as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], because they say it is hard to tell what is meant by the language contained in this part of the bill. Mr. MANN, while assaulting this part of the bill frequently turned to gentlemen on this side of the Chamber and to gentlemen on his own side and on several occasions facetiously asked the question, "What are agricultural implements?" "What constitutes agricultural implements?" And for 30 minutes he read into the record from a catalogue published by Peter Henderson & Co. containing different items, and asked the question, as to whether or not these things—saws, pruning knives, axes, and so forth—were agricultural implements. Does the real fear of the gentlemen on that side of the Chamber consist in the fact that they are in doubt as to the true meaning of the bill, or does their fear consist in the fact that possibly under this part of the bill things may be admitted free of duty that gentlemen on that side of the Chamber do not want admitted free of duty? If the language of the bill under consideration or any part of it is doubtful of construction, I will remind the gentlemen that when the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill became a law you established a customs court to try and determine questions relating to imports, and before the special session of Congress adjourned you put through an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of equipping this court, providing it with five judges, a marshal, a clerk, and all paraphernalia necessary to a complete equipment of the court.

If there be any doubt in the language in any part of the bill under consideration, let the customs court decide exactly what is meant by the language contained in the bill. While the gentleman from Illinois may be in doubt as to what are agricultural implements, I desire to say to him that a few years ago a class of men were wise enough to determine what are agricultural implements, and as a result of their combined wisdom they immediately began to form great trusts in the agricultural-implement trade. One of the first of these trusts was the Allis-Chalmers Co., known as the Machinery Trust, an alliance of the Steel Corporation, incorporated in May, 1901. Capitalized for $36,250,000, the market value of this stock is $10,600,000; the watered stock, $25,650,000. It has a monopoly in this line of trade. The farmers of the country are annually assessed not less than 7 per cent in order to pay a dividend upon this watered stock, which represents no value and having no property whatever behind it.

The next trust formed by these wise men was the American Fork & Hoe Co., known as the Farming Tool Trust, organized in 1902, and controls 80 per cent of this line of trade throughout the country, having all the elements of a monopoly in it. It was capitalized for $4,336,000, and the market value of the stock $2,000,000, having in it $2,336,000 of watered stock, on which the farmers of the country are again assessed to pay dividends at the rate of 7 per cent. The next, International Harvester Co., known as the Harvester Trust, under Morgan's influence. This great trust was organized in 1902. The next was the American Seeding Machine Co., known as the Seeding Machine Trust. Capital stock issued, $15,000,000; market value of this stock, $3,500,000; watered stock, $11,500,000.

As compared with this monster all the other trusts relating to farming implements of any kind sink into obscurity. It will be remembered that this huge concern, allied with the steel corporation, was conceived and brought forth by that astute and able financier, Mr. Morgan, of New York. It is capitalized for $120,000,000. The market value of this stock is only $20,000,000, representing $100,000,000 of watered stock. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This concern controls 70 per cent of the output of farming implements in the country, elements of monopoly large. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What is the result of these four trusts engaged in a complete monopoly in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of agricultural implements of all kinds? Our total capitalization is $175,586,000, and in that capitalization there is $135,486,000 of watered stock of no value whatever, leaving the true value of the stock of these four concerns only $40,000,000; yet gentlemen on the Republican side of the Chamber quibble about the language contained in the bill. Their fear does not consist of the bare fact that the language contained in the bill is not explicit, but it consists in the fact that they are afraid that it might be broad enough to admit free of duty some of the things covered by some or all of these trusts. At the time of the formation of the American Harvester Trust it issued a statement as follows:

The company is capitalized on an exceptionally conservative basis of its assets $80,000,000 are in cash working capital. The company will require no financing, and there will be no offer of its stock to the public, all the cash required having been provided by its stockholders. The company has five fully equipped manufacturing plants in the United States—the largest and most complete of their kind in the world—and one plant now in process of construction in Canada. Through its warehouses in various parts of the country it will be able to make the most economical distribution of its manufactured product. It also owns Cumberland, coal, ore, blast furnace and steel property, by means of which it ought to be able to accomplish important economy in the cost of raw material.

Like Alexander of old, this one trust has conquered 45,000,000 people in this country. It has gone to the Dominion of Canada. It has crossed the Atlantic Ocean, and is to-day bearding the Russian bear in his den. And in less than 10 years it will be compelling the peasants of southern Russia and Siberia to pay a tribute to it, exactly as it is levying its tribute upon 90,000,000 of people in this country to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By reason of its combination, it may be able to economically build these machines and to economically distribute them, but has that economy inured to the benefit of the American farmer? Before this trust was organized, in 1902, the farmers of the country bought their binders at prices not to exceed $110, or $115 at most, but since the organization of this trust every farmer to-day is charged a uniform price for his binder of not less than $125.

But this is not all. Reading from the speech of my friend Mr. MANN, a letter written to him by the International Harvester Co., in which they object to taking the duty off of farming implements in the way in which we propose to do it, by a general bill, instead of by reciprocity, this great trust substantially says in its letter, from which I have quoted, "Let the Government of the United States trade with some other Government some other commodity not manufactured by us, and take the duty off of the other commodity, thereby letting the other Governments take our commodity with our rate of duty in force in this country upon agricultural implements." The statement has been repeatedly made here in the last few days by gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber that we have free trade with other nations in farming implements.

I want to read a part of a letter, dated April 25, 1911, from Mr. Curtis, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to me. In speaking about reciprocal trade between this country and other nations in agricultural instruments, he says:

I have the honor to advise you that the principal countries which admit free all or part of the implements there mentioned are the United Kingdom, Argentine Republic, and Russia.

In their letter to Mr. MANN they complain of the high rate of duty Russia has against the American agricultural implements, yet the Secretary of the Treasury informs me that as between the United States and Russia we have free trade in farming implements. What is the purpose of the Harvester Trust in going to Russia and there building its plant? Can it be that they want to employ cheap labor?

Another paragraph of the bill under consideration proposes to put "grain, buff, split, rough and sole leather, band, belt, or belting leather, boots and shoes made wholly or in chief value of leather, made from cattle hides and cattle skins of whatever weights of cattle, of the bovine specie, including calfskins, and harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather; and leather cut into shoe uppers, or vamps, or other forms suitable for conversion into manufactured articles," upon the free list. The gentleman on the other side assaulted this paragraph of the bill upon the ground that it would be unfair to the tanners of the country to put leather upon the free list because a rate of duty was upon tanner's extracts, and that to put these goods upon the free list would strike down the leather industry, together with the boot and shoe industry of the country. Grant that tanning extracts used by the tanners are upon the dutiable list, what have the tanners been compelling us to do since 1902?

Who constitutes the tanners? It is composed and made up of the Leather Trusts. The statement was made on the floor this morning that there is no such thing as a Boot and Shoe Trust in this country. I know nothing about this; but I do know that there is such a thing in this country as a Leather Trust, and that this trust has been in full force and operation for the past 8 or 10 years, and that it has levied a tribute upon everyone who buys and uses leather in any of its forms to pay a dividend upon its watered stock. The American Hide & Leather Co., known as the Upper Leather Trust, incorporated May 3, 1899, controls 55 per cent of the leather products of the country. Capital stock issued, par value, $32,716,000; market value of this stock, $7,500,000; watered stock, $25,216,000. This is not all.

The United States Leather Co., known as the Leather Trust, total capital issued, par value $130,444,600; the market value of this stock, $60,000,000; watered stock, $70,444,600. It controls from 60 to 75 per cent of the leather business of the country. The watered stock in these two trusts alone amounts to $95,660,600, upon which every man who buys a pair of shoes for his wife and children must pay tribute to the end that dividends may be paid upon this watered stock. I answer the gentlemen on that side of the Chamber who cry "an unfair deal" because of the fact that tanning extracts used by tanners are upon the dutiable list, that more than 90,000,000 of people are annually assessed an enormous rate of duty to enable these trusts to pay a dividend upon stock issued by them having no value whatever. This same benevolent Leather Trust came to Congress two years ago, pledged the people far and wide that if Congress would put hides upon the free list that the people would be able to buy the finished leather commodity cheaper. They wrote every Member of Congress asking that hides be put on the free list; they procured the merchants throughout our districts to write letters asking us to vote for free hides, and telling us that if we would do so the people would get cheaper boots, shoes, leather, and so forth. Hides went upon the free list. The Government lost annually something like $2,000,000 which had gone into the Treasury of the United States annually by reason of a duty of 15 per cent on hides. But did the people get cheaper boots, shoes, and leather goods after hides had been placed on the free list? Not so. The Leather Trust had decreed otherwise. Instead of the people getting cheaper finished leather goods, the Leather Trust by means of controlling the hide market immediately increased the price of the finished commodity to the consumer. My judgment is before the price of finished leather goods comes down to the consumer these things must be put upon the free list.

Instead of defending the Leather Trust in this country, as gentlemen on that side have attempted to do, I want to defend the 90,000,000 of people in this country who consume in some way the finished commodity of the hide. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman claim that this bill puts women's and children's shoes upon the free list?

Mr. COX of Indiana. No; I did not say that. But I will say to the gentleman very frankly that if I had the writing of this bill I would put the leather schedule on the free list. But I recognize that we can not accomplish all in one measure. We can not rectify a wrong that has been 40 years in building by one bill. We can only accomplish it piecemeal at a time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We propose to put "barbed fence wire, wire rods, wire strands, or wire rope, wire woven or manufactured for wire fencing, and other kinds of wire suitable for fencing, including wire staples," upon the free list. My friend, Mr. MANN, is very much afraid of the language contained in this part of the bill; afraid the language is broad enough to admit free of duty certain kinds of wire not plainly contained in this paragraph.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. A clothesline, for example.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; a clothesline. But my only fear, Mr. Chairman, is that it will not be broad enough to admit things into this country under the wire schedule that ought to come in free of duty. This part of the bill under consideration strikes a blow at the great Steel Trust. This trust was organized and capitalized for $1,100,000,000, $550,000,000 preferred stock and $550,000,000 common stock, representing water. The market value of this stock in December, 1903, was $760,000,000; watered stock, $340,000,000. The farmers of the country are annually assessed not less than 7 per cent upon this watered stock, for the sole purpose of enabling the Steel Trust to pay a dividend upon stock having no value whatever and represented by no tangible property. The bill under consideration proposes to put "buckwheat flour, corn meal, wheat flour, and semiolins, rye flour, bran, middlings and other offals of grain, oatmeal, and rolled oats, and all prepared cereal foods, and biscuit, bread, wafers, and similar articles not sweetened" upon the free list.

This paragraph of the bill seems to worry my Republican friends, especially the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He called particular attention to the language, "all prepared cereal foods," and repeatedly asked the question as to what was meant by cereal foods, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] seemed to be very much perturbed over the same language as to what was meant by it.

I may not know myself, Mr. Chairman, exactly what is meant by the language "cereal food." But there was a class of men in this country a few years ago who knew exactly what was covered by the language cereal food, and they were quick to discover that the people of the country were getting these necessities of life too cheap, and in order to increase their profits, they began the creation of a food trust, until to-day we have in operation four large food trusts, all engaged in increasing the price of these necessities of life to the people.

One of these, known as the "Hominy Trust," capital stock issued $4,500,000, market value of this stock $2,000,000, watered stock issued $2,500,000. The Western Cereal Co., known as the "Oatmeal Trust," total capital stock issued $4,344,000, market value of stock issued $2,355,000, watered stock issued $2,000,000. The Quaker Oats Co., known as the "Cereal Trust," capital stock issued $12,446,050, market value of stock issued $8,350,000, watered stock issued $4,096,050. National Biscuit Co., known as the "Cracker Trust," capital stock issued $56,524,000, market value $37,500,000, watered stock $19,024,000. The bill further proposes to put "beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, and meats of all kinds, fresh, salted, pickled, dried, smoked, dressed or undressed, prepared or preserved in any manner; bacon, hams, shoulders, lard, lard compound, and lard substitutes; and sausage, and sausage meats" upon the free list. This part of the bill likewise creates consternation in the camp of the gentleman across the aisle for fear that it may have some effect upon the great Meat Trust of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I have no data later than 1904 as to the total capitalization of the Meat Trust in this country. But I submit the following data:

Meat Trust.

NATIONAL PACKING CO.
Authorized capital stock		$15,000,000
ARMOUR & CO.
Capital stock authorized		20,000,000
SWIFT & CO.
Authorized capital stock		35,000,000
NORTH PACKING & PROVISION CO.
Authorized capital stock issued		2,400,000
JOHN P. SQUIRES & CO.
(Capital stock authorized.)
Cumulative preferred	$1,500,000
Common stock	6,000,000
Total stock issued		7,500,000
SCHWARZSCHILD & SULZBERGER CO.
(Capital stock authorized.)
Capital stock issued		5,000,000
ST. LOUIS DRESSED BEEF & PROVISION CO.
Capital stock		1,125,000
LIBBY, M'NEIL & LIBBY.
Capital stock issued		2,000,000
Total capitalization of all the Meat Trust		88,025,000

I have no doubt but what the total capitalization of the Meat Trusts is two or three times larger than the above figures, and all the people of the country are to-day being taxed for the benefit of these trusts to the end that they may be able to pay a dividend upon watered stock. These figures show a startling condition of affairs in this country. The overcapitalization of these great trusts, the watered stock issued by them, upon which the people are annually assessed an enormous amount of money for the sole purpose of paying dividends upon stock having no tangible value whatever is, indeed, a subject to which the people may well turn their attention. I think this is one of the prime causes of the increased cost of living. The data I have given shows that in these trusts alone the market value of the stock is $987,125,000, while the watered stock represents $738,677,650.

The people are assessed 7 per cent upon this watered stock, representing no value whatever, and it means taking from them each year more than $50,000,000 of their money to pay dividends upon no tangible property whatever, and the trusts and capitalization of the same here given by me represents a very small per cent of the total capitalization of all the trusts in the country. It is this, and this alone, that is making the burdens of the people greater than they can bear; and if by putting these things on the free list it will even tend toward restoring competition in the trade in which these trusts are engaged, it will have served its purpose and served it well. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4413) placing agricultural implements and other articles on the free list, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, when he proposes to close the general debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state that I have a number of requests yet for time, and it looks like the debate would run several days longer. I have no desire to cut off general debate, and I am unable to answer the gentleman exactly.

Mr. AUSTIN. There are quite a number of gentlemen absent who would like to be present, of course, when the vote is taken. Does the gentleman think he will finish this week?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope so. I hope to get through by Thursday, but I want every man who wants to make a speech to have the opportunity to do so.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill H. R. 2936 was changed from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers with the bill (H. R. 25823) providing payment of the volunteers in the Cayuse Indian War, Sixty-first Congress, second session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. LOUD, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of George H. Keating, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Daniel Hilliard, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse reporting having been made thereon.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that until this bill H. R. 4413, the tariff bill, is disposed of, the daily hour of meeting of the House shall be at 11 a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that until the tariff bill, H. R. 4413, is disposed of the daily hour of meeting of the House shall be at 11 a. m. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That is with the understanding that, ordinarily, the House will adjourn about 5 o'clock?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; my idea is that instead of running until 6 at night, it is better to convene at 11 in the morning and adjourn about 5.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow, Tuesday, May 2, 1911.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6733) to accept and fund the bequest of Gertrude M. Hubbard, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 15), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 8137) authorizing the taking of depositions in any district or circuit court of the United States in certain cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BATHRICK: A bill (H. R. 8138) to establish Ashtabula, Ohio, a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Cuyahoga, Ohio, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FRANCIS: A bill (H. R. 8139) providing for purchase of a site and erection thereon of a public building at Martins Ferry, in the State of Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 8140) to amend the act of February 6, 1907, of the pension laws so as to include artisans and members of the construction corps of the United States Army; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEPPER: A bill (H. R. 8141) to further increase the efficiency of the Organized Militia of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8142) to further increase the efficiency of the Organized Militia of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8143) granting pensions to members of the military organization of 1862 known as "Squirrel Hunters"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 8144) to regulate and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the United States Navy and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 8145) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate memorial and burial place of Maj. Gen. Arthur Saint Clair; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. PRINCE: A bill (H. R. 8146) to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HOWELL: A bill (H. R. 8147) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Utah; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: A bill (H. R. 8148) to provide for the erection of a public building at Bangor, Me.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 8149) to increase the pensions of those who have lost one eye or have become totally blind in one eye from causes occurring in the military or naval service of the United States; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 8150) authorizing the improvement of the Government road in Lauderdale County, Ala., from the Muscle Shoals Canal to the Huntsville Road, and the extension of the same from the intersection of the Government Road, Florence and Huntsville Roads, to Florence, a distance of 8 miles; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 8151) providing for the adjustment of the grant of lands in aid of the construction of the Corvallis and Yaquina Bay military wagon road and of conflicting claims to lands within the limits of said grant; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8152) to provide for entering the surfaces of certain mineral lands in Alabama; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8153) granting certain lands belonging to the United States and situated in the State of Alabama to the State of Alabama for the use and benefit of the common schools of that State; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8154) to amend section 13 of the naturalization law; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8155) to further regulate the exclusion of undesirable aliens from admission into the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8156) to pay rural mail carriers the sum of 10 cents per mile per day for each mile and fraction of a mile on routes of over 24 miles; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8157) giving rural mail carriers holiday on the 25th day of December of each year; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RANDELL of Texas: A bill (H. R. 8158) to prevent graft by prohibiting the giving or receiving of gifts, employment, or compensation from certain corporations by Senators, Representatives, Delegates, or Resident Commissioners in the Congress of the United States, or Senators, Representatives, Delegates, or Resident Commissioners elect, and the judges and justices of the United States courts, and prescribing penalties therefor; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. AMES: A bill (H. R. 8159) to regulate the business of insurance within the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8160) providing for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a building thereon for the accommodation of the United States post office at Reading, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 142) in favor of closer trade relations with Canada; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 8161) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Whitelaw; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8162) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Koch; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8163) granting an increase of pension to John Myers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8164) granting an increase of pension to Moses Goldstein; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. AMES: A bill (H. R. 8165) granting an increase of pension to John O'Connell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8166) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Holtham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8167) granting a pension to Joseph Taylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8168) granting an increase of pension to Etta A. Richardson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8169) granting an increase of pension to James Thomas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8170) granting an increase of pension to John W. Dempsey; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8171) granting an increase of pension to Thomas McDonough; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8172) granting an increase of pension to William A. Winslow; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8173) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Warner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8174) granting an increase of pension to Alden Washburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8175) granting an increase of pension to Marcus M. Bancroft; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8176) granting an increase of pension to David Curran; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8177) granting an increase of pension to William H. Courser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8178) granting an increase of pension to John O'Connell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8179) granting an increase of pension to Helena M. Quinn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8180) granting an increase of pension to Fannie S. Livers; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8181) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Deverix; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8182) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Zaney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8183) granting an increase of pension to Frank W. Buxton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8184) granting an increase of pension to Michael Dolan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8185) granting an increase of pension to Mary Austin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8186) granting an increase of pension to William E. Golden; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8187) granting an increase of pension to Fannie A. Nowell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8188) granting an increase of pension to Harriet F. McGinnis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8189) granting an increase of pension to Mark Gleason; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8190) granting an increase of pension to John S. Cochrane; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8191) granting an increase of pension to Alma E. Crawford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8192) granting an increase of pension to Edmund Coburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8193) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. McIntire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8194) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Hastings; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8195) granting an increase of pension to George H. Foster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8196) granting an increase of pension to Kirk F. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8197) granting an increase of pension to Lucy W. Carter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8198) granting an increase of pension to William Duffy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8199) granting an increase of pension to Walter White; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8200) granting an increase of pension to Annie G. Hawkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8201) granting an increase of pension to Louis S. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8202) granting an increase of pension to Mark Gleason; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8203) granting an increase of pension to Michael Lonergan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8204) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. McIntire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8205) granting an increase of pension to Michael E. Breck; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8206) granting an increase of pension to James W. Grayson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8207) granting an increase of pension to William Barnes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8208) granting an increase of pension to William D. Lamb; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8209) granting an increase of pension to Winslow Russell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8210) granting an increase of pension to Fannie L. Edgerton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8211) granting an increase of pension to James E. Curtis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8212) granting an increase of pension to Martin Larney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8213) granting an increase of pension to Mary Eaton Livingston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8214) granting an increase of pension to John W. McDonald; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8215) granting an increase of pension to Emma Thurston; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8216) granting an increase of pension to Levi J. Lewis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8217) granting an increase of pension to Walter H. Farwell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8218) granting an increase of pension to Josiah B. Kinsman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8219) granting an increase of pension to William J. Bastian; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8220) granting an increase of pension to Dennis Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8221) granting an increase of pension to Kate T. Dimon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8222) granting an increase of pension to Ezekiel R. Morse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8223) granting an increase of pension to William I. Bastian; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8224) granting a pension to Peter Breen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8225) granting a pension to Inez M. Brigham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8226) granting a pension to John Collins; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8227) granting a pension to George S. Kittredge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8228) granting a pension to John Sullivan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8229) granting a pension to Frank Maguire; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8230) granting a pension to Algernon Weymouth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8231) granting a pension to Dennis H. Finn; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8232) granting a pension to Frank Austin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8233) granting a pension to Michael Lanergan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8234) granting a pension to Thomas H. Bailey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8235) granting a pension to Eleanor Chase; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8236) granting a pension to Marcella E. Ellis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8237) granting a pension to Charles J. Owens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8238) granting a pension to James Burke; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8239) granting a pension to James E. McKenna; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8240) granting a pension to Margaret E. Canty; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8241) granting a pension to Arthur Crawford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8242) granting a pension to Josephine McFarland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8243) granting a pension to Henry Reilly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8244) granting a pension to Winfield S. Hunter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8245) granting a pension to Michael Dolan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8246) granting a pension to William Fairbrother; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8247) correcting the military record of Edward McLaughlin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8248) to correct the military record of Orlando Lawrence; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8249) to correct the military record of Alonzo Vining; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8250) for the relief of Charles M. Peirce; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8251) for the relief of Daniel Walsh; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8252) for the relief of Hercules Vancourt; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8253) for the relief of Henry C. Bliss; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8254) for the relief of Michael H. Farrell; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8255) for the relief of Matthew Hogan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8256) for the relief of Patrick McGarry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8257) for the relief of Charles Bates; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8258) for the relief of Orlando Lawrence; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8259) for the relief of Dennis E. White, administrator of the estate of Buckner and Sarah Henderson, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8260) for the relief of the estate of Mark S. Gorrill; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8261) in the interest of Gilbert P. Cotton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8262) to remove charge of desertion against Lawrence Martin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8263) granting permission to Col. John P. Wisser to accept a photograph of the Emperor of Germany, presented by the German Empire; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 8264) to correct the military record of Samuel Cole; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8265) to correct the military record of James L. Bowers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8266) to correct the military record of James Burroes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8267) to correct the military record of William H. Taylor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8268) to correct the military record of Lyman Knapp; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8269) to correct the military record of John M. Bassler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8270) to correct the military record of Charles Beach; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8271) to correct the military record of John Cole; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8272) to correct the military record of Charles E. Creager; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8273) to correct the military record of George W. Ball; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8274) to correct the military record of Charles Hotelling; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8275) to correct the military record of Lewis Corfman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8276) for the relief of Samuel Cole; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8277) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to Samuel Zellner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8278) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to Benjamin F. Church; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 8279) granting an increase of pension to William T. Anderson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY: A bill (H. R. 8280) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 8281) granting a pension to Catharine Beard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 8282) granting an increase of pension to Henry T. Steffey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8283) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Shafer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8284) granting an increase of pension to Emma H. Cooper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8285) granting an increase of pension to Martha J. Russell; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8286) granting an increase of pension to William Murdock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8287) granting an increase of pension to Amos L. Griffith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8288) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. England; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8289) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Reid; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8290) granting an increase of pension to Frances Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8291) granting an increase of pension to George F. Amos; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8292) granting an increase of pension to Mary B. Minton; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8293) granting a pension to Samuel D. Minor; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8294) granting a pension to Annie Abney; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8295) granting a pension to Jesse G. Lott; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8296) granting a pension to Pauline E. Hauk; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8297) granting a pension to John H. Pepper; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8298) granting a pension to Robert A. Burns; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8299) granting a pension to Posey Dobbs; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8300) granting a pension to Lawson L. Moore; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8301) granting a pension to William F. Hass; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8302) granting a pension to Daniel T. Youngblood; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8303) granting a pension to P. J. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8304) granting a pension to Seborn Fassett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8305) granting a pension to Mary Coleman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8306) granting a pension to Susan M. Burns; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8307) granting a pension to Andrew J. Hullett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8308) granting a pension to Jerry Wildman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8309) granting a pension to John F. Bishop; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Henry Morris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8311) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Driskell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8312) granting a pension to J. L. Marbut, alias John Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8313) granting a pension to Alexander Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8314) granting a pension to Daniel B. Norwood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8315) granting a pension to James M. Ledbetter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8316) granting a pension to Nancy L. Kirby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8317) granting a pension to Mary Walls; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8318) for the relief of D. W. Jarrett; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8319) for the relief of Mary Trayler; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8320) for the relief of Nathan Whitaker; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8321) for the relief of Mrs. S. V. Burks, late postmaster at Vinemont, Ala.; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8322) for the relief of A. L. Hays; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8323) for the relief of Mrs. M. A. Willoughby; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8324) for the relief of James D. Evans; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8325) for the relief of W. D. Clay and others, heirs of James W. Clay, deceased; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8326) for the relief of Jesse J. Kennedy; to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8327) for the relief of the estate of Allen T. Estes, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8328) for the relief of the estate of Elizabeth Blakemore, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8329) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Robert A. Godsey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8330) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of F. M. Bruce; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8331) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Joseph A. Choate; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8332) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James W. Gutherie; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8333) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George W. Denson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

